LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday, October 29, 1963, being the first day of the first session of the Twenty-seventh Parliament of the Province of Ontario for the despatch of business pursuant to a proclamation of the Honourable W. Earl Rowe, Lieutenant-Governor of the province.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1963

The House met at 3.00 o'clock, p.m.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, having entered the House, took his seat upon the Throne.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): I am commanded by His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor to state that he does not see fit to declare the causes of the summoning of the present Legislature of this province until a Speaker of this House shall have been chosen according to law; but today, at a subsequent hour, His Honour will declare the causes of the calling of this Legislature.

His Honour was then pleased to retire.

Clerk of the House: Members of the Legislative Assembly, it is my duty to call upon you to elect one of your number to preside over your deliberations, as Speaker.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Clerk, and hon. members of the 27th Legislature of the province of Ontario, it is our first duty and function here this afternoon to elect a Speaker, to elect a man who will preside over our deliberations and who will preside over the conduct of business in this Assembly and he will fill an ancient historic, honourable and, indeed, a vastly important role in our parliamentary life in Ontario. And before nominating a Speaker, Mr. Clerk, I would like to make a few comments about the previous hon. Speaker who is not back in the Legislature.

He suffered, if I may say so, perhaps he suffered that fate which lies in wait for all of those who choose to serve their fellow citizens in the field of public life. Mr. James William Murdoch, the previous Speaker, was first elected to this Legislature in 1943. He was re-elected in 1945, 1948, 1951, 1955, and in 1959. Prior to being appointed Speaker of this Chamber he served for 16 years as Whip for the Conservative Party and he was a man who not only served his province and his party well, but also served his constituency well.

Those of us who served with him over at least part of these years will remember his great interest in the affairs of water in southwestern Ontario. I think he had a great deal to do with the creation of the Ontario Water Resources Commission and indeed I think he could be termed the father of the pipeline that now exists in Essex county.

But in any event, this afternoon in putting a nomination for the name of a man for Speaker, I would pay tribute to Mr. Murdoch and to his wife for her great kindness to all of us and to our wives in those social functions that fall to the wife of the Speaker, and I think you would all join me in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Murdoch well.

Now, it is my very great pleasure and privilege to nominate this afternoon the hon. member for Ottawa West, Donald Hugo Morrow, as Speaker to preside during the life of this 27th Legislature of the Province of Ontario.

The hon. member is also a man of great experience in this Legislature. He was first elected in 1948; he was re-elected in 1951, 1955 and in 1959 and, of course, last month. During his time he has served as chairman of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission. He has served as chairman of the whole House of this Legislature and on several occasions has been chairman of the committee on private bills and indeed has served on many select committees and standing committees of this Legislature.

His background: he is a graduate of Queen's University, he has done post-graduate work at the University of Toronto, he is a graduate of the Ontario College of Education. He served his country during World War II for five years in the army and in the air force. He has as his profession that of a school teacher.

Mr. Clerk, in proposing the hon. member for Ottawa West, I feel that his long experience in this assembly and on the many committees mentioned, make him eminently fitted to assume the duties and the responsibilities that come with the high office of Speaker. I have complete faith in his ability to render true and impartial decisions in the many matters he will have to decide, which will come before him not only on relatively quiet afternoons in this Legislature but in some of the more stormy sessions that we do have when we require a firm hand. I have also complete confidence in his ability to maintain that due order and decorum which is the right, if not always the event, in this House.

Therefore, Mr. Clerk, it is a great privilege and honour for me to move, seconded by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver), that the hon. member for the electoral district of Ottawa West, take the chair of this House as Speaker.

Clerk of the House: Are there any further nominations?

I therefore declare the nominations closed and declare the hon. Donald Hugo Morrow to be Speaker of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members of the Legislature, before taking the chair I should like to express my thanks to all the hon. members of the House for the honoured position which they have bestowed upon me this afternoon. In particular, I should like to thank the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in proposing my name to the House and to the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) for seconding the motion.

It is with a deep sense of humility that I assume the high duties of this office. I fully realize the ancient and honoured traditions which pertain to the office, as well as its many responsibilities. I ask for your full co-operation and understanding at all times so that I may discharge my duties with dignity and dispatch.

I shall endeavour to be impartial and fair in all my decisions, seeking only to maintain justice and to grant equal rights to all hon. members. It will be my earnest desire to merit the confidence you have placed in me and to this end I promise to serve you loyally, faithfully and to the best of my ability.

Once again, my sincere thanks and appreciation for bestowing this honour upon me.

Clerk of the House: This House will now adjourn during pleasure.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor then re-entered the House, and took his seat upon the Throne.

Mr. Speaker: May it please your honour, the Legislative Assembly have elected me as their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfill the important duties thus assigned to me.

If, in the performance of those duties, I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me and not to the Assembly whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and their country, hereby claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to your person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from you the most favourable consideration.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor, to declare to you that he freely confides in the duty and attachment of the Assembly to Her Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that the proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temperance and prudence, he grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow the constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Assembly shall have ready access to His Honour upon all suitable occasions, and that their proceedings, as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from him, the most favourable construction.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was then pleased to open the session with the following gracious speech.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Lieutenant-Governor): Mr. Speaker and members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario: it gives me great pleasure to welcome you today as you assemble, particularly at the first session of the Twenty-seventh Parliament of this Province. I extend greetings to all of you and particularly those sitting here for the first time on this memorable occasion. It is made more so for me because for the first time since taking up my duties of Lieutenant-Governor I have the privilege of speaking at the opening of a session of the Legislature.

A special session has been called to consider legislation entitled The Municipal Works Assistance Act of 1963, which will permit the province to enter an agreement with the federal government to assist the municipalities to finance certain capital works. Two select committees of the Legislative Assembly which ended with the dissolution of the last parliament will also be reconstituted and the members appointed.

May your work be blessed by Divine Providence.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was then pleased to retire from the chamber.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that to prevent mistakes I have received a copy of His Honour's speech, which I will now read.

(Reading dispensed with).

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) is recognized as leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Notice has been given to me of three questions before the orders of the day. As this is the opening day of the session, there is therefore no orders of the day. However, since there are several questions being asked by different hon. members, I ask the approval of the House to permit these questions to be asked at this point in the proceedings.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received notice of these questions earlier today and as far as I am concerned I am quite prepared to have the questions asked and answered. I realize the position of the Opposition. At that stage there was no Speaker to whom to submit the questions. Of course, there are no orders of the day before which these questions might be asked. On the other hand, this is a special session—and more will be said of this I presume in due course during the afternoon—and special sessions are traditionally called for specific purposes. Nonetheless, I would never subscribe to a position in which this Legislature was gathered together in public session and questions were not permitted. If there are questions of public import which hon. members of the Opposition wish to ask the government, I suggest that this House breach the rules and permit these questions to be asked at this time, Mr. Speaker, and the answers will be given.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, being grateful for the opportunity, I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) the following question: would the hon. Minister inform the House as to the progress being made toward the commencement of the construction of the highway to connect Sudbury with Timmins? In this connection, has the route been chosen? Can the hon. Minister inform the House when construction of the highway will start?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, my answer to the three part question of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) is as follows:

1. All pertinent data is now being evaluated by the director of planning of The Department of Highways and I have directed that a report be made available to me on or close to November 15 next.

2. The report will, it is presumed, indicate the most feasible route.

3. A clearing contract will be awarded this winter following selection of the route.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) and I have sent a copy to him in your absence this morning.

My question is, would the hon. Minister of Labour make a statement regarding the labour-management situation in connection with the Trenton Memorial Hospital?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the situation at the Trenton Memorial Hospital is one which has caused me very great concern and for many reasons.

I think I should inform the House that the hospital has been in operation for many years and has occupied an important place in one of Ontario's substantial communities. The board of trustees represent citizens who live in the community and have contributed their services over the years in a spirit of public interest and public service. As a matter of fact they have recently completed a new addition to the hospital and from my own observation the facilities being provided are a credit to all those concerned.

On August '16, 1962, Local 183 of the Building Service Employees' International Union was certified as the bargaining agent for some 70 employees at the hospital. The efforts at collective bargaining between Local 183 and the board produced no agreement and during the spring of 1963 representatives of the conciliation branch of The Department of Labour were called in.

Finally a conciliation board was established and the majority report recommended arbitration. The minority report by the employer's representative proposed a five-year agreement and made references to union security. Little progress was made to resolve the matter and the procedures provided by The Labour Relations Act having been exhausted, the union was in a position to strike the hospital, and this was and is its legal right. As a matter of fact it is the economic weapon with which organized labour is armed.

I think it only fair to state that both parties to the matter, both the union and the employer, were very determined as to their respective positions and certainly the hospital board felt that there was no hope of any kind in any further discussions, regardless of who sponsored them, including The Department of Labour.

This kind of situation, of course, cannot continue indefinitely because in all labour matters where bargaining and agreements are involved, some solution must be found in the final analysis.

Labour-management relations in themselves constitute an inexact science. It remains for those responsible segments of the community to continue in their efforts from day to day in the hope that some way, somehow, somewhere a viable solution may be developed.

On the other hand, the operation of a hospital occupies a very special place in the affairs of a community and indeed of our province, concerned as it is with the welfare and treatment of the patients. I am frank to say that a strike in a hospital is unthinkable by its very nature, and the vast majority of the people of Ontario feel that way too, having in mind the impact and consequences of such a step.

Insofar as I am concerned, Mr. Albert Hearn, international vice-president of the union, has, at all times, taken his responsibilities seriously and at the same time has shown a frank recognition of the impact which a strike at the hospital would have.

When events developed toward the end of September and it became apparent to our department that a strike would definitely occur, my officials felt that drastic steps were required. Accordingly, with that thought in mind, they arranged with Mr. Hearn to have the strike postponed, although it had been publicly announced.

In the meantime, I asked the department officials to redouble their efforts to bring the parties together and to re-establish a climate or an atmosphere in which bargaining could be resumed. I stated that if the parties did not conclude an agreement or were not bargaining together I would recommend that the government consider the enactment of legislation calling for compulsory arbitration with respect to this particular dispute.

My departmental officials have endeavoured to arrange a meeting of the parties and I, as Minister, have also sought to bring them together, but the board of trustees was intransigent in its position. Indeed, I travelled to Trenton on Wednesday night, October 23 to meet with the board of trustees, and as of noon today, there had been no developments.

Now we come to the question and the principle of compulsory arbitration insofar as it affects labour-management relations. I want to be very frank and tell the House that the ramifications, the implications and the consequences of imposing compulsory arbitration, even in an isolated situation such as this, may be far greater and have more far-reaching effects than any of us intend—particularly when we consider that both organized labour and management operate in what we pride ourselves on as a free society.

It is of the greatest importance that we preserve freedom of negotiation in a free enterprise system which involves and includes the legal recognition of bargaining rights, and care must be taken with respect to legislation which might infringe on this principle.

I would not want to be a party to legislation which might involve the loss of all that has been gained over the years in the development of our labour-management relationships. A solution is required which will preserve the gains we have made in order that confidence may be maintained. That is why I say that such legislation should not be brought down without assurances that the implications and consequences of such a step have been thoroughly canvassed by all those interested in the principles which may be infringed or whose rights may be endangered or ultimately threatened.

What is the principle involved? The principle is concerned with the preservation of freedom in an organized society, indeed in an enlargement of those freedoms rather than a curtailment.

It will be apparent that it is possible that such legislation may have validity in this particular case but would affect the broader principles involved. Similarly, the government must be concerned with any step which would constitute an undue interference in the affairs of either labour or management. Government, of course, is the guardian of all the rights and privileges of the people.

May I point out that I am not out of sympathy with the needs of this particular field and the special problems which exist.

I also recognize that I will be under great pressure from those who are opposed to the principle of free trade unionism.

The government wants to be certain and sure that anything that is done in this matter will not have an adverse effect on other citizens in the work force of this province or indeed on the members of other trade unions who may not be directly involved in this particular dispute.

I have reported on this matter to the government and have asked the Executive Council to consider the enactment of a bill to provide for compulsory arbitration for the Trenton Memorial Hospital dispute.

The government recognizes that such a step might affect thousands of people in this province and endanger their freedom and the rights which they personally enjoy. The fact is that most segments of organized labour oppose the principle of compulsory arbitration and it is also true that practically all employer organizations share this viewpoint. The danger in enacting legislation of this kind is that a precedent is established and while it is the duty and function of The Department of Labour to intervene and supply services through its, Conciliation Branch, this is in the interest of all the citizens of this province and is not directed to any one segment of our society.

The government has, therefore, concluded that in the interest of all the citizens whether they be employers or members of trade unions, before such legislation is enacted, further consideration should be given to the principles involved and the rights and freedoms that might be affected, in the over-all picture, in this province. Accordingly the government intends to appoint a committee under The Public Inquiries Act to consider and report on the feasibility and desirability of applying compulsory arbitration with respect to the settlement of disputes between labour and management affecting public hospitals. This committee will be appointed as soon as acceptance of appointment can be secured.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is a desirable approach to a problem of such significance and will receive the support of all the hon. members of this House—because matters of this importance transcend the bounds of political argument by their very nature. Indeed I think that this is the kind of approach which the people of Ontario would want the government to take.

While this inquiry is continuing may I say a word to those directly concerned in this matter. It would be my expectation that the workers at the hospital and the leaders of Local 183 would continue at work—and further I would expect that the board of trustees of the Trenton Memorial Hospital would co-operate to make this possible.

It is my hope—and I am sure that all hon. members of the House will join me—that both parties will exercise the greatest restraint towards each other while this inquiry is proceeding in order that the committee may function in an objective manner.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, having had such success with the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton), I am impelled to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope). I hope he received notice of it. I sent it to his office.

The question is: in reference to the brief presented by a delegation from Local 598, International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, on October 16, in which the delegation asked the assistance of the government in alleviating the distress and anxiety caused to several hundred families by the lay-off at Falconbridge Nickel Mines on October 19, 1963, would the hon. Minister inform the House what, if any steps, the government has taken to relieve this problem and what remedies these workers and their families may expect?

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I want to sincerely thank the hon. member for Sudbury for giving me advance notice of this very important question. It is very kind of him, indeed, Mr. Speaker, and in reference to the brief presented by the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, four things were significant in this brief that was presented.

First, the company was asked to institute a share-the-work programme; second, the company was asked to take over, for performance by its own employees, work that is presently being done by contractors; third, the company was asked to pension off, on a voluntary basis, employees aged 60 or more at the full pension that they would receive at age 65; fourth, they propose that the government of Canada institute a national nickel stockpile and the government interest itself in the sale of nickel.

Number four item, Mr. Speaker, you will understand I cannot answer, but I can say that this is being studied by the federal government.

Production from the Falconbridge operations is being reduced by about 17 per cent and this necessitated the laying off of some 530 men. Even so the company estimates that their new ore production schedule will provide 10 to 15 per cent more nickel than they are currently selling.

This as you will realize, produced many problems. However, the company is studying ways to soften the impact of this layoff and decided to invite anyone over 62 years of age to retire on the pension they would have received at the age of 65. This was a spot offer, only applicable with reference to the present layoff and to those in this age bracket who agreed to retire now. At the present time it appears that 14 men out of a possible 43, will accept the offer. Thus 14 younger men, who otherwise would have been laid off, will have continuing employment but the cost to the company is very high indeed.

The company is not willing to incur the much higher cost per man of retiring younger men and, judging from the response to their present offer, less than one-third of those older men want to retire.

In addition, the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), Mr. Speaker, has made facilities available for any of those men laid off to go to school to be taught new skills. Unemployment insurance benefits are available to all men laid off. All other mining companies have been notified to interview the men who have been laid off and Falconbridge has provided facilities for their interviewers.

I might mention that as of October 23, three mining companies had held 254 interviews, 66 men had firm offers and 41 more had provisional offers. Three other companies were sending interviewers looking for 57 men. The total claims processed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission at the Sudbury office up to 11 a.m. on October 23 were 203. It is the general opinion, Mr. Speaker, that most if not all of the men laid off who want to work will be employed in a short period of time. There is still a scarcity of skilled men in the mining industry. But unfortunately few areas match the Sudbury wage rates.

Now I wish to assure this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, that I will continue to do everything possible to try to find a solution to this problem, and I wish to thank the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers) for their interest in this tragic lay-off. I also want to thank the union for their great assistance and also the company for their efforts to find a solution which I hope will come before too long.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, uppermost in the minds of a lot of Ontario citizens today is how a—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I draw to the attention of the hon. member that this concludes the question-and-answer portion of our proceedings.

Motions.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that during the present session of the legislative assembly provision be made for the taking and printing of reports and debates and speeches and to that end Mr. Speaker be authorized to employ an editor of debates and speeches and the necessary stenographers at such rates of compensation as may be agreed to by him and also that Mr. Speaker be authorized to arrange for the printing of the reports in the amount of 1600 copies daily, copies of such printed reports to be supplied to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. Speaker, the Clerk of the legislative assembly, the Legislative Library, to each hon. member of the assembly, to the reference libraries of the province, press gallery, newspapers of the province as approved by Mr. Speaker and the balance to be distributed by the Clerk of the assembly as directed by Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that as the Legislature has been convened in this special session for the purpose of considering only those matters which have been laid before you in the address of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, the House hereby resolves to dispense with the customary address and reply to the Speech from the Throne and the formal debate thereon as the subject matters of the speech may be debated during the consideration of the motions and the legislation submitted to the House.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to this motion if I might. Traditionally, special sessions of the Legislature have been called to deal with special matters which are set out specifically in the Speech from the Throne, and there is no Speech from the Throne and debate on that speech as we know it in the usual session. It is also usual and traditional to dispense with a formal debate of the subject matters in the address, which is the traditional debate on the Throne speech, and because the Throne speech invariably covers a great many subjects, the latitude allowed by you, Mr. Speaker, and the Throne Speech debate is very wide. But when a special session is called to deal with specific matters and none other, then of course this debate can be dispensed with.

The hon. members here will recall during the election campaign completed on September 25 last I gave my undertaking to the people of Ontario on several occasions that I would call a special session of the Legislature at the earliest possible moment after the election in order that we might deal with the bill that will be before the House today and in order that we might provide for the implementation of the provisions of The Municipal Development and Loan Act of Canada.

This Act was introduced in the House of Commons some time in June and was the subject of a federal-provincial conference in the latter part of July. Of course our Legislature rose in April and I recognized, as that matter developed and as it came out of the conference, that we would need legislation. I therefore undertook to have this session at the earliest possible moment.

Perhaps those hon. members who were here in the last Legislature will recall the appointment of certain select committees last April. At that time the Opposition objected to the appointment of those committees on the basis that when the Legislature prorogued and was dissolved those committees would disappear. Well, I assured the Opposition at that time that we would be back here to reconstitute those committees, and here we are.

In this session I am carrying out not only an election promise I made to the people of Ontario, but I am also carrying out a statement I made in this House last April.

These two select committees—one deals with the question of municipal law and the other deals with the costs of consumer credit—as I say, will be the subject of motions constituting them once again. If there is any debate required on that, they are mentioned in the Throne speech.

Also, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) will introduce an Act to deal with the other matter of which I have spoken, and of course, it will go through the usual procedure of the House and can be fully debated. Therefore I feel that the formalities of the Throne Debate might very well be dispensed with and that is the purpose of this motion.

I would say in addition to this that it is not my intent—as I said in the procedure that we worked out to handle the questions—it is not my intent in this session to gather ourselves together here and then to have any matter that any hon. member would like—particularly the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) and the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. MacDonald)—brought in. If there are matters of public concern on which they wish to speak, why I would be happy to give them that opportunity and these matters might be discussed, Mr. Speaker, in the debate on this motion. Frankly, this is the only place in the procedure of this special session that such an opportunity will occur.

I spoke to both the hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party about this some days ago. I did not realize then that we were going to have to answer questions and I have had no notice from either of them as to what they might wish to discuss. However as far as I am concerned, if there are any remarks they would like to make it is perfectly all right with the government if they are made during the course of the debate on this motion.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to congratulate you upon the attainment of the high position that you now occupy. I would be other than frank if I did not say to you that you were my reluctant choice. If things had been different you might not have been my choice, but things being as they are, you are the choice of all of us in the House, I am sure.

Your great experience over the years and the talents that you undoubtedly possess will stand you in good stead in the office that you now occupy. I was very pleased to hear you say, as I expected to hear you say, that you would deal impartially and fairly as between the hon. members of the House. The interpretation of your rulings in this regard will be open sometimes, I presume, to question, but so far as the general tenor of your rulings are concerned, I am sure that we will at any rate, listen courteously and be moved somewhat by the opinions and the rulings that you express. I look quite confidently to a very fine Legislature under your chairmanship.

Now Mr. Speaker, we have listened to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) move a motion which has the effect of wiping out discussion on the Speech from the Throne, the ordinary discussion that takes place. We will be limited, as the hon. Prime Minister correctly said, to those items that are contained in the Speech from the Throne and that will be dealt with by the bills and motions introduced from the other side of the House.

As the hon. Prime Minister has said, this is not an innovation. All of us recall 1955 when the hon. Mr. Frost was the leader of the government. We had, I think, a one-day session at that time and a similar motion from the Prime Minister on that occasion. So it is not an innovation. It is not anything new in regard to the motion itself.

But what I want to point out to the House is that the implications of the motion and the ramifications that might be attached to it, are somewhat different today than they were in 1955. The first thought of the motion, and the one that meets the eye, is the one that is relevant to the 1955 situation and it sets out, as I have said, that debate will be dispensed with. In other words, when this motion is passed, and I have great suspicions that it will be passed in due course, when it is passed it means that we will not be able to say anything, except what pertains to the particular items in the Speech from the Throne.

Now the one thing that bothers me about the calling of this special session was the statement of the hon. Prime Minister himself when he was asked by the press how long the session would last and he said, or words to this effect were quoted, that it will be all over in a couple of hours, I mean a very short space of time, a couple of hours. I did not like that, as a true democrat. I thought those were arrogant words that fell from the lips of a Prime Minister flushed with power, and came from a Prime Minister who seemed to be irritated that he was called upon to convene the Legislature at all. His irritation was softened only by the declaration that it would last only a couple of hours.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if the true ends of democracy are to be served and that if we are to subscribe to the traditions as handed down to us through the years, no Prime Minister has the right to say that a meeting of the Legislature will last two hours. It will last just so long as it takes those who are assembled here to deal effectively and intelligently with the matters that are brought before them. And so far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, whether it takes two hours, two days or two weeks, we will give these matters our intelligent appraisal. We are not concerned whether we finish in two hours or not.

I cannot understand the hurry, the indecent haste of my hon. friend to get rid of the Legislature and to get back to the absolute rule of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. I know that these Cabinet ministers are very powerful. I do not think they are all wise. That statement, of course, can be interpreted, I know, a number of ways. I mean it in its softer application.

I think it should be the part of the government not only to trust the Legislature, but to gain from the deliberations of the Legislature. We are sitting in this province now with a Cabinet Council ruling for ten months and without scrutiny by the legislative members for another perhaps two-month period. We are living in a province that is not running a grocery store, a corner grocery store, any more. We are running a billion-dollar business in Ontario; and as such I think we are obligated to give to that business as much time as its importance seems to demand.

So on that first point I am disturbed, naturally, by the background, by the declaration of the hon. Prime Minister in the calling of the session, the special session.

The other point that I want to elaborate on is that hidden in this motion of the hon. Prime Minister—hidden to all save the initiated—hidden in this motion is the declaration that there will be no fall session as we have known it now for three years.

Hon. members can see it in this motion. If it is passed it means not only the curtailing of debate in relation to all subjects save those mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, but it means that we will not this year have a fall session, similar to the one that we have had, I think, for the last three years.

Now I want to argue for a moment or two on that premise. I want to be frank with the House in saying this, that the fall session as I have known it, during these last three years, leaves much to be desired. The reason, of course, that it has not fulfilled the purpose for which it was introduced lies, in my judgment, in the lap of the government itself. The fall session, as I have interpreted it—my hon. friend had better go outside to sleep if he wants to.

The fall session, as I have interpreted it these last three years, can be likened to the unwanted child. This government were forced, I understand, by some sort of an agreement—others have knowledge of this, I have not—but I understand a deal was made and in order to get something from somebody else, the government agreed that it would inaugurate a fall session.

They were not sold on the idea at all, mind you, they were not convinced of the urgency, nor of the good that might flow, from the starting of this fall session. But it was part of the deal, and like the unwanted child they gave it just enough nourishment to keep it alive during the last three years. They did not give it the proper direction, they did not give to it the things that they could have given to it to make it function properly.

Now I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that in the last three years the fall session has not lived up to its possibilities. That is no reason, however, Mr. Speaker, to condemn the principle of fall sessions. If the principle of fall sessions were understood and appreciated by the hon. members of the House and by the people as a whole I suggest to you that it could be made to be a vital instrument in the government of this province.

A fall session, in my opinion, could be used for a variety of purposes. In the past, the government has not put itself out at all to feed or to nourish the fall session.

An hon. member: Nonsense.

Mr. Oliver: It is not nonsense, it is an absolute fact. It was just allowed to be and to live as it could and the government cared not whether it died or not. That is exactly the position that the hon. members opposite have occupied through the years.

The fall session, Mr. Speaker, could, as I said, be a vital part of our government in this province. We could have committees do a great deal of work that is left over to the hurry of the winter session. For instance, the committee on public accounts could meet long before the budget is formed at all. It could meet at the time of the fall session and meet for two or three weeks constantly. And in a billion-dollar business in this province who is there to say that we should not have a public accounts committee that is really going after the task to which it is assigned?

I know of no jurisdiction in this country the size of this province, with the billion-dollar business that we do, that does not have an examination on the part of the membership of the House of the accounts of the province to a greater depth than we do in this province. It is a very casual, very cursory, a very partial examination. We could employ much time in a fall session in going into the accounts of the province—in pointing out weaknesses in our financial system that would be of benefit to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) as he moves to build his budget in the ensuing months.

The committee on commissions, I suggest to you, could be used to much greater advantage if there were time available in a fall session. The committee on commissions, I would say, has not functioned properly at all. We come in to a committee on commissions and the chairman makes a long speech—sometimes an hour or more—reading carefully from typewritten pages, and by the time he is through there is only time to ask a few questions and then adjourn.

There is no rigid, no thorough examination into the affairs of these huge corporations that are commissions outside this Legislature and yet related to this Legislature.

I would say that a fall session is an ideal place for a full and searching examination of the methods employed and the practices carried on, if these commissions could be gone into thoroughly—and not only the commissions. There is not any reason under the sun why a government that wanted a fall session, that saw the need for a fall session, could not prepare a great deal of their legislative programme and make it ready for a fall session. No reason at all.

Much of the legislation that would come before a fall session would perhaps be readily accepted by the hon. members of the Legislature and become law. There might very possibly be a bill which would come before a fall session that was controversial in character and it might be that the government in its wisdom, after hearing the discussions of all concerned, that they would move to have that bill held over until the main session. Now surely good would have been served by just that sort of a practice.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in this province of Ontario there is need for a real fall session, one that means something, one that not only has the blessing but the concern of the government of the province. And we have not had that up until the present time.

There is no opportunity now to discuss the great problems of education or medical insurance or pensions and all these things. If we sought to discuss them this afternoon perhaps my hon. friend would say we are entitled to do so, but what would we be doing? There is nothing concrete before the House upon which to base our suggestions and discussion. We would be simply tilting at windmills, we would be attacking the imaginary foe, so to speak.

There is nothing, as I say, of a concrete tangible nature before the House that would enable us to discuss these questions in an intelligent manner; but they could be discussed at a properly constituted fall session.

Now this is the point—

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): Oh, that is out.

Mr. Oliver: Well, it may be out. I just want to talk to the hon. members about that. The hon. member says it is out.

Mr. Letherby: Definitely out.

Mr. Oliver: We are not running in the horse-and-buggy days any more. We are in the jet age now, and we do things differently than we did in those days. And governments, if they are wise, will conform to the needs of the day rather than clinging tenaciously to methods which were employed decades ago. I would suggest to the hon. member that he speaks out of the side of his mouth and he has not given it the thought that he usually gives to questions of great public importance.

I want to say to the hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Oliver: I thought I paid the hon. member a compliment. If he did not think it a compliment, I cannot do anything about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would like to inform hon. members that if they have a question to ask the hon. member that is speaking that they should stand and address the chair and then if the hon. member speaking wishes to answer, he may do so. Otherwise, the hon. member should have the floor uninterrupted.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Speaker, I want to bring up another point and it is this: I am fearful that the government does not want a fall session this year for rather specific reasons. We have not had an opportunity to discuss, except on the hustings, The Canada Pension Act. That should be discussed at length and the government should take a stand on that particular question. The government feels, in my opinion, that they can get out of stating their position by not having a fall session. It is as simple as that. I mean, there are other reasons, but this year, this is the motivation for my hon. friend—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. leader of the Opposition is quite wrong.

Mr. Oliver: No, I am not quite wrong, I am quite right. And the hon. Prime Minister knows that. The reason that he does not have a fall session is that if he had a fall session he would be on the carpet. He would be obliged to state the position of the government if it has a position on this matter and by—

An hon. member: That is your previous leader.

Mr. Oliver: No, now do not bring in the previous leader. The hon. member has me to contend with now and he has his hands full. He does not need to go back—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Oliver: I suggest to my hon. friend that he is not being fair to the people of this province, nor us, in his stand in this particular matter, because through the election campaign, to say the least, he wobbled. Where he had to make a stand would be in the fall session. Now he does not have a fall session, so he does not have to make a stand. Now I suggest to you that there are a number of these things.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Oliver: Do not get excited, if I had any doubt up until now, as to why the hon. gentleman did not call the fall session, it has dissipated into thin air. I know exactly why he did not call it—because he did not want to stand up and be counted on this particular matter.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Oliver: Now, Mr. Speaker, having said these few things—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether to deal humorously with these fellows or not. Really, I think it is the only way you can deal with them, actually. However, in a sober sense I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I have the occasion to move, seconded by Mr. Sopha, that all the words after the word “that” when it first occurs in the motion be deleted and the following substituted therefore:

This House regrets the failure of the government to place before us at this time a comprehensive programme of government action to deal with such important problems as pensions, medical care, education and municipal reform and regrets the failure to provide adequate time to deal with the many important problems facing the people of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Moved by Mr. Oliver and seconded by Mr. Sopha, that all the words after "that" be deleted and the following words substituted therefor:

This House regrets the failure of the government to place before us at this time a comprehensive programme of government action to deal with such important problems as pensions, medical care, education and municipal reform and regrets the failure to provide adequate time to deal with the many important problems facing the people of Ontario.

Shall the motion carry?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, do we dispose of this and then go on with the debate?

Mr. Speaker: We are on the amendment to the motion.

Mr. MacDonald: The motion as amended, right!

Mr. Speaker, before I get into what I wanted to say this afternoon, I want to take this opportunity of saying a few words to you. Tradition does not permit of a motion being thirded, there is not even a word in the language along that line, but if there were I would have been delighted to have thirded the motion in your appointment as Speaker of the House. I want to express my best wishes to you in the rather difficult task that you have undertaken.

I think it is some time ago, almost 30 years ago, since we first met, Mr. Speaker, on the ball diamond back at Queen's University. You were captain of the team and I was playing out in the field. Along with seven other fellows, we won the pennant that year. The interesting thing is that 30 years have gone by and in a manner of speaking, you are still captain of the team in this House and I am still out in the field, I presume, as they will add, left field. I want to say for the benefit of the hon. members in the House that I have no illusions that you, sir, will be able to field either a fast ball or a curve just as adeptly today as you did 30 years ago. I would suggest that we would all be wise to govern ourselves accordingly.

Indeed, I think you bring to this high office an independence of mind, along with your assurances that you will deal with the business of the House in a fair and an impartial manner. I was delighted to see that some of the normal ignoring of the rules from our hunting friend from Simcoe East (Mr. Letherby) received your kind admonition that he should live up to those rules like everybody else even though he happens to be on that side of the House.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you of our co-operation in trying to rebuild some of the finest traditions of this House, particularly as I recollect some of the donnybrooks we have had in recent years.

Mr. Letherby: We will remember that tune in the future.

Mr. MacDonald: Right!

Mr. Speaker, on this motion now amended with regard to dispensing with the debate on the Throne Speech, I want to say a number of things.

It is the responsibility of hon. members of this House, and particularly the members of the Opposition, to bring before the House those issues which demand public attention, and which, in our view, demand a little more vigorous and imaginative handling than the government is giving them. In effect, the hon. Prime Minister's motion this afternoon is going to frustrate the hon. members of the House in doing their duty.

Now I want to tie that in with a further discussion on the whole question of the fall session which has been raised this afternoon by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver). He referred to an event back in 1960, a deal that was made behind the scenes. I want to recall to hon. members of the House, particularly since there are a number who are here for the first time today, exactly what that so-called deal was.

Indeed, perhaps I can go back a bit beyond 1960 to 1956. In 1956, after the election in 1955, when the question of an increase in the indemnity was raised in this Legislature, and it was raised from the rather shameful sum of $3900 a year to $5400 a year, the excuse, or the explanation rather, that was given by the Prime Minister of the day was that we had moved into a period in which the job of a member of the provincial Legislature was a full-time job. Indeed, if hon. members read Hansard they will find that he made reference to the obvious need for the consideration of a fall session, that it was not wise to cram all our business into a spring session, that we might well break it up and have a break over the Christmas and the New Year period by having a fall session.

Mr. Speaker, we got the increase in the indemnity, but we did not get the fall session. As far as I was concerned, while this was not a deal back then, this was something of a promise from the Prime Minister of the day which was not fulfilled.

Therefore, after the election in 1959, when once again there were rumours about that there was need for an increase in the indemnity, our caucus, the CCF caucus, considered the matter even before it was raised. Our decision was that we were not going to go on with the proposition of an increase in the indemnity until we had this time ironclad public assurance from the Prime Minister of the day that we would get a fall session and that we would give the members of this Legislature adequate opportunity to do the business of the province which has grown to the proportions that it has.

A committee of this Legislature was established, made up of people from each party. They sat periodically all during the session and they came to no agreement. The committee was broadened in the latter days of the session to include the leaders of the parties and the Prime Minister of the day, in effect, said to us that if we could not get agreement, then we would forget about the whole thing. We reiterated our stand. He reconsidered the matter when he, if I may put it bluntly, Mr. Speaker, came to the conclusion he was not going to bluff us into submission and he came into the House, as the record will indicate, and assured us that fall sessions would be held. Indeed, he brought in a number of bills which I think made it possible legally to initiate the business in the fall, and, therefore, we got fall sessions starting in 1960.

Mr. Letherby: Which should not have happened at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Look, if the hon. member wants to go hunting all fall, go hunting all fall.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. MacDonald: I will come to the point that the hon. member has raised, Mr. Speaker, when he is talking about rural members. The answer of the hon. Prime Minister, that he has intimated publicly—and he will forgive me for using it as he has expounded to me privately, because I think it is well that it be brought out here—is that he does not think fall sessions have been efficient; that we have not been able to build up what he described as a good flow of business. We interrupted the business with Christmas and when we came back after the New Year, we had to start to build the order paper up again.

We got into a good deal of wrangling last year, when the government attempted to build the business and to establish a flow by bringing in the estimates of some of the departments that did not involve major amounts of money even before the budget had come down. There was a great deal of argument about that.

Now all I want to say to the hon. Prime Minister is this, on the general lines that the hon. leader of the Opposition has already said, that he has not convinced me that fall sessions have been given a fair trial. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I want to remind this House that fall sessions have become really part of the tradition in the province of Quebec. They are increasingly becoming part of the operations in the province of British Columbia. These are the only other two provinces which have something approaching the legislative load that we have in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member is quite wrong about Quebec.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not know why I am quite wrong and I should be interested to hear. They have a session in the fall, I do not care what you call it, they meet in the fall. Indeed, they meet much earlier than we do because we usually have not met until the latter half, indeed often the last week, of November.

There are many things about the session which the government stubbornly refused to consider, either in a fall session or any other time. If I fail now in trying to get them to consider a fall session, on which presumably they have come to a firm decision, I hope they will consider some of these things in our general session.

One of them, for example, is another of the points which has been raised by the hon. leader of the Opposition. We have never used the public accounts committee in the fashion in which it should be used in this Legislature. In fact it was delegated to the position of being a committee to which one referred scandals or something of this nature. The really important function of a public accounts committee—to look into the accounts, to take a department and go through it with a fine tooth comb—is something that we have never done in this Legislature, to my knowledge. We talked about it two or three years ago, but the government has never seen fit, in establishing the public accounts committee, to permit it to get into operation.

I remind the hon. Prime Minister of another thing that has been raised a good many times. The government traditionally, in my experience in this Legislature, has treated with nothing short of contempt motions and bills put on the order paper by the hon. members of the Opposition and by hon. members of their own party.

What happens traditionally in this Legislature is that they are put on the order paper, and they sit there for two or three months. In hon. Mr. Frost's day, they were invariably called between 11 and 1 o'clock a.m., in the dying days of the session and they got very cursory treatment. Indeed one of the things I found myself most unhappy about in the hon. Prime Minister's innovation of some things last spring is that he duplicated this kind of procedure. Many of the motions and bills that we had on the order paper were never called at all.

I speak rather feelingly because in one instance I had put a bill on the order paper to establish, if I may sum it up, a constituency of Queen's Park which might be a seat for a permanent Speaker, an issue which evoked considerable public discussion, considerable editorial comment across this province. Yet when the hon. Prime Minister deigned ultimately to call this bill in the House I had an opportunity to speak to it briefly and then the guillotine dropped. Somebody on the other side of the House immediately rose and moved the adjournment of the debate and they did not even dignify the situation on an issue that is receiving a great deal of discussion all across the province, across the nation, with some idea as to whether they had any views on it. This is traditionally the kind of treatment that bills and motions on the order paper have gotten from this government and from the previous Prime Minister.

I want to suggest to the hon. Prime Minister, whether it be in a fall session or any other time, that I think it is time that this government and this Legislature gave some honest attention to private members of the House, including back benchers on the government side, who can put motions and bills on the order paper in which they can fly a kite, if you will, on some issue with which they are deeply concerned.

Indeed, it might be a useful proposition that we should establish in this Legislature what they have in the federal House of Commons and that is an orderly procedure whereby for an hour or two a week, once or twice a week, there is a specified period which is going to be devoted to the consideration of private members' bills and motions. They go down to the bottom of the order paper once they have been considered if perchance, as usually happens, they do not come to a vote.

This would be an opportunity for the over-swollen ranks on the government side to participate, because once again in this Legislature we are back in a position where the government has too big a majority even for its own good. Some of the people who have come into this House today, challenged and excited and enthusiastic about public life, two or three months from now they are going to sit silently in their seats and say: Why in heaven's name did I ever come here? Because there will not be a job for them that they think is meaningful enough.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not want to get into an argument with the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Letherby). I just want to make a plea to the hon. Prime Minister that in an attempt to get a more orderly conduct of the business of this province, that he give some thought to an orderly procedure for private members to put bills and motions on the order paper on his side of the House as well as our side of the House. Also to allocate some specified time so that they may be given the consideration of the House, instead of the rather shoddy treatment that they have had in the past.

To come back to the main point that I was making, all of these are things that could have been considered in building the fall session into a meaningful session instead of the starved child to which the hon. leader of the Opposition has referred.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to hang my main argument on the proposition of a fall session. I think it is only plain common sense that the business of this House be broken into two periods: one in the fall, with a sizeable adjournment over the Christmas and the New Year, and then another in the spring. I think this is only plain common sense, but this is not my main consideration. If you want to go back into the debates in 1960 when we were considering this in the House, I said then that we in this group had insisted on a fall session because we had been promised it and the promise had not been fulfilled. But we were not committed to a fall session per se. What we are committed to, Mr. Speaker, is the proposition that members of this House shall regard the job of a member of the provincial Legislature as a full-time job.

Mr. Letherby: Okay then, pay us the money.

Mr. MacDonald: Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, that the government shall so conduct and order the business of the House that the members of the Legislature will be able to make it a full-time business. In my view this means that we should meet in this Legislature a minimum—and I emphasize a minimum—of at least four months of the year.

Just let me remind hon. members of this. Last year, even with a fall session, and with the hon. Prime Minister not trying to squeeze all the business in before Easter—and I give him credit on this—he said if we cannot finish it we will come back after Easter, and we did.

The hon. Prime Minister's predecessor used to squeeze all the business in, no matter what happened to the province. We never sat beyond Easter.

Even with all of that, Mr. Speaker, what I want to remind you of is that last year, with the fall session, the winter session and the post-Easter session, we met in this House for only 13 weeks. And this is more important than not having the fall session; this is a violation of the spirit if not the letter of the agreement back in 1960 that this was going to be a full-time job.

Now I will come back and pick up one interjection from the hon. member for Simcoe East. He said you have not got very many rural members over there. I would say, Mr. Speaker, to you, and I hope the hon. member for Simcoe East will listen, that I do not care whether a member be a rural member or whether he be an urban member or whether he be a member who comes from a mixed riding, his job is in this Legislature.

Mr. Letherby: And that is where I am.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the government should give them an opportunity to be here for at least four months of the year, and this has not been done. The hon. Prime Minister said, when I had a discussion with him: "We will meet early in the new year; we will get an equivalent three or four weeks in before the normal time that the House convenes at the end of January or the first of February and that will be the equivalent of the fall session and then if necessary we will convene after Easter."

In fact, with that generous sweep that he has inherited from his predecessor, he said, "We will carry on right to July if it is necessary." This may rock the hon. member for Simcoe East.

But I will say this to the hon. Prime Minister, for eight years this Legislature, or some of the hon. members, have been led up the garden path on the issue of providing an opportunity to deal with the business of this province in the manner that it should be dealt with. We have been told in 1956 it is a full-time job; we did not sit any longer. We were told in 1960 it was a full-time job; we did not sit any longer. We did not sit any longer even with the innovations that the hon. Prime Minister of today introduced last year.

The main point I want to make, fall session or no fall session, is that the time has come when the province of Ontario, with a billion-dollar budget, with a budget which is as big as the federal budget in the latter part of the 1930's, should be meeting, I repeat, for a minimum of four months of the year. Only when we are meeting for that length of time are we going to be doing justice to the business of a province the size of Ontario.

So I add these remarks to those of the hon. leader of the Opposition. I have other things to say too—but I would say with reference to this amendment that we will support the amendment to the motion because I think that it is necessary that the Opposition groups in the House should make some sort of a protest with regard to what the government is doing today and the real significance of it.

There are so many other things, Mr. Speaker, that the House should be considering. I am not going to go into many of them in detail, though there is one, after what the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) has said this afternoon, that I do want to go into a little later.

There is, for example, the question of higher education on which I have been most disturbed after spending a fair amount of time since the election in September in looking into it. This government, for example, some two or three years ago set up an advisory committee and the advisory committee set up a subcommittee of the university presidents in the province of Ontario and asked them to assess very carefully the capacity of the universities of this province for the year 1965 when we are going to be hit with the wave of post-war babies. The university presidents made proposals to the government. They pointed out that by 1965 they are going to have 6,000 too few places in our universities in the province of Ontario even if only the current percentage of our young people go forward to the university.

I think everybody would agree this is a shameful proposition in which we are going to be betraying our trust to future generations. They made some proposals for new universities, for expansion of the present universities. They talked of a university in Scarborough, then Erindale and out in the Niagara Peninsula, and of developing a faculty of arts at Guelph.

I have been interested, in exploring, to discover that there is no possibility of the Erindale College coming into operation by 1965 and it will be a real battle to get Scarborough into operation by 1965. I hope there is a realistic prospect that Guelph will be in operation by 1965, I have found nobody who can speak with any authority or substance as to what is happening in the development of Guelph into a university with a faculty of arts.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, having sought and having received a blueprint of how this government could cope with the crisis that we are heading for in 1965, this government is now not doing what is necessary to fulfill that blueprint. Indeed, in the supplementary report of the university presidents that was released on October 1, although it was finished back last June, they point out that the university presidents now state that because of the fact that the government met only 60 per cent of the capital grant requirements for their expansion programme last winter, that they simply cannot meet the objective of 1965.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, let us face it, we are thundering towards a major crisis in higher education and we are not going to be able to fulfill needs according to the testimony of the university presidents themselves. We are not going to be able to fulfill needs because this government has through its policy imposed a go slow programme, even after they have been given some picture of what was required to meet the crisis.

Even more important, Mr. Speaker, when the first report of the advisory committee, or the university presidents to the advisory committee—the so-called Deutsch committee report—came out last spring, it was pointed out that we had, even when we had completed the expansion programme of our institutes of technology, the prospect of only 6,000 places in the whole of the province of Ontario within institutions of this kind. The university presidents underlined just how inadequate this was, pointing out that we should immediately raise our sights to 18,000, the tripling of our sights, by 1970.

Now I have sought, Mr. Speaker, to discover what has happened by way of government action in heeding this kind of a proposal from people who are right in the field. As far as I can find, there is nothing. I think there is some consideration, for example, of a new institute of technology in Hamilton that will replace the present one and perhaps have expanded facilities; but nothing to come to grips with the 18,000 requirement. This should be discussed in this House today.

We should have some discussion, for example, as to what this government is going to do after years of dragging its feet on the problem of adequate safety laws and the administration of those laws. We should have some discussion from the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) on what this government is going to do in trying to make up for its past sins of omission in building adequate hospitals in this metropolitan area. The last time this Legislature met, the hon. Minister of Health had a very great deal of difficulty in being able to accept the fact that there was a shortage of nurses in the province of Ontario or in this area. I hope now that even he is silenced on this issue and acknowledges that there is a shortage of nurses.

But what is the government doing to train more of them? More important, what is the government doing to correct some of the conditions which are resulting in us losing more nurses than we can train by emigration to the United States? We should have answers on these problems because they are urgent. And this is why we should have had a fall session—to be able to come to grips with these problems.

During the election the government made many promises that they were going to introduce, in the province of Ontario, an equivalent increase in pension and welfare payments to match the $10 increase in the old age pension that has been enacted in Ottawa. How long are the people who are entitled to this going to have to wait before this promise is fulfilled?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The Liberal government has not adopted it.

Mr. MacDonald: They have passed the law.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It does not affect the old age assistance.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, just a minute now, Mr. Speaker. My understanding of what the hon. Prime Minister said during the election was that when the federal government increased the old age pension from $65 to $75 we would take action to do it on these other payments in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me. The plan divides into two parts: the old age pension, and the shared schemes, which are old age assistance, blind and disabled pensions. The federal government has increased the old age pension, or old age security payment, and that only. It has not increased, and the action it took did not increase, the pension to blind and disabled people. That is a shared programme.

What this government said, and what I said, was—and I will say it again—that we stand ready to put in our share of the increase in the shared programmes. The federal government has not seen fit to do this and I do not know at the moment what their intent is in this regard. We still stand ready to pick up our share of the increase when the time comes.

Mr. MacDonald: I am very glad to receive the assurances of the hon. Prime Minister in this connection, but this just underlines one other feature of the current situation in the province of Ontario. The hon. Prime Minister requested when he called the election in August that he should have a new mandate to carry to the federal-provincial conferences in Ottawa.

There are many matters on which the hon. members of this Legislature are entitled to know the government's thinking. And I would submit that unless the hon. Prime Minister treats with a degree of contempt and arrogance, the role of the Opposition or the role of the hon. members of the Legislature, he should welcome an opportunity to discuss these so he could go down to the federal-provincial conference with a clear picture of what everybody in many instances wants from Ottawa.

If I may refer once again to the problem of higher education. I would acknowledge that the cost of higher education is staggering, but until this government is willing to come to grips with the thing, we assume or feel that they can underwrite this cost and underwrite it at the levels that are necessary to meet the crisis of 1965.

If they feel that we do not have the wherewithal financially, in the province of Ontario, to be able to meet the necessary expansion programme to meet that crisis, then I think there is an obligation on the part of the hon. Prime Minister to take this House into his confidence, and to obtain an overwhelming endorsement of his going to get Ottawa to share some of this cost. Indeed, to get Ottawa to accept what might be a projection of their sharing in the costs, at least the capital costs of secondary, vocational and technical schools; to project that kind of a programme to the level of higher education to get them to share in the cost of building the university buildings that we require to be able to meet the greater number of students that will be here from 1965 onwards.

In other words, these are just illustrations of the many topics that could have been brought before this House, and that the government is denying us the opportunity to discuss. However, Mr. Speaker, I want to leave all these matters, because I know who won the election and having made our point there is no point in labouring it unnecessarily. It is not going to get us anywhere even with the smile from the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Simonett).

But I do want to come to an issue on which I had the groundwork laid in the question I presented to the hon. Minister of Labour, and which he answered with regard to the Trenton Memorial Hospital.

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak very calmly about an issue that I want to suggest to this House is extremely important. It does not have reference only to the hospital in Trenton. I would say that I agree with most of the observations of the hon. Minister of Labour this afternoon, when he spelled out the reasons for hesitation on the part of management generally, of the trade union movement generally, and I would hope, of government generally, in imposing compulsory arbitration to achieve any settlement in a labour-management dispute.

What puzzles me, is that this government was willing to rush in at the eleventh hour with compulsory arbitration in the instance of the Hydro labour-management dispute a year or two ago, and impose it without having given any commitment that this was a necessary thing, and yet in this instance the government gave a commitment a month ago that I want to come to, and now in my view, they have broken faith with the commitment that they gave at that time.

I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that I can make this intelligible to the House only by going back and filling in a bit of background. As the hon. Minister of Labour pointed out, this union was certified in the hospital in Trenton about the middle of 1962—I believe it was August of 1962. They sought to establish negotiations with the hospital board and they failed and this went on for a considerable time. The hospital board did not only refuse to concede certain demands, they simply refused to negotiate. They refused to sit down with the duly legalized union within the hospital, and therefore it went to the conciliation officer and ultimately, to a conciliation board.

Now if the hon. members of the House think that I am exaggerating this situation in any degree, I want to read just briefly some excerpts from the report of that conciliation board, a report which I remind you, Mr. Speaker, was a majority report signed by the chairman and by the union's representative. The chairman happened to be Trevor R. Smith, and in the earlier part of his report he goes to considerable length to point out that he had sat on similar kinds of boards, dealing with similar kinds of negotiations with hospitals, so that he was not a novice coming into this picture.

He was thoroughly familiar with the problems involved and as he pointed out, in all of the disputes in which he had previously been involved, the ultimate success was achieved through the willingness of the parties to negotiate, to compromise and to accept a degree of logical persuasion. I want to read the next few paragraphs, Mr. Speaker, because they speak for themselves:

In this dispute the applicant union expressed the desire to co-operate and demonstrated its good faith by acceding to all the requests of the chairman for compromise proposals. The chairman must state that the union was prepared to consider proposals of the board which would have and should have been the basis of a settlement in line with the other similar agreements within the province. The respondent hospital was not prepared to co-operate in any way with the board, and in fact were reluctant to consider The Ontario Labour Relations Act was anything other than an unwarranted interference with their rights. The chairman is aware of the seriousness of this allegation and to accept the fact that it must not be made if it cannot be substantiated by direct proof. The proof will be submitted herewith.

The reply of the respondent to the opening presentation to the applicant was submitted as a written brief. On page 2, the following sentence appears: "The first problem therefore that the board must consider is that the hospital has no confidence whatsoever in this union and it is felt that this problem may be insurmountable to the board."

Then it goes on, Mr. Speaker, if I may just break in and summarize here, to point out that there was just simply a refusal on the part of management. They said they had no confidence in this union and gave explanations as to why they had no confidence, which the chairman proceeds to break down and show that they had no validity at all. Then, let me pick up again later in the conciliation board report:

The chairman found the attitude of the hospital to be one of non-co-operation. Immediately prior to the final breakdown of mediation attempts, the chairman had succeeded in bringing together the counsel for the hospital, the international vice-president of the union and himself in a room apart with a view to solving the language difficulty. The union had brought a secretary to Trenton should any typing be required. The chairman suggested an amended clause in the section in dispute and both representatives agreed that the amended clause would be acceptable.

While this new wording was being typed, the chairman reported to the hospital board and to the union committee. The union committee welcomed the fact that one more hurdle had been overcome. The hospital board seemed to panic at the prospect of agreement coming closer and immediately issued instructions to its counsel to deliver an ultimatum which it already knew to be not acceptable either to the union or this board. This constituted the final proof of the hospital's determination not to reach agreement.

And one further sentence later on, in which the chairman of the board says:

The original proposals of the union would be excessive in a first agreement. The final proposals of the union as amended by the chairman would be in line with all existing agreements with hospital boards which have collective agreements.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, just to sum it up, what in effect the chairman of the conciliation board has said is that you have a hospital board management which simply refuses to acknowledge the existence of the union or the necessity to negotiate with it. In other words, the obligations of The Labour Relations Act are an unwarranted interference in their untrammelled operations there. In other words, they just refuse to acknowledge the law of the province of Ontario.

Now I want to pick up from that, Mr. Speaker, because undoubtedly when we have compulsory arbitration considered by any Parliament or any Legislature, it is after a situation has been created in which it concluded, rightly or wrongly for the moment, that this is the only answer. The situation has been created, and often it has been created by the actions of the government as well as by the parties involved. I want to say to the hon. Minister today, that I know he has wrestled with this problem for months, but I want to say to him in all honesty that the situation he faced today is in good part his own creation.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, may I remind you that The Labour Relations Act says that when the conciliation board report is brought down that it shall be released "forthwith" to the parties involved, the hospital and the union in this instance. The fact of the matter is that the conciliation report was submitted to the deputy Minister on June 24, 1963, and not until six weeks later was the report released—a delay that was in breach of the law of the province of Ontario.

Even more important and more significant and more deplorable, Mr. Speaker, is that during that six weeks period a very strange thing took place. Indeed, I would like some lawyers who are in this field and who know what the obligations are in this field, to take a look and see whether it was not even a dishonourable thing to have done. What happened, as I am informed and I am sure that I am reliably informed, was that the department's official—I think it was the deputy Minister, but I may be wrong—called in the conciliation board and in effect tried to get them to alter the report that they had brought in.

Now I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, without any fear of contradiction, that if a report had been brought in which condemned a union with such devastating comments as this report condemned the actions and the attitude of the hospital board in Trenton then I am as certain as I am standing here that this would have been made public knowledge. That this union would have become the butt of attacks not only from the public but by the press. Indeed they would very soon have got the honoured place on the front page in the headlines of the Globe and Mail reserved for any union that does not immediately accept an agreement and gets into a strike situation.

But that did not happen. In this instance, it happened to be a hospital board—it happened to be management that was criticized. And so the government, through The Department of Labour, sought to have the conciliation board report rewritten. Only when events forced their hand was that section of the Act which says the report should be released forthwith complied with, and this was actually done some six weeks later, in the first week of August.

Let us skip a period now, Mr. Speaker, because though the conciliation board report had been released, there was still no negotiation. The hospital board in Trenton simply refused to negotiate with the union, and ultimately, as the hon. Minister of Labour points out very accurately, the union has a legal right to strike. They have been extremely responsible; they have manifested the patience of the gods in dealing with a recalcitrant employer who is condemned very vigorously by the chairman of the board. So they set a strike deadline that would have taken place, as I recall, roughly on October 1.

At that point the government felt that they should intervene, so the government sent a wire to the hospital board and to the union to meet in the hon. Minister's office on a certain Monday. The union was there. The hospital board wired back saying in effect that they were not going to be there and if the hon. Minister wanted to see them he could come on down to Trenton. This is true. The hon. Minister confirms it.

In other words, you had management which was not only defying the law but which thumbed its nose at the hon. Minister of Labour and the government when they sought to intervene on the advance of a strike. Now the shoe is beginning to get binding. There was going to be a strike set as of a certain hour. Something had to be done about it. And so on a certain day, in fact on September 30, when the union came to the government and was trying to get them to take more vigorous action to have the law observed, they were asked to accept this statement—and I want to read it to the House—

An hon. member: Is this in order?

Mr. MacDonald: Of course it is in order.

The statement, Mr. Speaker, is on Department of Labour stationery, signed September 30, and it is signed by Louis Fine, chief conciliation officer, and Tom Eberlee, assistant deputy Minister.

It reads as follows:

Mr. Rowntree has authorized Mr. Fine to advise Mr. Hearn—that is the vice-president of the union involved:

that he intends to issue a statement in connection with this situation and make a further effort to bring the parties together to resolve the issue in dispute. Failing this, it is the intention of Mr. Rowntree to introduce legislation at the first opportunity in the forthcoming session of the Legislature to provide for final and binding arbitration of the dispute between the Trenton Memorial Hospital and the Building Service Employees International Union, Local 183.

In view of the above Mr. Hearn has agreed to call off the strike.

I repeat, signed by Louis Fine and by Tom Eberlee.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, here is what you have: a commitment on the part of the hon. Minister, literally the day before the strike was going to be called—Monday and the strike was called for seven o'clock on Tuesday morning—a commitment by the hon. Minister: You call off the strike, I will seek to get the parties together and get an agreement. If I fail, I give you, in effect, on my word of honour, a commitment that I will bring in—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Do not put words in my mouth. State the facts.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister changes his mind very quickly. He nodded approval, and then he started to argue with me. He is very quick today.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member is a little volatile.

Mr. MacDonald: A commitment that if he sought to get the parties together and he did not succeed that he would bring in a bill at "the forthcoming session of the Legislature"—and I just interpret here that the interpretation of the people who signed it was this session of the Legislature, not a regular session of the Legislature.

In other words Mr. Speaker, we have a union which has negotiated now for over a year. They are dealing with a management which has violated the law. We are dealing with a management which has treated with contempt the hon. Minister of Labour and the efforts of The Department of Labour to intervene. Yet this government has done nothing to get them to live up to the law.

Indeed, not only have they done nothing to live up to the law, they now ask the union involved, after they had given them an iron-clad commitment signed by two honourable people that if they called off the strike they would have compulsory arbitration at this session of the Legislature—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Just to make the record clear, what I said was that I would recommend to the government that legislation to provide for compulsory arbitration be introduced. That I did and I dealt with that in my statement.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the statement signed by Mr. Louis Fine and by Mr. Eberlee in the relevant portion reads as follows:

Failing this it is the intention of Mr. Rowntree to introduce legislation at the first opportunity in the forthcoming session of the Legislature.

It was not "to recommend to the Legislature". These men who accepted this had every reason to expect that the hon. Minister of Labour could sell the issue to the Cabinet and to the government.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Or would resign if he could not!

Mr. MacDonald: And we do not have this legislation. There has been a breach of faith, Mr. Speaker, a breach of faith.

I do not know what the union is going to do. This union has been as responsible as any human beings could conceivably be. The last time I made an equivalent statement to this a few minutes ago the hon. Minister nodded his head affirmatively and he does again. There is no doubt about this. How long should their patience and their sense of responsibility go when they have this kind of breach of faith on the part of the government?

Now let us come to the substance of the government solution to this issue, Mr. Speaker. The government now says, after they refused to grasp the nettle of compulsory arbitration in the instance of the Hydro strike and explore the circumstances under which one might legitimately consider compulsory arbitration, they just waited and drifted until it got to the eleventh hour and then they imposed it on the union and violated all those freedoms which suddenly have become so sacrosanct that the hon. Minister gets up and reminds us about them this afternoon.

When he made this commitment to the union involved a month or so ago I would assume, being a responsible Minister, that he had thought the thing through and he recognized the full implications of the commitment. Therefore I am left with only one conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister is submitting to pressures put upon him in the last month so that now he is not going to live up to his agreement and he has come in with an alternative. The alternative is that he set up another study, another committee. This should have been done years ago, I would agree.

But I do not think this hon. Minister should come before this House and set up a committee to look into even a worthy thing as part and parcel of breaching an honourable agreement and commitment that he made to the union involved. This is where the hon. Minister has gotten himself into an untenable position. This is where the hon. Minister has created the situation in which he today has to face up to the fact that he is breaching this agreement.

I would say this to the hon. Minister: if he wanted to set up a committee to look into, finally, belatedly, the whole problem of compulsory arbitration and when it should be used, let him set up the committee; but let him not violate the commitment here.

He has another weapon he can use. I do not know why he should hesitate to use it, in face of a group of people who are defiant of the law—defiant and contemptuous of the law. That other weapon is that he should step into the office of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) and through the powers that the government has through the Minister of Health, put this hospital under trusteeship, to get a board which is willing to live with the law of the province of Ontario.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this is where the hon. Minister should have acted. Sometimes, when I say this, I feel that I am being unfair to the hon. Minister, for he tries to keep a balance between his approach to labour and management. But I am as certain as I am standing here, that if a union had acted as this management has acted they would have been clobbered into the ground a long time ago.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, there is no support for that statement whatsoever, so far as my management of the department is concerned.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that is not a substantive interjection—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is the kind of irresponsible, extravagant statement that the hon. member makes from time to time and which is a deterioration of the plateau of the conduct of this House to which he made honourable reference at the outset of his remarks.

Mr. MacDonald: I, Mr. Speaker, will let the hon. members of the House and the public and everybody come to a conclusion as to the validity of the hon. Minister's interjection. All I am saying, and I am saying this to the hon. Minister now, is that when he has somebody, a group management, I do not care whether it is in a hospital or anywhere else, that defiantly refuses to live up to the law of the province and a statute that comes under this hon. Minister, it is his obligation to see that the statute is lived up to. It is not his right to breach an honourable agreement with the employees involved who called off a strike so that they would be acting responsibly; and that is what the hon. Minister has done today.

Now I leave the matter there. What the union will do, I am not in any position to say. They did not know what was going to happen. They were not even taken into the confidence of the hon. Minister that this was what was going to be the solution. I submit to the hon. Minister, in all kindness, that if he had made a commitment to them through two honourable officials of his department, that he at least should have informed them beforehand that he was going to breach that commitment.

He did not. So what they are going to do, I do not know. But what this government is going to do finally, I trust, is to face up to the fact that they have created the situation; and having created the situation they refuse to live up to the agreement and now they are backing away and unearthing and unveiling all of these arguments about freedom and principle being violated if there is compulsory arbitration and they want, belatedly, to study it.

Well let us study it. It is just another occasion when a Tory government has to be driven down to the wire before it faces the facts of life and guarantees the rights of employees as well as employers.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I come back to a repetition of an earlier comment of mine, since this is in the context of an amended motion, that in some fashion or another, and every fashion that we can, with dignity, we should express our opposition to the government's handling of the business of the province.

Indeed, the thing that disturbed me most about the election was not that the Tories won, I perhaps had a suspicion that might have happened before the votes were counted. Well, hardly were the votes counted when this government, once again with too big a majority for its own good, was saying, through the hon. Prime Minister, that it was dispensing with the fall session. He was sending the hon. members of the Legislature home and he was going to govern to the legislative decree or to the Cabinet decree. This is the kind of attitude you always get from a government that has too big a majority.

It was just a little saddening, sir, that a Prime Minister who had hardly recovered from the election, the votes were still being counted, should have in effect said to the hon. members who had been elected, that they were not going to have an opportunity to fulfill their duty. I think we should protest it and I do protest it. Therefore, we in this group will support the amendment to the motion.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on this motion as amended, it is not my intention to elaborate the obvious, though I had hoped in that regard that some benefit might accrue for the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Letherby), in getting through to his comprehension. But I observe with you, Mr. Speaker, that the Legislature, having been in session for two hours and fifteen minutes, has now proved too lengthy for the hon. member for Simcoe East and he has departed this last half hour.

Mr. Speaker, very penetrating remarks were made by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver), to which I very wholesomely subscribe. And to the same degree I support the contentions of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), except to say, sir, that I shall not allow my sense of balance to be upset. I, too, say that I realize who won the election. But in maintaining my sense of balance I shall also remember that more than 50 per cent of the people of Ontario voted against the party that sits on your right, and I shall also remember that no matter how the chips may have rolled or the cookie crumbled—as they say in the vernacular of the teen-agers these days, how the mop flops—that we in the Opposition still have the tradition of the historic and ancient role of the Opposition to fulfill.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

I wonder if the hon. member for Sudbury would confine his remarks to the amendment that is under discussion.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, sir. My first act shall be one of compliance with your ruling. It is a practice that I shall endeavour throughout your stewardship as Speaker to continue.

I have said all that I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker, on that score. The hon. Leader of the Opposition referred to what he called the arrogance of the hon. Prime Minister, and I thought, sir, that he carried a little bit of it into the chamber this afternoon when he quite gratuitously informed us that in debating this motion we could talk about anything we liked. So I take it that from his point of view, sir, this is the miniature Throne Speech debate; and certainly that is the way the hon. member for York South treated it in his extensive remarks.

Now I want to note, sir, in reference to the amendment, that the amendment does not say anything about a fall session. A fall session is not mentioned in it. But what the amendment does say is that it regrets the failure of the government to provide adequate time to deal with the many important problems facing the people of Ontario. The hon. Prime Minister informed us that this session would be over very speedily, and implicit in his remarks this afternoon was that same notion. We shall dispatch the business that is before the House and contained in the speech of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and get away.

Now one notes that the business of the government of Canada at Ottawa, one notes that the business of that government encompasses 10 months of the year. It is now 10 months of the calendar year that the Parliament at Ottawa meets in order to deal with the affairs of this country. I do not know how long the Legislature of Quebec meets. In that connection one might say that they are better paid than we are, if such a thing can be mentioned, to take note that the hon. members of the Legislature of Quebec are paid $15,000 annually, which is twice what we are paid plus $1,000. That must imply that they sit a much longer time than we do.

But to return to the despatch of the business in the House of Commons at Ottawa, I said that they now consume ten months. And it is to be noted that in carrying on over ten months, the Commons does not meet after ten o'clock at night.

How many times very ruefully, very regretfully, very patiently and sometimes impatiently—patiently on this side of the House—have the twenty-four of us who were here last time and twenty-four of us returned this time, had to conduct the affairs of this province until twelve thirty, quarter to one, or one o'clock in the morning. And the impatience came, Mr. Speaker, from that side of the Chamber. It always did.

Though people were tired, yet they were conscious of their responsibility, and in order to analyze the matters presented to them and to obtain a detailed examination of the conduct of various departments of government, they had to sit here until the small hours of the morning.

The hon. Prime Minister, and his predecessor before him, would sit comfortably slumped in their chairs, every once in a while managing a yawn as the Minister in charge of the department would continue to answer queries and questions and meet objections that came from this side of the House. Well, the theme of the election was more of the same, was it not? More of the same. Yes, that was the theme.

I watched that telegenic personality on the square eye—the hon. gentleman from London—I watched him carefully, he was on television more than we were, more than I was, and his message was “more of the same.” Now in connection with the same hon. gentleman to whom I have referred I have noticed in the time I have been studying him—and I study him carefully, I watch him—though a very successful man, that he has not much appetite for the parliamentary process. He has not much stomach for it. From the time that he assumed the leadership of the Conservative Party at the blood bath at Varsity Arena—

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. I would like to remind the hon. member again that we have an amendment before the House with some very specific matters mentioned in it, and I do not mind if the debate ranges a bit wide, but I do not want it to get too wide. It would be most appreciated by the chair if the hon. member would confine his remarks within the ambit of the amendment.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the main motion is open for debate. It has been amended and I have been trying to say to you, sir, because I know you are a patient, comprehending, very understanding and intelligent man, I was trying to say to you, sir, that the hon. leader of the government has not provided adequate time. He does not want to provide adequate time to discuss the affairs of the province because he has no appetite for the parliamentary process. And he would prefer with his colleagues on the Treasury benches, some of them I fear to depart soon, to govern the province in the absence of Parliament.

The hon. Minister of Labour gets up and reads a four-page statement, a statement that has inherent in it some of the most far-reaching implications for the trade union movement in this province regarding the intentions of the government. And we are not provided adequate time to discuss the implications of the actions that he proposes to take—actions that were once regretfully taken before in this House in connection with Hydro.

We would want to discuss the statement issued to the press by the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Cass) today about the securities business in this province—the committee he has just appointed to look into it. I cannot do that now because you have already demonstrated some degree of exasperation toward me, I cannot do that, but there is much in it.

One of the implications of the investigation of the securities business, of course, is that our raw material resource industries in the northern part of this province are in a state of decline. Let it be remembered—and I point this out to the hon. member for York South—that I come from a part of the province, the northeastern part of the province, where we at least ran even with our friends on the other side.

Myself, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy), the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Taylor), the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Farquhar) are four, and there are four from the northeast on that side, so at least we are even and not typical of the rest of the province.

Why is that? Because the northern part of the province is restless and anxious, with 2,200 laid off at INCO, 530 laid off at Falconbridge and Hollinger Mines closing down next year.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Nearly laid the hon. member off, too.

Mr. Sopha: Yes. These things do not concern the hon. Minister of Mines, the man who should be most responsible. He wants to treat them with levity.

Hollinger Mines, in the constituency of the hon. Minister from Cochrane South (Mr. Spooner), is to close down next year, it is announced. So is it any wonder, sir, that we complain that we do not have adequate time to discuss these problems? And even if we did, the hon. Prime Minister who moves this motion, this sinister motion, he knows that if he stands here in the House he has to face only us.

It is not like facing the television camera where he takes a check mark and says "Done" against medicare, and there is no medicare. He says "Done" against portable pensions and there are no portable pensions. But a television camera cannot argue with you, it cannot talk back. You just pay money into it.

If this session lasted longer we would want to ask something of the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler), whom we welcome to this House. He defeated a great man. We would want to ask him about this assistance from the insurance companies about which he spoke so gratefully.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Sopha: We would want to know to what extent it went.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Sopha: But the hon. leader of the Opposition spoke with accuracy and truth, when he said that the hon. Prime Minister does not want this Legislature in session in case the place on the order paper at Ottawa is reached where the Canada pension plan comes before the House of Commons.

What a state he would be in if they were debating it at Ottawa and here at the same time. Then he would have to tell the people of Ontario—because we would require him to—just to what extent this co-operation, this offer to co-operate with the federal government, goes. Because in the election campaign he never spelled it out.

Now, as I told the hon. Minister of Mines in the last Legislature, I cannot stop to contribute to his education. I cannot do it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member talked for three hours and the majority was reduced—

Mr. Sopha: Well, I am still here. Still here, and conscious of the fact that the 31 of us represent 52 per cent of the people of Ontario. And finally, Mr. Speaker—you will be delighted at that word, that adverb, "finally", and finally—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member desperately needs applause.

Mr. Sopha: Well, my hon. friend from York South, when we next meet I am going to calculate the number of ridings that the presence of an NDP candidate meant—the election of one of them over there.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the hon. member should just consider how many Tories were elected by the Liberals' campaign tactics.

Mr. Sopha: CCF used to stand for, and still does: the "Conservatives' Constant Friend." The hon. Prime Minister owes his position in the House to the presence of the hon. member for York South, and I would like to move sometime that, like the splinter parties at Ottawa, they give him an extra $4,000 because they owe it to him.

Finally, in the last House, Mr. Speaker, there were only 71 and now there are 77, so I proffer a word of advice to my hon. colleagues who have not spoken. To face the 77 all you have to do is stand here and dig your heels in the rug and look them in the eye; that is all you have to do. And they waver, they waver.

Our protest in this amendment is only this: we consider the government of the province of Ontario to be a very serious business. We consider it to be a more serious business than does the hon. Prime Minister and his hon. colleagues, and we say that we insist upon the opportunity to sit in this Legislature and to review very searchingly, analytically and with the utmost responsibility according to our conscience, the matters that affect the livelihood and the future of the people of this province. And we cannot do it—we cannot do it if the Chamber is darkened and the Legislature has been disbanded and has been sent away.

The Treasury bench and the hon. Prime Minister know that. They all know that. We have the right, we assert, to sit here with this Legislature going, and you in your place, Mr. Speaker, and have these matters that affect our people in this province presented to us in orderly fashion, reviewed with decorum and dignity as mature individuals. For those reasons, put simply in a fashion that all hon. members can comprehend, we are going to vote for this amendment and against the main motion.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief in my remarks. As the hon. leader of our party has indicated, we will support the amendment before the House. There is one portion of the amendment that the people in this province are very expectant of; that is in relation to the increase in the old age assistance pension and the disablement pensions. Certainly I expected, as did many people in my riding, that this subject would be dealt with during this session. It appears now, in the statement from the hon. Prime Minister, that it necessitates special initiation to bring about an increase in the old age pension, the old age assistance and disablement pension in this province.

In the past I do not remember this House taking any action to increase the old age assistance pensions or the disablement pensions. Maybe my recollection is wrong, but certainly if this is the case, to delay until we have a spring session is nothing but a shame, and is discrimination against the many thousands receiving the old age assistance pension and the old age disablement pension in this province.

In my opinion, the hon. Prime Minister erred in his answer to the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party that we have to wait for federal action before we can take action in this province. I would expect a review of the legislation by the hon. Prime Minister as to whether or not these people have to wait three or four or five months before they receive the increase from the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before you put the question there are several things I might mention here. First of all, I will deal with the last question—

Mr. Speaker: I would like to remind the hon. member that as the main motion was a substantive motion, the Prime Minister has the authority to speak; and besides he has not spoken to the amendment as yet.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In regard to the question of pensions, it does not require legislation. That is the first answer to the question raised by the hon. member for Wentworth East. Secondly, before we move, Mr. Speaker, we want to know what the federal government is going to do, because it is a shared programme and we could not put our half of it into effect without the federal government moving. We are presently corresponding with them to find out what in fact they intend to do, and whether we are in session or not, these negotiations will take place with them in order that—

Mr. MacDonald: Would the hon. Prime Minister permit a question here?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: There is a point here that is apparently being raised now. Can we not increase the pension and the federal government automatically meets a certain percentage of it?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Speaker, we can do that with widows' allowances only. We cannot do it with old age assistance. Hon. members must differentiate between the old age pension—or old age security, I suppose it is at present—old age assistance, disabled assistance and the blind pensions and widows' allowances. On the widows' allowances programme, I believe we can increase and the federal government would automatically have to follow. On the old age security, the top level is $75 and it is their responsibility entirely. The other programmes are shared. In their legislation they have increased only old age security, which is the top level. We are presently attempting to find out what their intention is in regard to the other levels in order that we can make up our minds what we are going to do.

Mr. Speaker, I would say in listening to some of the remarks that have been made things have not changed much. Ever since I have had the honour of standing in this seat it has been a constant attempt of the Opposition of both parties to prove me to be arrogant, this old question about no regard for the Legislature. I honestly think it goes back to the days of the pipeline debate in the House of Commons when the Liberal Party was brought down for behaving in this fashion. It was such a successful manoeuvre on the part of the Conservatives that this party here have adopted it as their own and seek to do the same thing in this Legislature.

Of course, nothing could possibly be farther from the truth. I do not know how many times I have stood in this seat and said that as far as I am concerned, I will stay here until the business of the people of the province of Ontario is done. This sounds trite, but I am forced to say it about every three days, in order to answer these perpetual allegations of arrogance, hurry, push. I can just tell hon. members opposite, their previous leader last April came to me and asked me to speed up the business of the House in order that we could complete by Easter. I said it could not matter less, I will stay here until July. We did not finish by Easter, but I was asked to speed it up so that we could.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it does not ride very well with me to hear these comments about arrogance.

Certainly I said it would take about two and a half hours. That remark was based upon an examination of Hansard in which

I noticed in other special sessions where the procedure had been held for the purpose of a special session.

Now introducing this motion, I told the House what a special session was. A special session is a very normal occurrence in the life of this Legislature. It is designed to do certain things and certain things only. Because we are gathered together here for the first time after an election, I was prepared to breach the rule and allow some free discussion and this I have done, but that does not mean that this is a full session in which I am attempting to limit in any way the right of the hon. members to speak.

It means, indeed, the exact opposite. This is a special session where all discussion in this House today should be limited to the specific items that are in the Speech from the Throne. There should be no more discussion of anything if we adhered to the firm rule as established in this House concerning a special session.

I was not prepared to do that, I allowed the questions to be asked. I have allowed the latitude of debate on this motion, and of course for this, Mr. Speaker, I am going to be criticized. Well, that is all right. I still think I am correct that when we are gathered together here, even in a special session, there should be some opportunity for these remarks to be made.

In regard to the timing of the bill for which we are here, really for which this special session was called, that bill comes into effect on October 31 and this is October 29 and we want this legislation passed so that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) can have the power to enter into an agreement with the board set up under the Act that has been passed by the Parliament of Canada in order that we may get on with the provision of these funds to the municipalities of this province. It is designed to create work in the winter time and that agreement will come into effect the day after tomorrow and we want to be able to take advantage of it.

Now I told the people of this province we would meet at the first possible moment. I could have called a session yesterday, that was the earliest. So I called it one day late. And I called it right now to get this legislation passed before that bill comes into effect—the federal bill—tomorrow, in order that we may take our proper place in dealing with the federal government.

If hon. members opposite can tell me any other way I could do it, I would like to know what it is.

Now then let us deal with the whole question of fall sessions. My position in this is very clear, indeed. I have spoken about it several times in the House. And of course this business of the public accounts committee, I was quite amused by the references to this. I set up a public accounts committee last year which I thought could function, but the Opposition members said: "We will not attend it," and that is the record of that committee. I will set it up again.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I have the newspaper clippings, I can document what I say.

Now then, I want to speak about the fall sessions and I am not—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, when I was going to deal with the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), he cannot resist personal remarks. I have listened to them for some time now and I will assure him before we start the four years which we will be here, that I have a pretty thick skin. If he wants to keep on making personal remarks, they are not going to bother me particularly. If that will have any influence on his decision as to whether to continue making these remarks or not, but I just point that out to him.

In regard to the fall sessions, I have heard remarks over the years about these deals which were supposed to have been made. I have no knowledge of them. My interest here is to operate this Legislature in the most efficient way in which I can in order to accomplish the business of the province of Ontario. That is my only motivation. This business about the various pay increases over the years and how long we sat: I have had a statistical record prepared just so that we may all understand just what has happened here recently. We go back to 1959, and this was the session prior to the election of 1959. It started in January and continued until March, sitting 43 days. In 1960 we got up to 50 days. In 1960-61 we got 60 days. In 1961-62, 54 days, it dropped back six. Last year, 67 days, which is the heaviest time we have had.

Now we had fall sessions in 1960-61, 1961-62 and 1962-63. These are the last three sessions. In each of these sessions, the fall session lasted for 17 days and I can assure hon. members that there was a great deal—there are civil servants in these buildings who will tell the hon. members that getting ready for a fall session is a very difficult matter, indeed. It is just not as simple as saying we will now walk into the Legislature and sit for four hours every afternoon and three or four hours every second or third night.

But I note that in those three years the fall session in each case lasted for 17 days. I also note the session of January, that is the opening of the spring portion of the session, started on January 24 in 1961, February 20 in 1962 and on February 5, 1963. Those dates are of some interest because as I have said publicly and I said in this House, that I had misgivings about the fall sessions. I said publicly that it would be my intent to open the Legislature early in January. If hon. members put these figures together they will find that I can pick up 17 days—if this is what we are after, which in fact I am not—if hon. members want to put it in terms of fall sessions, I can pick up 17 days in January and dispense with the fall sessions. I could have done this in any one of these three years; we could have sat in January instead of sitting between November and December. One year we adjourned on December 16; another year on December 15, and another year on December 19. And I might say that one of the difficulties with a fall session is that when approaching the middle of December, human nature being what it is, people are not thinking about things here, they are thinking of things elsewhere.

Now there is one other thing. There has always been a tradition here—and I am sure it derives from the days when the hon. members, or a majority of them, were from rural areas—there has always been a tradition that we would finish by Easter. I believe, as I look at the history of this Legislature in our province, that it comes about from the days when the majority of the members were rural. They wanted to sit after the harvest was gathered in the fall and the winter work was done, and get out again before they started to work on the land in the spring.

Now these things have changed as our province has developed and I see no reason whatsoever why we should have to adjourn before Easter. I have made this comment publicly before, too. It would be my intent to sit early in January, not wait until the end of January or February as we have done in years past. We will regain all the time we spend on the fall sessions, in the month of January, so as of February 1, we will have done the same amount of work as if we had had a fall session.

Then we demonstrated quite effectively last year, in my opinion anyway, that an Easter recess is just as gratefully received by everyone here as the Christmas recess. Then if it is necessary for the Legislature to resume after Easter we will do so, and we will not be pressed by any date beyond that, if we want to continue.

There is an absolute phobia in some people's minds concerning the fall session. I am aware of no deal or no commitments that there would be fall sessions. I always considered it to be an experiment. I understand, if we search back in history, that it was tried in the 1890's some time and then abandoned, perhaps for different reasons.

Personally I do not think the fall session has worked very well, and from my conversations I would say the majority of hon. members on all sides of the House agree with me in this regard. We can take just as many days, but I do not intend to measure the business of this province in days of sitting. I would rather measure it in work accomplished, and it does not matter to me whether we sit for 30 days or 60 days, I am interested in whether we have done what we started out to do, even though the hon. member for Sudbury does not like that term "done".

And I would say this: If we try it and it proves to be not satisfactory we can look around and try something else. But regardless of what the hon. member for York South may say, there are difficulties in organizing a fall session that is productive.

Committees were mentioned and I intend to take a complete look at the whole function of committees. We have discussed this many times before, and I would hope by the time we meet in January that we will be able to come up with a better procedure to handle the work of all our standing committees in the House.

Mr. Sopha: Will the hon. Prime Minister keep all the important legislation until the last ten days—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, all legislation is important. I do not think the first bill is more important than the last bill or any in the middle, it is all important.

Mr. Sopha: The ones the hon. Minister checked "done" on the television, they were more important.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Can that possibly be interpreted as a question, Mr. Speaker?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would remind the hon. members again that if they have a question to ask of the person who is speaking, that they address their question to the chair and not across the floor of the House. Now I am going to enforce that ruling this year in our proceedings and I hope that we can get off to a proper start today. I do want to impress this upon all the hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, what we are doing, in effect, is simply moving the fall session from the latter part of November to the first half of January. We are just moving it forward about three weeks really into the first three weeks of January. Now if hon. members look upon what we are doing in that light, they will see that all this discussion about a fall session and that it is important and so on, makes a very interesting debate on the first day of a new Legislature, but in fact has very little merit at all. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say that we will have to vote against this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I shall read the amendment before the House:

Moved by Mr. Oliver, seconded by Mr. Sopha, that all the words after "that" in the main motion be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

This House regrets the failure of the government to place before us at this time a comprehensive programme of government actions to deal with such important problems as pensions, medical care, education, municipal reform, and regrets the failure to provide adequate time to deal with the many important problems facing the people of Ontario.

As many as are in favour of the amendment will please say "aye".

As many as are opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1963

The House met at 10 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves, seconded by hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs), that a select committee of this House be appointed to inquire into and review The Municipal Act of the province and related Acts, including The Assessment Act, The Department of Municipal Affairs Act, The Local Improvement Act, The Ontario Municipal Board Act, The Planning Act and the regulations made thereunder for the purposes of modernizing, consolidating and simplifying such Acts and regulations making such recommendations as may be necessary for their improvement and continuing the work of the select committee of the preceding Parliament appointed for the same purposes.

And that the select committee have authority to sit during the interval between sessions and have full power and authority to call for persons, papers and things and to examine witnesses under oath, and the Assembly doth command and compel attendance before the committee of such persons and the production of such papers and things as it may deem necessary for any of its proceedings and deliberations, for which purpose the hon. Speaker may issue his warrant or warrants.

The said committee will consist of nine members, as follows: Mr. Beckett, chairman; Messrs. Brunelle, Cowling, Evans, Gomme, Gordon, McNeil, Singer, and Young.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the motion carries, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) if he can foresee the day when this committee will have terminated its work. They have now been two or three years, I understand, at this task, and there is no indication as to when their deliberations will result in a final report to the government and to the Legislature.

What is this committee supposed to be—a continuing committee that goes on and on and on? Or have we the right to expect that at some given date they will have concluded their deliberations and have presented their report to the government in the Legislature?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a comment, a question and a suggestion that I wanted to make. Perhaps I can throw it in now and the hon. Prime Minister can deal with both of them at the same time.

My first comment I suspect is somewhat along the lines that the hon. leader of the Opposition has just suggested, Mr. Speaker. Namely, raising some doubt as to the effectiveness of this committee to do the job that has been spelled out in the terms of reference.

I hesitate to comment too harshly on the work of a committee of which I have not been a member, but I know that members of the committee, certainly hon. members on the Opposition side of the House, have on a number of occasions raised the question of whether or not this committee was really achieving the purpose for which it was established—a purpose which the hon. Prime Minister this morning sums up as modernizing, consolidating and simplifying The Municipal Act and related Acts.

I think we might as well face the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the committee has not achieved the purpose. And I think it may not have achieved its purpose because it may not be the correct kind of body to achieve this purpose.

I think the task that has been given to this committee is essentially a technical task—to go through all the various sections of not only The Municipal Act, which heaven knows is long enough, but also through many other Acts, and consolidate them.

In my opinion, a committee made up of people—and let us be frank about it for the moment—who are politicians, and who cannot escape some of the impulses of politicians, is not the appropriate body to do that kind of technical job. Therefore, I wonder whether we have not got the wrong kind of group tackling this job. I agree, and I am certain there is unanimity on this, that there is a desperate and an urgent need to modernize and streamline this horse-and-buggy legislation that we have; because it is essentially horse-and-buggy, even though we have added to it year by year throughout the last 100 years.

The suggestion I want to raise with the hon. Prime Minister is whether or not the committee pursues this function. They have not, in my view, been too successful up until now.

It seems to me there is another function for which this kind of committee is peculiarly suited, to at least tackle in the first instance. There is an increasing amount of talk at the present time about the need for larger units of administration in the municipal field. Indeed, events and modern needs are pressing larger units of administration until, if I may just remind the House: We have, for example, regional conservation authorities; and we have regional development associations. We have larger school units, particularly the district high schools. We have regional health units. We have regional welfare offices. Just last week Judge MacDonald of the police commission referred to the ineffectiveness of small police forces in small municipalities and suggested that the job could be done by the OPP or, as quoted in the Toronto Telegram, he said the only alternative was larger county police forces and amalgamation of existing local police departments. In other words, this is a common characteristic.

All of this is leading, in the view of people who live in the municipal field, towards regional municipal government. I was also very interested, if I can make the basic point that I want in reference to this committee, to note a comment made last week at a convention of the Ontario Association of Urban and Rural Municipalities. Dr. Mayo, head of the political science department of the University of Western Ontario, told that convention that, and I am quoting as reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail:

If regional government is to happen it will only be brought to life by action of the provincial government.

None of us in this House, whether an old or a new member, has any illusion about the political difficulties in coming to grips with this, and yet events are driving us in this direction. Is not this a highly appropriate topic to refer to a select committee made up of people who have to live in the political world, who are coping with this out-of-date legislation, to examine the whole question? Perhaps, in the first instance, they could discuss the desirability of moving towards regional government, and how you can get larger units without getting inefficient overlapping. But at least they could examine this problem and bring back to the House something that we, in this Legislature, might consider, so that we can, as a provincial government, give a lead to the need for the establishment and for the realization of regional government in this province.

In summation, Mr. Speaker, I am asking the hon. Prime Minister—since he has apparently decided, and since this is decided, I doubt whether it is going to be reversed, that the committee will be established to pursue its old task—whether it cannot be given the new task for which I think it is more suited: to examine ways and means of effectively establishing larger units of administration as we move towards regional government municipality in this province.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, my views in connection with this committee I have made known to the House in previous sessions. I have had grave doubts about the efficiency and the ability of the nine politicians to do this job. I share the views expressed by my hon. leader and by the hon. member for York South and I just wonder if we are going in the right direction in connection with this committee.

The mechanical job of culling the sections from the thousands of pages of municipal statutes really cannot be competently done by a group of politicians. I have suggested in this House previously, and I say again, Mr. Speaker: This is a job that should be done by a group of experts which could and should be set up by The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Those experts could come from a variety of sources. One could come from The Department of Municipal Affairs; one could come from the academic field, from one of the universities; one could be a practical man who holds an elected office in one of the municipalities; one could be a senior civil servant in one of the municipalities.

This sort of a group could and should, to my mind, Mr. Speaker, be designated by the government and be given the task for a year, or two years or three years; having nothing else to do, not being politicians the rest of the time. They should be taken from what they are presently doing and assigned the mechanical task of putting together this maze of confusion that has gathered itself over a period of 110 or 112 years.

Mr. Speaker, this government has downgraded The Department of Municipal Affairs. No better example of the downgrading can be shown than the fact that the department has had three separate Ministers in the period of a year; and none of them, until perhaps the present one, really expected that he was anything more than either on the way up or on the way down. In any event, he was on the way through—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): He was in the bush.

Mr. Singer: I commend the present hon. Minister (Mr. Spooner), Mr. Speaker. I think he has approached his task with some vim and vigour and with the thought in his mind, in any event, that perhaps he was going to be there for a day or two.

There has been an interim report of this committee. It runs some 150 pages. I was not pleased with that report, Mr. Speaker, and I did not sign it. I did not sign it because I did not like many of the things the committee was doing and I did not think the committee was properly orientated. But we have not heard a word from the government as to whether or not any one of those recommendations in the report is acceptable to the government or not acceptable to the government.

Where are we going in municipal affairs? And are we really going to achieve anything in holding another period of meetings—days and days and weeks and weeks of meetings?

Somebody sits and reads The Local Improvement Act. Section one says—Now what do you think of that, members of the committee? And section two says—And what do you think of that, members of the committee? And then a week later we get a group in and they say we do not like the way the business tax is set up. So we sit and we think about business tax and receive a whole group of delegations, and finally we emerge with some sort of a suggestion, whether unanimous or not, and it goes to the government.

We have not heard a word from the government as to whether they think the suggestions are good or bad. Is this just a method of passing away this horrible problem of outdated and antiquated municipal legislation, so that the government will not have to do anything about it?

I have grave doubts about what results this committee is going to produce and I would like some assurance from the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs that if this committee is reconstituted, and apparently the government made its decision and it is going to be reconstituted, that there be some direction in which the committee is likely to move that will produce some good for the people of Ontario. To my mind, the two years that this committee have already sat have been thoroughly wasted. More of the same is going to do nothing else except provide the government with a convenient cubby hole in which to park the horrible question of municipal reforms.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, to deal with these comments in the order in which they came. First there will be a time limit on the function of this committee and I am informed that the chairman, who unfortunately is not here today to speak for himself, apparently has informed the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs that he thinks he will complete this year. However, when I see what this committee has done to date and, despite the comments of my hon. friend from—I have got to learn some new riding names here—the comments of my hon. friend from Downsview, I think this committee has quite a function.

He sloughs off in a very cavalier fashion the representations that have been made to this committee by 403 citizens of the province of Ontario and sort of intimates that it does not matter. I think it matters a great deal.

The technical revision of any statute must perforce be within a department and it must be done by the technicians of the department but this committee—I have a note of what they have done—had a total of 64 briefs received from interested groups in this province who want to make their opinions known. Those opinions are examined by this committee and then sent on by the committee to the government.

There have been two interim reports, both of which are being examined and studied by the technical people in the department presently. I fail to see how—

Mr. Singer: The first one only says, "Let us sit again."

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The second report—

Mr. Singer: The first one says—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That was presented on February 23, 1962 and then another report, the second interim report, concentrated on proposed changes in connection with The Assessment Act, The Municipal Act, The Planning Act, The Local Improvement Act, The Municipal Franchise Extension Act, The Voters' List Act.

Mr. MacDonald: What action is the government taking on that?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, we had amendments last year to The Local Improvement Act. We had amendments to The Drainage Act and the results of the submissions that are made to this committee are taken into consideration.

This is the way the government is able to find out what the thinking of the people is; therefore, I think you are confusing two things. I think you are confusing the function of a select committee which is set up to take and hear representations from interested groups in the province, examine these, and make recommendations to the government. You are confusing that function with the actual function of taking a piece of legislation and doing the technical work of making revisions in it section by section. That work will have to be done by the experts in the department but they will be guided by the expressions of opinion coming before a committee such as this.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the query from the hon. leader of the Opposition as to when this commission might complete its work, I say it is reaching the end; but I will point out to you in this report I have from the chairman that he says, since the second interim report was submitted the committee has studied the following statutes: The Conservation Authorities Act, The Department of Municipal Affairs Act, The Ontario Municipal Board Act, The Municipal Franchises Act, The Public Parks Act, The Public Utilities Act, The Statute of Labour Act, and so on and so on.

So there is a good deal of examination, Mr. Speaker, which has taken place that will have to come forward in a further report; and then he does list some other Acts the committee wishes to look at.

Of course I recognize that this whole question of municipal organization is one of great complexity. We have a Royal commission sitting studying Metropolitan Toronto alone and no doubt from the findings of that commission will come things which will affect areas of the province other than Metro.

It is not my opinion that this committee can do this whole task. I am quite certain it cannot. On the other hand, we are providing here a forum whereby people, municipalities and organizations in the province who are interested in these problems—who have opinions to give and who are close to it working day by day—we are providing them with a forum to which they can come and submit their ideas. These ideas, I can assure hon. members, as they go through the committee and are brought to the government in the form of recommendations, play a large part in the revisions that are being made in the various statutes governing our municipalities.

With regard to the hon. member for York South and his comment, Mr. Speaker, it may very well be that some other form of attack on this problem will have to be made in addition to this commission. I would simply say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not look upon this committee as the end-all and be-all of the approach to reform in our municipal system; so that his suggestion that either the terms of reference of this committee be changed or that possibly another committee be set up, or that indeed some different approach entirely be taken, I think is quite valid. But I would point out to him that we are not expecting this committee to do the entire task. It has one function which is part of the whole as we move towards the revision to bring our municipal legislation and organization up to date as we go along.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves, seconded by hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General) that:

a select committee of the House be appointed to examine into, study and report on all matters relating to the actual cost of credit to consumers, such as instalment purchasers, borrowers and mortgagors in the province of Ontario and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the committee's attention is particularly directed to investigation of means by which total charges for borrowing money may be revealed in regard to land mortgages, chattel mortgages, conditional sales agreements, credit retail purchases and similar transactions and continuing the work of the select committee of the preceding Parliament appointed for the same purposes.

And that the select committee shall consist of eleven members and shall have authority to sit during the interval between sessions, and have full power and authority to appoint or employ counsel and secretary and such other personnel as may be deemed advisable and to call for persons, papers and things and to examine witnesses under oath and the Assembly doth command and compel attendances before the said select committee of such persons and the production of such papers and things as the committee may deem necessary for any of its proceedings and deliberations, for which purpose the honourable Speaker may issue his warrant or warrants.

The membership of the committee to be as follows: Mr. Price, chairman; Messrs. Belanger, Bukator, Hamilton, A. F. Lawrence, Letherby, MacDonald, Noden, Reilly, Sandercock and White.

Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Sopha: Perhaps the government would indulge us by informing us how far in its opinion this committee can go in making inquiry into these matters from the constitutional point of view.

One observes that the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence), if his constituency has not changed, spent a good deal of his time at the sessions of the committee commenting about the limitation imposed upon the activities of the committee by the terms of The British North America Act. Certainly it is open to question, in view of the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in reference to The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act, a statute of this province some 50 years old, as to what this committee can accomplish when these matters apparently are within the purview of the federal government. Evidently the hon. member for St. George thought so.

Another matter that comes to one's attention is that as a result of the endeavours of this committee acting within the framework of legislation of this House, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Cass) made some moves, or officials in this department acting under his authority made some moves, to discipline some people. It was not quite clear from the press reports just what they had done, perhaps nothing beyond the cancellation of their mortgage brokers' licences under that Act. I think, Mr. Speaker, I am correct in saying that.

Third, one observes that one has heard that at one time the hon. Attorney-General's department launched an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada concerning the validity of The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act, but one has not—though one follows the press very closely—one has not read what the outcome of that was, whether that court was pleased to reverse the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal.

But mainly, Mr. Speaker, I think we are entitled to know what the government's views are about the extent of the activities of this committee without trespassing in fields that are of no concern of this Legislature under the present constitutional framework.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I happen to be a member of this committee and on this occasion I can speak with personal knowledge.

With reference to the point that the hon. member for Sudbury has raised, it is my understanding that it is one of the functions of this committee, to ascertain how far within our provincial jurisdiction this government can go in coming to grips with this problem. Indeed we have heard from counsel, I believe from the hon. Attorney-General's department and certainly from outside counsel, and the committee has been provided with the services of a very distinguished counsel, Mr. Joseph Sedgewick, who is going to assist us. I am certain, in trying to come to some clear picture as to what if anything the provincial government can do in this field, other than to enforce disclosure.

So as far as that is concerned, I think that is our job.

However, there is one other aspect of this committee that I want to raise, particularly in light of some of the statements that were made during the election campaign. I think it is accurate to state that few if any committees established by this Legislature has ever received as much publicity as this committee has. The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that it received publicity in disclosing the really shameful exploitation of people who are operating under licence provided by the provincial government and that the provincial government could not help but be aware of. We have not revealed anything that was not known.

Indeed, all the provincial government need have done is to have sat down with a very able civil servant, whose task is to administer this particular Act, Mr. V. J. Simone, and listen to his story. Why they had not done something a long time ago about what is in my view nothing less than legalized robbery, I do not know. We had cases being brought before the committee that just spelled it out. Mr. Simone was the man who was bringing the cases. He was the administrator and he was frankly saying that he did not have the power, or he did not have sufficient backing, to really come to grips with these people who are engaged in legalized robbery.

The next point that I want to draw to the attention of the House is that during the course of the campaign, at least insofar as reports in the newspapers are concerned, there were spokesmen from the government side of the House saying that the government had certain things that they were going to bring in. This was a commitment, it was a promise to the electors of the province of Ontario. Now, Mr. Speaker, if this committee is being re-established, I think this committee is entitled to know from the government what it proposes to do.

One of the rather disturbing and peculiar things that happens around this Legislature is that a select committee is set up and before it finishes its job the government starts to enact some of the things the select committee might recommend, or ultimately does recommend. In other words, it usurps the job that the committee has been given.

Now in this instance if we are going to be sent off to continue to examine this whole field, I think we are entitled to know what the government is planning to do. At least then we can examine it and we can come to some conclusions. We will not be operating in a vacuum and we can suggest to the government as to whether their specific proposals are, in our view, completely valid or whether they might not be amended in some fashion.

I do this for a reason to which the hon. member for Sudbury has alluded. In this committee, Mr. Speaker, I think we were treated to about as brazen a display of politicking from one of the members, the hon. member for St. George, that I have ever seen in a select committee.

In the first instance, Mr. V. J. Simone came before the committee and he presented the story of the difficulties he has in administering this legislation and he found himself the butt of abuse—browbeating is perhaps the more accurate term—along this line. Said the hon. member for St. George: Mr. Simone is exceeding his powers, he has no power at all to examine the interest rate that is being charged, this is beyond our jurisdiction in the province of Ontario.

Let me say this to the credit of Mr. Simone, he did not bat an eyelash, he just came right back and his comment was to the effect that anybody administering this Act who did not take a look at the interest rate that was being charged and do something about it if the interest rate was exorbitant, was not worth his salt. So at least for a moment, it seemed, we had stopped the hon. member for St. George. However the publicity that he got because of this little sally apparently was not too good in his view on the eve of an election. So what happened, Mr. Speaker? Within about two or three weeks he did a complete flip-flop and he came before the committee and tried to prematurely push us into making an interim report to get the government to do something they can do any time, namely withdraw the licence of one of these men who had been guilty of something like 87 per cent interest charges.

I think I am correct that this man or one other man, had said to Mr. Simone in one of his many exchanges in which he tried to get them to operate in a civilized fashion; he had said rather exasperatingly: Give me another 18 months and I will have made my million and I will get out of the field. This is the kind of attitude they have.

But having first chastized Mr. Simone, while the committee was sitting, the hon. member for St. George tries to push us into a premature report to get the department to do something about taking the licence away. Now that was bad enough. I am not so naive as to expect that when there is a committee made up of politicians there is not going to be some politics played. I find it a little thick—

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): The hon. member would not do that.

Mr. MacDonald: No, of course not!

I find it a little thick when in a matter of two months they play politics in completely opposite directions. This is trying, as the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) says, to suck and whistle at the same time, to talk out of both sides of your mouth, to play both ends against the middle. This is the hon. member's analogy.

However, I raise all this because I am sure the House will be interested in it, just by way of a little interlude.

Having done this, having tried to get the committee to move—and it did not move—with a lot of the Tories in agreement as well as the Opposition members, and it did not move in part because of the advice from Mr. Joseph Sedgewick, our distinguished counsel, on September 9, the hon. member for St. George put out a confidential, not-for-publication memorandum to the Queen's Park press gallery and Toronto city editors.

This will be, Mr. Speaker, very enlightening—I am certain for the new hon. members it will be most enlightening.

Re mortgage interest investigations—I shall quote this throughout without any comments until I get to the end:

It may well be within the next few days and certainly before September 25 that the government and the Attorney-General Fred Cass will be announcing certain appointments in matters so that specific government action will be forthcoming as a result of the recent mortgage interest rate disclosures and stories. It will be warmly appreciated if in these stories and the background thereto you could at least give "credit mention", no pun intended, to the fact that it was my effort and my demand and in great part my argument presented to the Premier and the Attorney-General which sparked government consideration and government action in the matter.

As background, you may remember that when the revelations of 87 per cent and 111 per cent interest rates came up before the select committee on the cost of credit, of which I was a member, I asked the committee to recommend hearings be immediately held by the Attorney-General in the matter of the licences of certain Toronto mortgage brokers. The committee, with full backing of the Liberal and NDP members, decided not to so recommend to the government.

As a private member of the Legislature, I then asked the government to take action and I presented certain arguments and facts to the Attorney-General who subsequently announced the government action to be taken along the very lines I suggested. If the Attorney-General now makes any announcement of any specific action, I would appreciate your working my name and effort into the story.

Regards to all. Al Lawrence.

Now there is a cold deal, lovey-dovey little document if I ever heard one.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Truly a great man.

Mr. MacDonald: But I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that he tried to play politics with putting us on the spot when in effect the eight Progressive-Conservative hon. members agreed with us that this was premature and he was in his characteristic fashion kicking over the traces. True he had approached the hon. Attorney-General to do something, but he approached him on one line of action he himself had been arguing against and said was beyond our jurisdiction a little bit earlier and so on.

Now I am raising all of this, Mr. Speaker, to present my question to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in the hope that we might be able to escape some, at least, of the excesses of the politicking on this issue in the committee. If the government had come to some decisions, as the news reports indicated during the election campaign, as to what it is going to do, does the hon. Prime Minister not consider that it is a fair proposition that this committee should be given at least an indication of what the government has tentatively concluded should be done, so we can then examine it and not be working in a vacuum and give the government the benefit of our considered views, so that it might come up with even more effective legislation when it finally acts?

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, instead of wasting the time of the House in replying in detail to this monumental case of sour grapes that we have heard from the hon. member for York South, may I say that I will certainly take the opportunity in the committee to reply to these things if he so desires at that time. But in his attempts to place his interpretation on my earlier argument with Mr. Simone, which I still stand behind, I think he knows what he is saying is an unfair and untrue interpretation of my words.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): I sat on that committee too and I must agree with some of the comments that were made here.

The hon. member for St. George did cross-examine Mr. Simone in such a way that I felt was not quite right by way of cross-examining a civil servant who came to us with information. I did question his comments at that time and he did apologize to the gentleman, it is in the record. He said he was sorry, maybe he should not have gone in that direction—and so that type of questioning would stop. It is in the records if hon. members want to check them.

There was a point made at that time that some people were paying two per cent per month for second mortgages and the hon. member for St. George again said that if he could not have obtained that kind of money he might not have had his home today, it is quite in order and not against the law.

There was an about-face with hon. members of that committee, especially the hon. member for St. George, who said then this is a shame and a disgrace, people should not be paying that rate of interest. Then he did make a statement to the press in the hall. I thought it a little bit unethical, Mr. Speaker.

We, as a committee, were trying to come to conclusions, something that would help the people of the province, something that would be revealing, and we wanted disclosure of the true rate of interest. I think this is the conclusion that we will come to, I hope we will, so people will know what they are paying for their money.

He then made a statement to the press because the committee did not agree with him; and if we are going to play politics to that extent, I, too, would like to get into that game. I am quite capable of it, as you know. I have done a comparatively good job in Niagara Falls in the last month or two, and I intend to play the game exactly as it is played on that side of the House if they intend to do that.

But this will not bring to the public what we intend; and so I would suggest that members of committee should make their statements through the chairman, as we agreed; and an exceptionally good chairman he is too. Then perhaps we can get what we want out of this thing rather than playing politics; although for four years now we will not have to, and maybe we will give the public what they need and what they should have.

I think this committee is going to do a good job. I think this committee will reveal to the public that they have been taken.

Consumer credit? Yes. As a matter of fact you can go to Ottawa and note Senator Croll's bill; all he has been trying to do for three or four years is bring to the public one fact and one fact only, and that is the true rate of interest—what the people are paying for the money that they borrow to purchase certain items. If we come up with that answer and at least let the public know what they are paying for money, I think we will have done a good job.

I might say in passing that I believed then and I believe now that a good look should be taken at the possibility of the government going into second mortgages. This would eliminate a lot of these high handers who are taking the public without regard. I hope we come to that conclusion.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, as far as the committee is concerned, re the remarks made by the hon. member for Sudbury, the committee is charged with all the powers that are in the motion. It has counsel of its own; it can be advised as to any question of constitutionality; it can obtain any legal advice it likes. In other words, it is an emanation from this House with all the powers that this House has; and all the powers are very broad indeed. So I say that the committee, within itself, has power to do what it takes; and I would also agree with the hon. member for York South that while this body may not have power to deal with certain matters on a constitutional basis, nonetheless this committee is set up to investigate.

One of the things it has already done is to bring to the attention of people—I have no doubt many people have examined the rates of interest they are paying as a result of the deliberations and the actions of this committee, where before they were just paying a lump sum payment once a week or once a month and really did not know what percentage was in fact interest. Therefore, I think the committee, even though it may wander into many fields over which this Legislature has no constitutional power, nonetheless, in bringing these things to the attention of the public, is performing a service. The other point of course, is that it is what one might term a sovereign body with very wide powers.

As for any action the government might take in connection with matters that might arise from the activities of the committee, I do not think it would be a very logical position to say that this government would be in any way bound not to take action until any select committee completed its hearings and filed its report should matters arise during the activities of the committee that obviously needed to be dealt with.

Certainly, as far as informing the committee of what is going on is concerned, this is purely a mechanical matter. I think they should be informed. They would probably know in any event, but perhaps some formal notification should be given to them that in the field they are studying certain action is going to be taken. I do not know whether that is really necessary but there would be no objection to it if we could devise some means of assuring that everything we did, whether it affected committees that were sitting or not—I mean, some of these things will happen inadvertently—but I cannot accept the proposition that this government is bound to take no action until a select committee has completed its investigations and filed its report.

I will ask the hon. Attorney-General to speak to the point about just what the government has done, because I am not aware of the details resulting from the sittings of this committee.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the political implications of this, I find it very highly amusing to hear politicians accusing politicians of playing politics.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, if I might confine myself then to the so-called technical side of this discussion, I would like to reiterate what the hon. Prime Minister has said which is, that certainly in the field we are now discussing it would be most unfortunate if the government were forced to await the final report and recommendations of a select committee when it is obvious from the public reports and other reports of a committee meeting that some action to protect the public or to aid the public is necessary.

At the last session of this House, Mr. Speaker, there were amendments to several Acts which fell under, and fall under, the jurisdiction of my department which provided for two things. The hon. members, Mr. Speaker, who were here last year will remember perhaps because it was discussed on several occasions.

First of all, it was felt that there were many laws in our province which provided an arbitrary power to suspend or cancel certain licences and thereby deprive people of our province of the right to their livelihood without them first having had an opportunity of explaining their position and justifying their actions. So in several areas at the last session of this House a law was amended to provide for a full hearing so that the party whose actions are being impugned could state his case and also provide for an appeal.

Among the amendments was one to The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act which provided that the superintendent of insurance, who presently is in charge of mortgage brokers and their registration, should have the power with the consent and advice of an advisory committee consisting of three members, to hear and deal with complaints about mortgage brokers.

The hon. members of this House, Mr. Speaker, will realize that it is desirable to have in such instance a very strong and representative committee and I know they will realize that you do not go out and pick them off the street. So for some time I was in negotiation with not only the mortgage brokers association but also with members of my profession eminent in the field of mortgages. Eventually I was able in the summer to provide for the superintendent of insurance names to form this committee. The superintendent of insurance was then in a position to deal with matters as they arose.

It was very interesting and fortunate that, at that particular time, almost all the press and other news media were full of information and discussions of the sittings and proceedings before the select committee on consumer credit. I would point out, as I have said earlier, that there were things there which indicated that the public needed some further protection and action, and that action was taken by the appropriate officials of my department. Without either assistance from the hon. member for St. George or the Attorney-General, the superintendent of insurance proceeded to have a hearing with the advisory committee into the suitability of certain people to hold registrations as mortgage brokers.

For the information of the House, one licence was surrendered rather than having it cancelled, and that man is out of business. A second one is now before the superintendent and the committee.

I will point out further what has been stated here on many occasions, that which the select committee knows well, that which the hon. member for Sudbury and the hon. member for York South have mentioned, our powers in this House with respect to this particular problem are limited. Even though the committee has access to the very good legal mind and great experience of counsel to the committee and also to any of the very able and experienced civil servant lawyers in The Department of the Attorney-General, we find it very difficult indeed to take the action which in many instances, as has been mentioned, one civil servant wished to take—the action which perhaps would appear best and most appropriate under the circumstances—because we do not have constitutional powers.

So with respect to these interest matters it is my own personal view, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of a great deal of what has been done by this committee and the publicity which has been given to it I am sure, as the hon. Prime Minister has said, many of our people have examined the contracts not only that they have signed but they have put in front of them when they wish to purchase something or borrow money.

I have had, Mr. Speaker, a large volume of mail from people who feel that they have been victimized and I can assure you that in most of these instances it either has been referred to the committee or some action has been possible through my department. With respect to future action: as far as the government is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister has given me leave and has suggested that I might tell the House that at the present time there is no future action which we can contemplate taking at the moment.

I must say that I look forward with interest and hope to the report of the select committee because I think in their wisdom and with the good advice which they can receive from counsel, from the people who appear before them and from the experienced members of my department, that we may be able to come to some conclusion and perhaps to ensure that the necessary action to protect the people of Ontario and the public at large in Canada can be taken both by this House and by that other jurisdiction wherein the power lies.

Mr. Sopha: Can the hon. Minister tell us what happened to—

Hon. Mr. Cass: Oh, I am sorry! Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is a question I would be glad to accept.

There has been no judgment handed down yet in that and we understand it is due to be handed down this fall.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one comment with regard to this committee. I am a member of the committee and I was quite surprised to find out the number of employees in the department which comes under this section—the department which comes under the hon. Attorney-General—the number of employees that they have to perform this terrific task across this province. There is the superintendent, the assistant to the superintendent and I understand, I think, about five other employees in the department to do the terrific amount of work that they have to do. They just cannot cope with the demands that are made upon them.

I am rather surprised to hear from the hon. Attorney-General that as far as future actions are concerned there are not going to be any future actions. I would say that one thing that they should do is to increase the number in the department so that they could function properly.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

CAPITAL WORKS

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to assist municipalities to finance capital works.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): This bill authorizes the Minister of Municipal Affairs, on behalf of the government of Ontario and with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, to enter into an agreement with the Municipal Development and Loan Board as contemplated in subsection (2) of section 7 of The Municipal Development and Loan Act of Canada.

The bill authorizes the Minister of Municipal Affairs to do two things, namely—

(i) to make the necessary arrangements to borrow money from the Municipal Development and Loan Board for the purpose of making loans to municipalities in accordance with the terms and conditions to be provided in an agreement to be executed between the Municipal Development and Loan Board and the province, and

(ii) to make loans to municipalities in respect of municipal projects in accordance with the terms and conditions of such an agreement.

The bill which is before you is the result of extended meetings and discussions between representatives of the government of Canada and of the provinces. The Municipal Development and Loan Act was given first reading by the House of Commons on June 17 of this year. The hon. members of the Legislature, I am sure, will recall that the Rt. Hon. Prime Minister of Canada convened a federal-provincial conference on July 26 and 27 to discuss the aims of the federal government with regard to this particular bill.

The original bill provided that the cost of only five different classes of municipal projects could be financed. As the result of the federal-provincial conference, the bill was amended to extend the definition of a municipal project to permit a municipality to finance the cost of any project for which a municipality is authorized under the statutes to borrow money and to include the financing of a project of an elementary or a secondary school board with respect to which a school board or a municipality has the authority to raise money by the issue of debentures.

Another major amendment to the original bill provided that the Municipal Development and Loan Board could, with the approval of the Governor in Council, enter into an agreement with any province to permit the province to administer the system of loans as contemplated under the original bill.

It is the opinion of the government of Ontario that it is to the advantage of the municipalities for the province to elect to enter into such an agreement. As the hon. members of the Legislature are aware, the financial and other administrative relationships between the province and the municipalities are very complex indeed. These financial and other administrative relationships are to be found in The Municipal Act and in The Ontario Municipal Board Act and have been developed over the years through the combined efforts of municipal officials, the financial and legal fraternities of Ontario, and the officers of the province. They were designed essentially to protect the credit of the municipalities and thereby the overall financial structure, not only of the municipalities, but of the province itself.

Because of the continuous flow of information between the municipalities on the one hand, The Department of Municipal Affairs and the Ontario Municipal Board on the other, and the fact that our municipal officials are familiar with the various agencies of the province, it was the decision of the government that the province of Ontario should elect to enter into an agreement, as provided for in subsection (2) of section 7 of The Municipal Development and Loan Act.

Let me assure hon. members of the Legislature that in negotiating the terms and conditions of the agreement to be entered into under the terms of this bill the government of Ontario has, and will, spare no efforts to provide for an administrative relationship between the province and the municipalities to govern this complex matter which will be as flexible and as effective as possible.

Let me now outline the principal terms and conditions upon which it is proposed that loans be made available by the province of Ontario to the municipalities, and the school boards.

Let me deal first with the purpose of the programme. As expressed in the title to The Municipal Development and Loan Fund Act the purpose of this federal-provincial municipal programme is to "promote increased employment in Canada by financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities and to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate municipal capital works programmes." The bill is designed to create additional employment by encouraging the municipalities to accelerate the construction of capital works projects and I might add, in the process to increase the outstanding debenture debt of the municipalities.

Who may participate? Any metropolitan municipality, city, town, village, township, improvement district or county, or any elementary or secondary school board that has authority to raise money by the issue of debentures may receive a loan under the terms of the bill which is before the House. A public or secondary school board in a municipality may apply for a loan through the municipal council, whereas a separate school board, regardless of its location, or a school board in unorganized territory may apply directly to The Department of Municipal Affairs for a loan.

What types of projects are eligible? An eligible project may be the construction, reconstruction, extension or improvement of any project the cost of which a municipality is authorized to finance by the statutes of the province from the proceeds of a loan, including a project of an elementary or secondary school board in respect of which a school board or a municipality has authority to raise money by the issue of debentures.

What are the conditions of eligibility? The conditions of eligibility for a loan under this programme, which conditions have been prescribed with great thoroughness in The Municipal Development and Loan Act, should be thoroughly understood by the members of the Legislature, the elected and appointed officials of the municipalities and by the general public.

It is necessary for me to repeat that the exclusive purpose of this programme, as designed by the government of Canada, is to create additional employment during the period between the present and March 31, 1966. Therefore, in drafting its Act, the government of Canada has inserted therein a rather complex section which provides essentially that a project, to be eligible for a loan, must be one which

(a) would not, without the assistance under the programme, have been included among the capital works projects to be undertaken by the municipality and that its inclusion therein will not result in any other capital project of the municipality being replaced or postponed,

(b) is additional and is in excess of what the municipality had contemplated prior to the enactment of the federal Act, and

(c) represents an augmentation or an acceleration of the municipality's programme of works, as contemplated prior to the enactment of the federal Act.

In other words, to receive a loan under this programme a municipality must expand or extend its programme of capital works.

I should point out in connection with this matter of eligibility that, according to the federal Act, the government of Ontario will be required to certify to the Municipal Development and Loan Board that each application for a loan to a municipality under the programme has met these requirements and so Ontario will require any municipal council which makes an application for a loan under this programme to set forth by resolution that these particular requirements of the federal Act have been met.

The amount of any loan in respect of a project shall not exceed two-thirds of the cost of the project after deducting all federal and provincial subsidies.

What is the rate of interest? The rate of interest which will apply in respect of a loan shall be equal to the effective interest rate on long-term government of Canada bonds as prescribed at the time that the loan is authorized, plus not more than $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent. Assuming that the effective rate of interest on long-term government of Canada bonds is from 5.10 per cent to 5.20 per cent per annum approximately the interest rate applicable to a loan from the province to a municipality would not exceed a range from 5.35 per cent to 5.45 per cent per annum. In comparison, let me state that the effective interest rate on a top municipal security if sold in the market place today, would be approximately 5.67 per annum—an increase which would range from .22 per cent to .32 per cent per annum.

Where a municipal project, or portion of a project, in respect of which a loan is made under this programme is completed before March 31, 1966, the province will "forgive" the payment by the municipality of 25 per cent of the principal amount of the loan.

As an example, let us assume that a municipal capital project were to cost $300,000. The municipality would be required to secure one-third of its financing requirements or $100,000 from private sources. The amount of the loan which would be available to the municipality from the province under this programme would be two-thirds of $300,000 or $200,000. The amount of the "forgiveness" would be 25 per cent of $200,000 or $50,000. The effect would be that the municipality would be required to repay to the province a principal sum of $150,000 at the effective interest rate prescribed on the day that the loan to the municipality was authorized by the province. The municipality would not be required to either pay interest on the $50,000 or to repay the principal sum itself.

So much for the terms and conditions upon which the loans will be made by the province to the municipalities. Now, what are the financial implications of this programme?

This programme will permit any municipality which is in a position to take advantage of it (a) to receive a subsidy of 16 per cent (25 per cent of 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of 100 per cent) on the cost of any eligible project, less any provincial and federal subsidies thereon, and (b) to receive a loan at a favourable rate of interest.

However, the elected and appointed officials of the municipalities must realize that the funds made available to the municipalities under this programme are loans and are not subsidies and will be repayable to the province with interest over a stipulated term. Therefore, before any municipal council decides to make an application to The Department of Municipal Affairs for a loan, that municipal council should satisfy itself that:

(a) the municipality can borrow one-third of the cost of the project in the public money market or, depending upon the nature of the project, from the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation, and

(b) the municipality has financial resources to repay, not only the loan under this programme, but the money borrowed in the public market, plus the interest thereon.

The Department of Municipal Affairs, in its administration of this federal-provincial-municipal programme in Ontario, will require that each application from a municipality for a loan be accompanied by an approval of the Ontario Municipal Board under section 64 of The Ontario Municipal Board Act. As the hon. members of the Legislature are aware, the significance of the approval of the Ontario Municipal Board is that the board has satisfied itself that the municipality involved has the financial resources to assume responsibility for the liability represented by the loan and also that the municipality has the ability to repay to the province the debenture principal and interest charges which will result from the making of the loan. This policy will protect the credit structure of our municipalities.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me state that the government of Ontario will in this instance, as it has in other instances, co-operate to the fullest extent with the government of Canada in this federal-provincial-municipal programme to increase employment.

The government of Ontario has every expectation that those municipalities of Ontario which have the necessary credit and the capacity to borrow, and which are of the opinion that their ratepayers are prepared to provide the additional cost of the debenture principal and interest charges which will result from the loans made under this programme, will participate in the programme.

My department has already circularized the municipalities and plans on providing full and complete information as soon as possible after this bill becomes law.

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 1, An Act to assist municipalities to finance capital works.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): This is the bill that apparently is the cause for this "two and one-half hour session" of the Legislature. It is rather interesting to have watched the processes that brought about the bill in Ottawa and subsequently brought us to this Legislature today to discuss this bill. The timing is most noteworthy too.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, Mr. Speaker, when he began his remarks, pointed out that the first reading of the bill brought in by the Liberal government in Ottawa took place on June 17. It was in keeping, I am sure you noted with me, Mr. Speaker, it was in keeping with the policy announced by the Liberal Party, the federal Liberal Party, during their election campaign that they would embark upon such a project.

For that they are to be commended.

I think that the government of Canada today is taking a sincere and genuine interest in providing employment and in attempting to assist municipalities above and beyond the means that apparently governments such as ours here in this wealthiest province have been able to do. The hon. Minister read with some pride, I suspect, the preamble to the federal Act which is chapter 13 of the federal statutes, 12 Elizabeth II—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Revised statutes of Canada!

Mr. Singer: No, not the revised statutes of Canada; statutes of Canada, I am sure. My hon. friend, the hon. Minister of Labour, competent lawyer that he is, would be aware—

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Should be aware!

Mr. Singer: The preamble states—and I think it is important that we understand it:

This is an Act to promote increased employment in Canada by financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate capital works programmes.

I think that the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada and his hon. Ministers, the Minister of Finance in particular, are to be commended by all in this House for the way in which they have carried out the commitment given during a campaign and brought this bill to completion in the House of Commons.

I think, to be fair, that this government deserves a pat on the back, too, for taking action on it, albeit a little slowly and albeit a little reluctantly and albeit flying in face of the criticisms the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Robarts) found were necessary to make when the bill was first mooted and first introduced.

But let us separate fact from fiction. Is what we are doing today really going to solve the basic difficulties facing Ontario's municipalities? I do not think, Mr. Speaker, I can refer to any greater authority about the complexities of this bill than the hon. Prime Minister himself and in preparation for the conference that took place in Ottawa on July 26-27, the hon. Prime Minister stated on his way up and in press releases at the conference that there were a number of things about this bill with which he was not really very happy.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Singer: Well, just wait; just wait and see.

Actually I am, and I have been, fascinated to watch the complete adaptability, the pleasure that can ooze—to steal a phrase that one of the hon. Prime Minister's colleagues, the hon. Premier of the province of British Columbia, used, when he emerged from the conference with pleasure oozing from his ears at the great air of victory taken from the federal authorities. I am amused to watch the hon. Prime Minister build up this great chain of objections, and then having won a few tiny administrative changes, come in and say we have won, everything is going to be fine, all of our difficulties have been dissipated and there are no problems—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): That indicates how much the hon. member knows about this.

Mr. Singer: Well let us see how much we know about it.

I can rely on no greater authority, Mr. Speaker, than remarks that were made in the press across this whole country and attributed to the hon. Prime Minister. If he was misquoted I am sure he has been at this political game long enough that we would have heard that he had been misquoted, and if things were unfairly attributed to him, if he did not mean what he is reported to have said, then I am sure that the hon. Prime Minister is fully able and capable of rising to his feet in the appropriate forum and saying he was wrongly quoted.

Let us see what he did say.

He said this is an interesting bill but really it is not going to help very much. It is a problem because: well because, number one, it is not broad enough in scope; the programmes are too limited in their delineation. It is a problem because this bill purports to interfere with the traditional and historic relationship between the province and its municipalities. We do not want those terrible people up in Ottawa telling our municipalities what they should do.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Right. Right.

It is amazing, Mr. Speaker, how these trite phrases full of sound and fury and meaning nothing can bring forth all this cacophony of noise. It happens all the time and it is an excuse for inaction.

Now let us see what really happens in this bill. Everyone is preserving our traditional and historic relationship, but at the same time, with reluctance we are accepting this miserable federal money to help our municipalities. Whose money is this miserable federal money that we are so jealously guarding—

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): The people of Ontario, the hon. member and I.

Mr. Singer: Yes, yes! The hon. Minister of Health is quite right. It comes from him and me, it comes from the people of Ontario. That is right, so that I think that before we get into great and emotional speeches about preserving traditional relationships, we should really know whether we are talking fact or talking on the eve of an election and inserting some propaganda into the election campaign that is forthcoming.

It is interesting, as I say, Mr. Speaker, to watch the dates, to watch the dates of these conferences and these pronouncements, because as these pronouncements were being made I would suspect there was at least one person in the province of Ontario, the hon. Prime Minister, who had a pretty good idea when the provincial election campaign was coming. I would suggest that there was very little he said in his approach to this bill, very little he said at the conference, that did not relate directly to what was going to be said in the forthcoming campaign and was not set up as propaganda in order to show what great fellows these were in connection with this forthcoming campaign.

Now I started to delineate, before I had some interruptions from over there, some of the objections that the hon. Prime Minister made.

He said that the bill was not broad enough. He said that it interfered with this traditional provincial relationship that was so historic and so traditional and so important to be preserved. He said that there was a real danger that the credit position of municipalities could be disturbed, that the safeguards that had been set up within The Department of Municipal Affairs—and I would like to hear either him or the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, Mr. Speaker, tell me sometime, perhaps even today, what real safeguards they have got in his department to protect the credit ratings of our municipalities. The only safeguard he has got is the Municipal Board.

But the hon. Prime Minister this morning said the safeguards are set up in the department. Well, sir, if they are there, they must be something brand new. If they are there, they must involve something more than would have safeguarded the financial interests of the city of Belleville when the department, not under the present hon. Minister but under his predecessor, did not even bother to read the report of the auditor. They said: Oh well. I think some official sent out a letter, if you will remember, Mr. Speaker, and when there was no answer they threw up their hands and said: What can we do? The financial affairs of Belleville are in terrible shape but the council will not answer us and so we are not going to bother doing anything about it. These are the safeguards, apparently, Mr. Speaker, that exist today in The Department of Municipal Affairs and these are the safeguards that the hon. Prime Minister wants to safeguard.

Now if there is something new and different, I think we should hear about it, I think we are entitled to hear in this House what additional safeguards there are.

There are the safeguards, certainly, substantial safeguards as provided by the Ontario Municipal Board. The role of the Ontario Municipal Board in this whole scheme is going to be a very interesting one.

He had further objections. He said the rate of interest is too high, and we heard the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs say this morning that the rate of interest is really what, point 26? Were those his figures? Something like that, a fraction of one per cent lower than apparently could be made available on the open market to these municipalities.

He said it was too late. He said big municipalities were probably going to be able to take advantage of this and the little municipalities were going to be penalized.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, he made this very cogent observation: he said what we need for Ontario municipalities is not credit, we do not need more credit, we do not need more sources of borrowing, what we need is more revenue.

Well, Mr. Speaker, these are a series of very fascinating observations.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am glad the hon. member finds that so.

Mr. Singer: Indeed so.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): You might as well admit it.

Mr. Singer: I knew, Mr. Speaker, it would not be too long before we got the hon. Minister of Mines into this. He will tell us how the northern municipalities are going to be greatly benefited by the dispensation of $138 million of federal money that is about to be made.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Half Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Half Ontario.

Mr. G. E. Comme (Lanark): Did you lose the place?

Mr. Singer: No, I will be with you in just a moment. Well, in any event, Mr. Speaker, with this conference being scheduled, the date being in the middle of July, the hon. Prime Minister goes in, makes all of these objections, and then he and his colleagues, the other Prime Ministers from the other provinces, emerge from the conference saying, according to the press again, we have won a great victory. The federal government has retreated—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I never said that.

Mr. Singer: You did not say that? Well the press attributes—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I really must say that I never said that I had won a great victory. I said that I was very satisfied with the results of the conference, and there is a vast difference.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, obviously some applauding lessons have been given since yesterday. Their new members were not quite up to the ability to applaud that they show this morning, and I am sure that the Whip is to be commended for this.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Singer: I thought, Mr. Speaker, this session would not be on for too long before we had the "we're over here and you're over there" speech; it is bound to come. It is unfortunate the former member for Victoria is not here because he was at his best in that sort of a speech, but perhaps we can hear it from the hon. Minister of Health.

Now to get down to the business of the moment, Mr. Speaker. Emerging from the conference, whether the hon. Prime Minister was satisfied, very satisfied, whether he thought like some press stories that were headed that a great victory had been made, whether he felt with his hon. colleague, the Premier of British Columbia, that joy should be oozing from his ears, apparently the tenor of these ten Premiers as they marched out of the conference room was that they had obtained substantial concessions.

And what were the substantial concessions? There was a broadening of the various projects that are made available for these loans; this is true. There was a system worked out whereby the loans could be made directly from the province to the municipality and not from the federal government to the municipality. This preserves, I presume, the great historical and traditional relationship we are so anxious to preserve.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, these are changes really only in form. They really amount to nothing, and really did not hit at the root of the difficulties that the hon. Prime Minister was complaining about. There is no answer; there is no answer at all to the disturbance or lack of disturbance with the credit position.

What are the safeguards that are going to be made to preserve the credit positions of the Ontario municipalities and, yea, even the credit position of the Ontario government? I think those are pretty close to the exact words used by the hon. Prime Minister. In listening to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs this morning, he says: "An application will come in to the department; but before the department will approve, there will have to be approval by the Ontario Municipal Board in the first instance."

I think a very important question to be determined and to be announced as part of government policy is: Is the advice of the Ontario Municipal Board going to be accepted in all instances? If the Ontario Municipal Board says no and the municipality does not have an assessment base to make such a borrowing, is the government going to pay any attention to this? Is this going to be accepted? If the Ontario Municipal Board says yes and there is reason to authorize the by-law or approve the application for a loan, is the government, the department, going to accept this?

Very simply, Mr. Speaker, is the department going to be a rubber stamp for the Municipal Board or it is going to take upon itself the job of overruling the Municipal Board? If the Municipal Board is, as we are told, independent and free to make its own decisions, is its traditional role—and we are greatly interested in tradition—going to be changed under the functionings of this Act? Is the department going to replace the Municipal Board's view with its own view?

One of two things is going to happen. Either the department is going to be prepared to replace the Municipal Board's view with its own view or else it is going to be a rubber stamp. What has happened, Mr. Speaker, because of the desire to make speeches—and that is all it is—about preserving traditional relationships, is that we are setting up a whole series of roadblocks which is going to make it as long and as difficult and as delaying as possible to get a final answer on whether a loan is going to be available.

This is one of the hon. Prime Minister's objections, too. It will take too long to carry this thing out. Well, now, look at the roadblocks they are putting in. We are preserving the traditional relationships so Ontario must have the final word. Applications come into the department; they must have first gone to the Municipal Board.

I think that we should get very soon this morning an answer as to whether the Municipal Board is going to have any real role in this or not. And if the Municipal Board expresses an opinion, is the department either going to rubber stamp it or is it prepared to overrule it on its own initiative?

And then, Mr. Speaker, there is another very serious problem which deals with the Municipal Board and that is: If the procedures are the same as they presently exist and if the Municipal Board is going to use as its criterion the assessment base existing in any municipality and the amount of indebtedness that is already there, as to whether or not new borrowing should be authorized, and if it is going to refuse when in its opinion the total amount of indebtedness has reached the danger point, then we are back into the same circle of confusion, the same circle of difficulty, in getting money into municipalities for doing capital works.

This is a circle, Mr. Speaker, that is caused by the request of a municipality for capital borrowings to enable it to carry out a new work. They want a new water main, a new water system, in order to improve conditions in a municipality so they can attract new assessment.

They come to the Municipal Board and say: "We need this new water system in order to get more industry into our municipality and build up our assessment". The Municipal Board says: "Well, we are sorry. We think it is a great idea but we are sorry you can't do that because your assessment presently doesn't entitle you to borrow more money to build up a new assessment". It is like the cat chasing its tail; you go around in circles. You need more capital expenditure to be made from capital borrowing to attract more assessment but you have not got enough assessment to allow you to do the borrowing in the first place.

This is the present situation; and insofar as I can tell this morning, Mr. Speaker, it is bound to continue. There is no reason at all to think that this idea is going to be changed. So that if this $138 million is going to be of any benefit to the Ontario municipalities, then there has to be some other test. Is the government prepared to say that it is going to make this other test? Is the government prepared to say, in other words, that it is prepared to change the role of the Municipal Board insofar as this type of borrowing is concerned?

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is the very serious question of the hon. Prime Minister's key remark, I thought, in directing his criticism to the federal plan, that we do not need credit, we need more revenue, more sources of revenue. I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that it was time that this government set its own house in order. I would have thought that at the same time that the government came into this Legislature and said: "Let us approve The Municipal Loans Act and let's hurry up because if we don't meet the October 31 date we are going to be in trouble", I would have thought the government would have been prepared to say: "This is how we are going to revise provincial-municipal relations".

After all, this is the place where this sort of thing is determined. This is the place where we are still governed by The Baldwin Act that was passed in 1849. This is the place that determines that we still have some 4,000 different and independent boards of education. This is the forum that decides we still have over 1,000 municipalities. This is the forum that determines that municipalities are responsible for administration of justice, for welfare costs, and on and on. This is the forum that determines the costs that are levied on municipalities. This is the forum that determines how difficult a municipality's financial role is going to be.

I will give the hon. Prime Minister credit; he hit the problem right on the head when he said: "What is needed is not more credit; we need more sources of municipal revenue". He takes a couple of crumbs on the table, his first two comparatively minor objections, and emerges and says: "I am quite satisfied". He comes into this House and says: "Now let's get on with it. Pass this bill and everything is going to be fine".

Mr. Speaker, we, in this party, and in the official Opposition, are going to support the bill. We think this will go a bit of the way along the line to helping some municipalities; but we criticize, we strongly criticize, the government for doing this and this only, because the hon. Prime Minister apparently has now attuned himself sufficiently to the problem of municipal affairs to say what is needed are more sources of revenue and the hon. Prime Minister apparently has attuned himself to recognizing that there is such a problem.

But he is not prepared to say what the province is going to do about it. He is not prepared to say, Mr. Speaker, that the province is going to take over things that are our provincial responsibility. If this sort of thinking is coming, it is probably going to wait for the crocuses that come in the spring; we are not going to hear about it today. We are only getting a little piece, a little tiny piece of legislation here to take advantage of the good intelligence of action initiated by the Liberal government in Ottawa. But there is no municipal reform, there is no heart for municipal reform in these gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches.

Interjections by hon. member.

Mr. Singer: Well, just to repeat the phrase used by the hon. Prime Minister a few moments ago. He said he was highly amused that politicians should get up and make non-political speeches. I grant you I am stating some political truths, Mr. Speaker, which may not sit too lightly or happily in the minds of the hon. members opposite but they are, in fact, political truths. I say that we have every reason to be concerned about the government not tackling this problem even as they outline it.

We think that the government should be prepared to say in a loud clear voice what they are going to do to help their municipalities. We think we are entitled to an explanation as to where the new sources of revenue are going to come from and what the province is prepared to do about them, not to berate somebody in Ottawa and not to make great speeches that sound good on the eve of an election.

We think that the administrative procedures, as they have been explained today, leave a lot to be desired. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there has been very little real thinking going on in government as to how this thing is going to work. What really is the role of the Municipal Board going to be? Is it going to be the same as it has been up till now? And if it is going to be the same as it is up to now, why does the department have to approve? Why does he not just leave it to the Municipal Board? And if it is not the same, why does he have the Municipal Board in at all? Why does he not let the department make the decisions? But they are setting up a cumbersome and a complicated machinery that is going to be slow, that is going to be frustrating and it probably is not going to get very much work done in any event.

What about the problem of big municipalities and small municipalities? The hon. Prime Minister was very concerned about that. I thought we would have heard some answer, some explanation as to how the government, in its wisdom, was going to deal with this; but they have not done it at all.

Let us be honest, Mr. Speaker. The real answer to the problems of our municipalities lies in municipal reform both financial and administrative. In this province this answer must be given by the government. Today we have not got that answer and I say that while we will support this bill—and we will support it because we think it is a good measure—there is still this whole field of municipal reform that is left dangling, that has been ignored and neglected for all of these many years.

Neither the appointment of a select committee earlier this morning, nor the fancy phrases that were hurled forward later this morning, nor even the great political speeches that were made during the campaign, have given any real relief to municipalities, and for this most serious neglect this government should be condemned.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, as one of the new members in this Legislature, and perhaps the first in rising to speak, I would like to add my words of congratulation, sir, upon your appointment as Speaker of this House. I have not had the privilege of meeting you before nor working with you, but after listening to the words of commendation which were spoken in this House yesterday, I am sure that the business of this House, is in good hands and that you will carry your job with dignity and with credit.

I would hope that you will conduct the affairs of this House with a firm hand, particularly as it relates to those who have had experience within the House. I would also hope that you would show some mercy and some forbearance for the mistakes of those of us who are new in these halls.

Now in coming into this House, I was rather interested to open my desk, Mr. Speaker, and to find all the fancy things that are in here, very interesting and very nice. I found, for example, a pair of scissors and those scissors say on them: "Made in Germany". I then found a letter opener, which I trust will be very useful, and I find that this is "Made in England". I also found a fountain pen, which I am sure will be used a great deal, and I find that on the outside of this it says: "Made in U.S.A.", although the cartridge inside says: "Made in Canada".

I am just wondering; I looked in here and realized then that more things than hippos come from outside of Canada. I was wondering if there might also be a moose inside my desk, but that moose was not there and I suppose that it may have been sent to Germany in payment for the scissors, I do not know, in sort of carrying out the direction of another one of our departments which says that "Canada must export or die".

Mr. Speaker, this morning I have heard from the hon. Minister an explanation of a bill which is before us and I also heard from the hon. member for Downsview whose riding adjoins mine and who is a former colleague, fulsome praise of the federal government which has made possible this session today.

I want to say this at the outset, that I do not think—and I want to spend a bit of time on this—I do not think that this House should have been put in the position of having to legislate upon this kind of basis—the Act which the federal government has handed us. I want to say something of that and then I want to go forward and suggest some ways through which this House might make good the deficit, as it were, and perhaps make the best of the kind of legislation which we have.

Those of us who have been charged with municipal responsibility in recent years have had to face very serious problems, particularly in the field of debentures. In the whole field of planning our communities and making sure that they are good places for people to live, in servicing those communities, and in doing all the things that are necessary we found real difficulty facing us in this matter of available capital.

Today, as we look about us and we see the number of small towns that are facing problems in water and drainage, when we see the problems such as rapid transit in our big cities; and then today, in Western Ontario particularly, the water table dropping, and following this drought, we realize the very great problems which municipal people, as well as others, face there. We realize that something must be done to make available more capital for these purposes.

I know in the municipality from which I come and from which the previous speaker comes, as well as an hon. colleague whom I see across the floor, we have seen over recent years literally millions of dollars of local petitions pile up on the table; and we were unable to process them properly because we just could not get the debenture funds through Metropolitan Toronto to do that job.

Then in the field of planning, in those burgeoning communities out on the edges of Metro where people are crowding in by the thousands, the whole problem of planning was made more difficult because of the lack of capital. I bring before hon. members this morning a quotation made in the House of Commons not too long ago by a man held in very high esteem by hon. members sitting on the opposite side and some to my left, and I quote the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker when he said this—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: Well, there is some division of opinion within the government ranks on this matter; but Mr. Diefenbaker has said this:

We believe that action must be taken in the field of the new suburbs of our cities. Since the war most suburbs have grown as groups of subdivisions. After the community has been established, shops were built and then those wishing to build schools, churches, entertainment facilities and other institutions had to scramble in order to find land that was left over.

As a result, most of the new suburbs across Canada have been formless and the community facilities have been dispersed in a haphazard way. In other words, in a suburban sprawl.

Sir, I believe that the suburbs would greatly benefit if schools, churches, city halls, community centres, recreation facilities and shops formed a focal centre for the suburban community as a whole. I believe that under appropriate arrangements with the provinces, following consultation and acceptance of this programme, the municipalities could be helped to concentrate their public land uses and to consolidate them. Loans could be made available by the federal government to municipalities to provide for the purchase and the preparation of land for suburban town centres in advance of new city growth.

To take this course would be to hold intact the land for which the use and maintenance or purposes for which these areas would be set up.

Mr. John Diefenbaker, June 11, 1963.

Now, I might assure my hon. friends opposite that I am not turning Tory at this moment, but I will say this, that even Tories sometimes come up with good ideas; as a friend of mine quipped, particularly when they have good ghost writers.

However that may be, the fact remains that as we face these problems of planning, we are finding in our municipalities very great difficulty because of a lack of capital. And this is true also in this whole field of on-going capital needs. For a long time the municipal people have been hoping that some solution might be found. So it was, I think, with a great deal of anticipation that municipal people across this land—those who have been pressing through their organizations for the establishment of a municipal bank or some sort of fund which would serve these purposes—it was with a great deal of anticipation, that we heard that the Liberal Party had been converted to this idea of a municipal loans fund some time ago. This was prior to a couple of elections. And as we saw them take to the hustings, we had brought before us this vision of a great fund of public monies available at low interest rates to municipalities, which would help us to build the great works which high interest rates and difficulties in debentures and sick treasures had prevented in the past. We looked at this with a great deal of hope.

I am not going to read to this House those words in the literature which we all saw together with a picture of the present Rt. hon. Prime Minister. But we all saw them and some of us, particularly on this side of the House, read them and we all hoped that the words meant exactly what they said. I think at that time, some of us were in the mood to echo the words, the famous words of King Agrippa when he said to St. Paul: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian. Only this time with this dazzling bit of municipal assistance dangling before our eyes, even our ranks became inclined to say: "Almost thou persuadest me to vote Liberal". But the elections came and went—

Mr. Singer: Simcoe has a competitor.

Mr. Young: But the elections came and went and we did not get the stability that we hoped for, although I will say, Mr. Speaker, that in recent days, the people of this province did go for a big majority in a really big way, and perhaps the hon. Prime Minister should be congratulated on this event. But, in any case, the federal elections did come and go, and the Rt. hon. Prime Minister plunged into his famous sixty days of disaster for the Liberal Party. Days which made people across this country shake their heads in wonderment, wondering just how wise they had been, back in April—

Mr. Whicher: You are making me shake my head now.

Mr. Young: Sixty days which no doubt played a very large part in bringing the occupants of the seats around us here to their present places instead of those who hopefully expected to be there. You know, during those sixty days, those of us in municipal government—I am interested in this field—watched while a federal Cabinet desperately tried to untie the Gordian—the Walter Gordian—knot, which had tangled up the affairs of our government.

We had hoped then that this government might use the instrument which its predecessor in power had passed back in 1938, the Act to assist the municipalities in making self-liquidating improvements. Now this Act would have given to us in the municipalities two per cent funds for certain specific purposes and we believe that, with certain amendments, this Act could well have been used, plus the forgiveness feature, in order to give us the monies we needed. But this did not happen and we have instead, the Act which we have to deal with today.

Now, I must say in all fairness that we in this group, and I think this is true of most municipal people, welcome the establishment of the Municipal Loans Fund, and we hope that it will do something to help push forward the works in the municipalities. We would also hope that this House will now press the federal government, where this power alone resides, for the establishment of a fully-fledged municipal loan bank, where municipalities might borrow money at low interest rates for their on-going needs—not only for their regular capital needs, but for this whole field of planning and land acquisition.

If we are to carry out the advice that Mr. Diefenbaker has given us, I think that a national loan bank of this kind, a municipal loan bank, is pretty much of a necessity in Canada. We have not got it but we hope that we will get it.

Now there is disappointment but we must deal with this Act as we have it. But the Act, the federal legislation, which we have heard touted here this morning, does not give us the permission to use the money for land purchase; it does not give us any money for current needs. It gives priority to low priority items to which the municipalities have given the hoist at the moment. But more than that, it lays the burden of solving this bit of unemployment that this Act is designed to solve, upon the municipalities themselves.

This, to me, seems one of the serious features of this bill. Municipalities can borrow up to two-thirds of their needs for civic projects. But then they must go to the debenture market and get the other third and this in itself is going to lay a very heavy burden on these municipalities.

Mr. Gordon says that the primary purpose of the bill is to cure unemployment. But if he is really serious about this, then he just cannot lay this kind of responsibility upon the municipalities. It is true, there is a forgiveness feature here. Sixteen per cent of a cost will be written off, but the third which must be raised by municipalities is serious. And they must tax themselves in order to raise the 84 per cent in future years. Canadian unemployment just cannot be solved this way—through providing jobs via municipal tax loans.

If the federal government and this government too, thinks that this is the vehicle to be used—that is, municipal work—then there must be more participation by the governments concerned. It is the federal Treasury which gains first and gains most from rising employment, and so it, and not the municipal taxpayer, should bear the main brunt of creating that employment. If this kind of municipal action is to be depended upon for a solution to unemployment, then I am afraid we have forgotten nothing and learned nothing since the thirties.

Now, since we do have this legislation, then I think the first job of this House is to make it possible for municipalities to use it without undue burden upon the municipal taxpayer.

Section 4 of the bill before us provides that the provincial authority may borrow money, in the first instance, from the federal funds, and it seems to me that we must go further than this if we are not to lay the burden, too heavy a burden, upon the municipalities. We must not only borrow from the federal fund and loan that to the municipalities, but we must also borrow on our own account in Ontario and provide funds for the other third of the capital that may be necessary.

We have, of course, done this in other respects. In the winter works programme the province has assisted, in the matter of providing certain municipal services, such as sewage disposal plants, we have done the same kind of thing. And so it would seem good sense for this government to set up a fund in order of something like $70 million which might be used to make available to the municipalities, the balance of the funds that are needed for these projects. Then if to that were added the same kind of forgiveness feature, it would mean that about 25 per cent could be forgiven to the municipalities.

Now, failing this, I can see real problems in municipalities, particularly poorer ones, and even some of the more affluent ones the officials of which I have been talking to recently, taking advantage of this legislation. With the interest rates suggested, these people are not showing quite as much interest as we might hope if this legislation is to solve a large part of our unemployment problem. You see, if the municipalities have to raise the extra third, I suppose they can do it in one of three ways:

(1) they can raise the tax rate. But with municipal taxes moving steadily upwards, to give that mill rate an extra nudge this way would send chills up and down the spines of municipal politicians.

(2) It might be that we could divert some of present debentures for this purpose but the federal Act specifically forbids us doing this.

(3) The other thing that is left to us, I suppose, is to go out on the open market and there find the money, that third, which would be needed. But here we run into another problem which the hon. member for Downsview has already mentioned. We have this problem of the debenture ceiling.

Most municipalities have been borrowing up to what is considered safe. I understand that the Ontario Municipal Board has a rule of thumb of 20 per cent; that is, they consider it fairly safe for municipalities to borrow up to about 20 per cent of their assessment. In some cases this is breached. I understand Ottawa, Scarborough, and others have breached this and some of the smaller municipalities have gone far beyond that; but by and large this is the rule of thumb under which we operate.

The federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) has said on page 889 of Hansard that:

The borrowing under this section would represent an increase of nearly 50 per cent in the capital expenditures by municipalities on projects eligible for loans; it would represent an increase of nearly 25 per cent in overall capital spending by municipalities during the loan period.

I suppose he is talking of averages here. But there is no question that this legislation will come into direct conflict with the OMB's 20 per cent rule of thumb. And again I emphasize what has already been said that only if the OMB is willing to raise its ceiling can the legislation really become operative. But even if this is done, there is a further problem.

With increased capital debt the financial standing of the municipalities is bound to be affected in the regular capital market. Even if the province sees fit to provide the extra third of the fund, and there has been no indication that they are willing, the municipalities still must go on to the open market next year for their regular needs. And they cannot curtail their regular borrowings if they are to use the fund. So they are boxed in.

Once the fund is used, capital debt may well run higher than the amounts formerly considered safe by the OMB. It is higher by the amount borrowed from the fund and the danger here is that credit ratings will be affected and interest rates therefore raised on regular debentures.

Of course, in a great many European democracies today this raising of debenture ceilings is taken for granted as long as the municipality is creating assets to correspond to those debentures. We take this for granted by and large in private business and private utilities.

The capital market remains fairly calm as long as private business is borrowing to build up its assets, as long as it is building up proper assets; but just as soon as a public authority begins to borrow to build up assets in the public sector then, of course, it becomes a bit jittery.

It seems to me it is just as sensible for a municipality to go on the debenture market and borrow to put in extra sewage works, which will be paid for by the abutting owners over the next ten years, as it is for a private utility to borrow the same amount of money to increase its effectiveness.

But it seems that our capital market in this continent has not yet caught up with that idea. So we have to face the fact that our municipalities, if Mr. Gordon is right, are going to be increasing their capital spending over the next few years by about 25 per cent. But if they are going to do this then they must have some protection if their financial rating is to remain sound.

Provincial loans to supplement the federal ones will help. This puts the credit of the province back of this portion of municipal indebtedness; but since total borrowings are to be increased by this amount it would seem that some further guarantee of municipal debentures by the province should be considered.

This matter must be given serious and careful consideration in order to safeguard the financial status of our municipalities.

Now the federal Act leaves a further, serious responsibility upon this House. The purpose of the Act is to promote employment but the loans are for any municipalities which will accelerate works which are ordinarily deferred past March 31, 1966. It would seem to be the responsibility of this House here to see to it that this loan fund is directed, to as large an extent as possible, to the areas of greatest unemployment.

The federal House has, in a couple of instances recently, designated certain areas—one using the yardstick of winter employment and the other of summer employment—in special need. Now whether this House would want to set up its own standards or not remains for this House to determine. But the fact remains, if we are to tackle this problem of unemployment realistically, and if we are to do what the Act is designed to do, then we should, in some measure at least, direct our funds as far as we can to these areas of low employment.

Beyond that there is a further problem here. These are the very areas which, because of the unemployment, are having trouble tax-wise and debenture-wise. So it is going to be hard for them to borrow even the extra third that we are talking about. Here it seems to me to make common sense for this government to do what has been done in some other instances—that is to amend this legislation to provide that, out of this fund which I have suggested we set up, forgiveness up to the third, if necessary, be made to these municipalities in order to promote employment and to encourage them in the borrowing of the fund. This is simply a step for the people of this province to help back to economic health those areas which may be in special trouble.

Once this is done, it seems to me there is another matter which should be faced by this House. If we can direct as much of this fund as possible to the areas of low employment, and if we assist here in the ways that I have suggested, there is the matter of large metropolitan areas where the borrowing is fairly large. In the case of Metropolitan Toronto, Hamilton, and other areas like this, I would suggest that the administration of the fund should be so set up, or the fund should be so administered, that large-scale projects which can be processed quickly, which will have a great labour-multiplying effect and can help all the areas of big metropolitan regions, should be given preference—one such project in each area, or a minimum number.

To give you an example, I would point to the need for rapid transit in Metropolitan Toronto. For many years now we have talked about it and the metropolitan government has undertaken to do certain things. A major project such as this would contribute a great deal toward the developmental problems in all the Metro areas.

One of the keys to orderly planning, Mr. Speaker, is proper and rapid transportation facilities right out to the growing edges of the city, and the provision of that facility at the time people arrive there.

Integrated community planning is impossible without this. Without adequate transit we get the suburban sprawl mentioned by Mr. Diefenbaker, based on the motor car. Single family homes go up only to be torn down and replaced by apartments and office buildings when the transit arrives. Proper long-range siting of community cores, apartment clusters, of single homes and of industry, is very difficult unless we have the rapid transit facilities that are going to be there.

Also, when it comes to the development or redevelopment of the cores of our cities, it can only be done with reasonableness and with far-sighted planning, if the people from the fringes can be brought rapidly and in some comfort into the core of the metropolis.

I think of the suggested cultural centre suggested for downtown Toronto. Unless we have transit which can reach out and bring people from the fringes, such a project can well be frustrated as smaller institutions of this kind and of lesser quality may be built in areas where people can reach them easily and quickly.

Now rapid transit has been too often regarded as a cost to municipalities. It comes after people are settled and after density of population makes it profitable. I suppose this is a carryover in our thinking from the days of private ownership of transit lines. But public transit is not a cost, it is an investment in a city, a social investment which will pay very great social dividends.

As the development of new areas comes, that transit development will bring proper, orderly and reasonable development.

So I think we ought to look upon transit in the same vein we look upon sewer trunks or water mains. Such transit installed at the same time and there when people move in, will do a very great deal to cut down the social costs which we now pay because of wrong planning and piecemeal planning based on the motor car.

More than this, I think we are recognizing that transit pays for itself in dollars and cents in increased assessment, in the great high rise apartment groups and business blocks that rise around the transit stations to say nothing of the dividends it would pay in cutting down on the frayed nerves of those people who go to and fro in the long, fume-laden lines of our public thoroughfares.

Metropolitan Toronto, I suppose, is entitled to about $32 million roughly under this federal legislation. It is entitled to spend, or will spend under this, roughly $50 million. I do not know exactly what the present status of the $200 million is, but I understand that the Ontario Municipal Board has already approved this, and if so then the east-west line as presently projected might not come under this legislation, although under the clause 71B it might well qualify; parts of it might. But at least the extensions east and west would qualify and certainly the Spadina transit line, serving as it will, a great new university being built and the great industrial complex being developed in the northwest section of Metro. These things could add greatly to the facilities of this province.

Now I realize that the $32 million or the $50 million will not build this subway system in total. But I remember Mr. Gordon giving us this assurance. He said:

On the three points raised by the hon. member as to the limit first of all of $400 million, I can assure him that if this programme is a success, and results in decreasing unemployment appreciably, then this government will certainly keep an open mind with regard to coming back to Parliament for further appropriations.

So it well may be that if we do act on a project such as this, speed up the rapid transit designed to benefit all the Metro area and show the result of such a project in creating employment and in multiplying employment far beyond the actual construction site, this done the province could then go back to Mr. Gordon, if he is still there, and ask that the fund be supplemented in order to continue the work and to prevent the built-up employment from collapsing.

So I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that this government in co-operation with governments such as Metropolitan Toronto, will have the imagination and will have the initiative to institute projects such as this which will benefit all the areas concerned, which will speed up the processing and which will give much more employment than a lot of small projects carried out by individual groups of municipalities.

I quite realize that most municipalities have their own ideas as to what they want to do and I have no quarrel with that. I suspect too that political considerations may even enter into the picture. But I think the suggestions I have made have real validity, particularly in the larger centres and it should be carefully explored if we are to build up maximum employment through the utilization of funds which we have at our disposal.

So while there are real limitations to the federal legislation here upon which we must act today, I believe that this House can use that legislation and can bolster it and can do many things to make it effective in building employment and in pushing forward municipal works within the province of Ontario.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that there has been some delay on the part of Ontario in implementing this federal legislation. I realize that October 31 is time enough perhaps to do this and I also realize that many municipalities would not be acting for the calendar year of 1963 in any case. So I would hope that from now on there may be real urgency and speed in getting this under way.

I have here the letters which the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs sent out to the municipalities. The first one was on September 3, and the next one on September 16, if those dates have any significance to my hon. friends on this side. He has initiated the process in the province to get the municipalities to think in these terms. There has been some delay perhaps. But the delay that is so serious as far as I am concerned is the delay now in getting approvals through the Ontario Municipal Board or wherever this may be, and I presume the Ontario Municipal Board is the instrument that will be used, and I can see very little actual benefit in the legislation before the spring of 1964.

But be that as it may, the legislation is here before us and, with certain safeguards, I believe that it can do much to increase employment here in Ontario. Perhaps the government should consider how it can speed up the work of the Ontario Municipal Board. Perhaps by appointing more members to that body, or perhaps as some of us think, by taking planning functions away from these august people and leaving them with less of a burden than they have.

I would hope that techniques can be worked out so that the applications from the municipalities can be processed with speed, and I believe that if the amendments which I suggested, are accepted, then this could become a real instrument in building up employment and carrying out the original purposes of the original Act, the federal Act, imperfect as that Act may be.

So we, in this group, support the Act and will do everything in our power to co-operate as long as it has these safeguards for the municipalities and as long as it will in fact result in real employment opportunities for our people.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, in making a few remarks in connection with the remarks which have been made by hon. members, I would like to reiterate again what has been said by the federal Minister of Finance in presenting this legislation to the House of Commons. That has been quoted and he also made mention of this at the federal-provincial conference in July, that this piece of legislation by the federal government was of a temporary nature only and that its prime purpose was to create employment.

Mr. Gordon quite frankly stated he was not one whit interested in municipal financing; it was not his concern at all. He did say, and I think that he was quoted in the press in this respect also, that he hoped that this temporary measure of assisting unemployment would only require to be temporary and that he hoped that the government of Canada would have instituted programmes or projects to alleviate unemployment before this piece of legislation expired on March 31, 1966.

We on this side of the House, being very charitable, are always willing to co-operate with any government, and so we went to Ottawa. All we did was tell the federal people how they might amend their legislation to be of some real service.

For instance, when you examine Bill C-76, which had first reading in June, you will find that school buildings were not included. Through the representations made by our hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, what we refer to as a basket clause was added to section 7 of the Act. This made it possible for school boards, not only school boards within municipalities, but school boards where there is no municipal organization, and all the separate school boards in the province of Ontario, to be eligible for assistance under this Act.

An hon. member: Is that trivial?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Is that trivial? I ask that question.

Mr. Singer: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if you would permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Yes, sure.

Mr. Singer: Insofar as school boards are concerned, I notice in the hon. Minister's remarks that he said that public school and high school boards would process their applications through the municipal council, and separate school boards would process their applications directly through the department. Did he mean in that that public and high school boards would be open to the veto of municipal council? Or, if not, why does he process it through the municipal council?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, applications for debenture issues will be dealt with in exactly the same manner as they always have been dealt with. That is, where there is a public school board and a secondary school board, they deal through the municipalities. The separate school boards in this province have always handled their own debentures themselves without reference to the municipal council. The hon. member is aware of that, I am sure.

Mr. Singer: I am just asking whether there is a veto or not.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Oh, I am not going to answer that because the hon. member is going to involve me in a question of law which I believe is before the courts, is it not? He knows that I am not a lawyer and he is going to be a little smart this morning by putting me on the spot, but I am not going to fall into that.

Mr. Singer: Don't lose your temper!

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Oh no, no! I am not losing my temper. I am just having a heated discussion with the hon. member. He knows that I never lose my temper.

I was saying: As a result of the representations that were made by our hon. Prime Minister, Bill C-76 has been greatly broadened in its application and therefore in its value to the municipalities of this province. Insofar as being waste of time, or the wrong timing of our session to deal with this bill, I would like to remind the hon. member that the first reading was given to The Municipal Development and Loan Act on June 17. On July 12, the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada invited the provinces to a conference, to be held in Ottawa on July 26 and 27, and our hon. Prime Minister and a group of us, representing the government of Ontario, did go to Ottawa and were met there by representatives of other provinces, who of course also had representations to make to the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada and the hon. Minister of Finance and other hon. Ministers who were present.

When it was apparent that the federal government was prepared to amend Bill C-76 and they did amend it, they gave it third reading and it received Royal Assent on August 2—the hon. Minister of Finance had to find the board to operate this municipal development and loan fund.

That was entirely his responsibility and not ours, I am sure you would agree with that; and so it took some time, I suppose, for the hon. Minister of Finance to set up his board. Once the board was set up, then they began negotiations with the provinces—and they have ten of them to deal with—and it was necessary to draw up an agreement that was satisfactory to the loan board and, of course, satisfactory not only to one province, but to all the provinces of Canada. The final draft of the agreement was received by us on October 21.

An hon. member: That is over 60 days.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Oh, it is only nine days ago; and it should have been only eight days until it reached this Legislature. It should have been here yesterday.

I would suggest to you that there has been no delay and, as the hon. member for Yorkview mentioned, my department, under my signature, sent out certain material to the municipalities respecting this loan fund. We have sent out two circulars already and we are prepared to deal with applications.

We have already said to the municipalities that even inquiries are being recorded and as soon as this legislation becomes law and I can enter into an agreement with the loan board, we will be in a position to handle applications.

Insofar as the Ontario Municipal Board is concerned, their responsibilities are set out in their Act. They will act in exactly the same way as they have in the past. It has been mentioned that the board only uses one factor in arriving at a decision as to whether or not a municipal debenture issue should be approved. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that such is not the case.

There are many factors used in establishing credit, in considering whether an issue of debentures should be approved or not, and the Ontario Municipal Board, I am sure, will realize that debenture issues will be eligible for certain grants under the forgiveness feature of this particular Act. There are also the special grants of different kinds; such as, under the winter works incentive programme, the areas of slow growth that have been designated are entitled to higher grants than the rest of the municipalities in the province. We in Ontario have also increased our grants towards winter works in those areas of slow growth as designated by the federal government.

I might mention that the other facilities of the government of Ontario, such as the Ontario Water Resources Commission, the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation, which assists the financing of municipal projects of different kinds, will continue to be available. I think that we should bear in mind that many of these projects which will be constructed under this legislation will be projects of a self-liquidating type; and the municipal board there again will look at the whole financial picture of the municipalities. I am assured by the board that the applications for approval will be dealt with as expeditiously as possible. We in The Department of Municipal Affairs are making arrangements to provide additional staff to be certain that we will be able to deal with these applications, when they come to us, as quickly as is humanly possible.

I would hope, with the inquiries that we have had from the municipalities so far, that there will be a goodly number of these projects which will get underway in the not-too-distant future. There may be other matters, Mr. Speaker, that I have not answered. Oh, yes, there was a statement made by the hon. member for Yorkview that land was not eligible for a loan. I am not sure whether I understood him correctly or not; did he say that?

Mr. Young: Land purchase is what I referred to. One problem that we face in planning is that of purchasing land, and I quoted Mr. Diefenbaker about this need. This legislation does not cover that kind of land purchase for future planning.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: But insofar as the loans under this Act are concerned, Mr. Speaker, there is a limitation to the proportion of the loan which is for land purchases. I thought that was what he was referring to.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole House.

House in committee; Mr. J. F. Edwards in the chair.

Clerk of the House: Bill No. 1, an Act to assist municipalities to finance capital works.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 1 stand as part of the bill?

Mr. R. Nixon (Brant): Sir, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) a moment ago made much of the fact that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) had had the federal authorities include elementary and secondary school boards in the meaning of the Act. I was just wondering what financing these school boards would be doing that would be of a nature that would not be in their plans so that they would be able to take advantage of this credit?

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Chairman, I think if we were to consider the use of the term acceleration: a school board might have planned, for the sake of argument, to construct a new school or an addition to a school by, we will say, a year hence; they would undertake it now because of the 16 per cent forgiveness feature which would make it interesting enough that they could absorb, yes, I think that would be the right word, the capital debt at this time as against some time hence.

Mr. Nixon: Actually have the facilities unused for the accelerated time?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Yes, that could be used. They would have to figure that out because sometimes, you know, if there are too many classrooms vacant then of course the education grants are affected. The boards will be very careful about that and that is where our department also will warn them and have a great interest in this, because I think that from the experience of the officials of The Department of Municipal Affairs that we can warn people as to whether or not their request for a project seems to be a feasible one.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Now, with the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Minister, are you going to warn them over and above the type of warning the municipal board presently gives?

I posed this question in my original remarks and maybe this is the point where we can get an answer. What is your role going to be vis-à-vis the municipal board?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, the role of The Department of Municipal Affairs is an advisory role and we on many occasions appear before the municipal board to provide statistical information and other data to the board. We will continue to do that and perhaps intensify our service in that regard—that is part of the service of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Singer: Now, with the greatest respect, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Minister, that was not what I was asking. As I understand it, the application will come in to you and accompanying it must be a municipal board approval; are you in fact going to be a rubber stamp for the municipal board or are you prepared to overrule them; and if you are, on what basis?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: No, I am not prepared to overrule the municipal board and I am sure that you realize that you would not want me to do that.

Mr. Singer: Well, then, you are a rubber stamp.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: No, I am not going to rubber stamp anything. I am just explaining to you that we already have some, I think about 75 inquiries, with respect to projects that might qualify. Therefore, it is the responsibility of our department to be of assistance to these municipalities that have made inquiries. With the services of our finance branch, for instance, we can assist the municipalities in preparing the applications to the Ontario Municipal Board so that they can get approval of their debenture issue.

We have other services of government that can assist municipalities in providing some technical advice with regard to certain projects, such as, our Ontario Water Resources Commission. We are there to assist the municipalities and not to let them out or leave them without any advice. We have a group of people who are highly trained and who have experience and who can assist our less than 1,000 municipalities in this province.

Nothing wrong with that! The Municipal Board have the final word as to whether or not an issue of debentures will be approved and not The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Singer: Well, I think that is very commendable, Mr. Chairman, that the department is going to assist municipalities; I always thought that was what the department was there for, to be of assistance.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: That is what we always do.

Mr. Singer: But do I now detect from the hon. Minister an answer to my question that the approval for the loan is not going to be made by the department but it is going to be made by the municipal board?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Just a minute, now. We are now talking about two different things and now I see what you are driving at. There are two matters that we are concerned with. One is the Ontario Municipal Board approval for the debt; that is number one. Number two is the approval of The Department of Municipal Affairs for the project—we have to certify that it will fit within the four corners of the federal Act because if we do not, if it does not fit in accordance with the federal understanding of the federal Act, we are not going to be able to borrow the money and so Ontario will be stuck with it.

There are two approvals needed—the Ontario Municipal Board will approve the issue of debentures; The Department of Municipal Affairs will approve the project.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I still do not think the hon. Minister and I are talking about the same things. Let me try again.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Oh, yes, we are.

Mr. Singer: Municipality X comes in and says: we would like to have approval for this waterworks and to do that we have to go to the municipal board and get our approval.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: No, not for the project; for the issue of debentures.

Mr. Singer: All right, for the issue of debentures.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: That is right.

Mr. Singer: I am certain as I understand these inquiries and as I have heard them take place, that it will become evident in the evidence produced to the municipal board what is involved, including the information that this is part of an application under this Act that we are talking about now. So what I am saying in effect is that if the municipal board gives their approval they are giving the only approval that is really necessary and you are just going to pass it on, are you not?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: No, that is incorrect and I have already explained it. I cannot be more specific unless I get my lawyers to write the hon. member a letter.

Mr. Young: That would be a good idea.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, in regard to these school projects and the applications you may have, we will say for secondary school or elementary school, would the plans, the work plans of the school or additions and so forth, still have to be approved by The Department of Education before the application is granted or is that going to be entirely separate from The Department of Education?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, of course, these plans will have to be approved by The Department of Education in the same way they always are.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister said a moment ago that it would be the responsibility of his department to see whether or not the application came within the four-square of the federal plan, four corners. Now is it true that this will be decided upon on resolution of the municipality applying only?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I cannot anticipate what the rulings of the board will be. Now I am speaking of the federal board set up under The Municipal Development and Loan Act. I say to you for us, for Ontario, to support an application to the board for a loan we will require a resolution of the council, the council stating that in its opinion this project is one which fits the requirements of the federal legislation.

Mr. Young: May I ask the hon. Minister a question regarding this ceiling which the Ontario Municipal Board has sort of established in the past? Now these borrowings under this legislation will be in addition to regular borrowings, otherwise they cannot be mediated to the municipality. This means if the municipality is at its ceiling, and I suppose most of the municipalities are, then this loan will be over and above what the Ontario Municipal Board has considered up to this time. Has there been any real consideration on the part of this government, perhaps in co-operation with the board, as to whether this ceiling can be raised so that municipalities which are now at their ceiling, vis-à-vis the Ontario Municipal Board, can come under this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, I would say that there is no set ceiling that the Ontario Municipal Board uses, because the financial implications and the debenture debt of municipalities vary from one to another; the number of years of debt, the amount of debt which is self-liquidating, the amount of debt which is at a high rate of interest, the amount of debt at a low rate of interest and so on and so forth.

In casual conversations you might say among municipal people they say: Well the municipal board uses a figure of 20 per cent of the assessment or in some cases 25 per cent of the assessment, sometimes it happens that on short-term debts the percentage is even greater than 25 per cent. I think that under these circumstances the best thing for us to do is to let the Municipal Board and the department's finance branch and the municipal officials and their experts present their case before the Municipal Board and see in what manner the board will adjudicate upon the case and decide.

We are now trying to anticipate situations which may never arise. There are some municipalities in this province where the debenture debt is at a high figure. There are many other municipalities where the debenture debt is comparatively low. I know in my own community, where I have lived for many years, that our debenture debt is among the lowest of the municipalities of the province.

There are things that we would like to have—pave the streets with gold and so on—but we are quite willing to put up with it as it is. So I think we will have to be conscious of the fact that there are going to be problems that the Municipal Board will have to deal with; and I think the experience of the past years has shown they are able to deal with these matters in a conscientious way and in that way be of the greatest service to the municipalities.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, the Municipal Board today has two more members than it had a year ago so I think we are well prepared.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, let me return to the question raised again by my hon. colleague, the hon. member for Brant, and what I referred to a little earlier, as a possible veto part of municipal councils. As I understand the hon. Minister, he said that if a board of education, public or secondary, wants an approval they will have to come to the municipality and ask for it.

Earlier this morning, he said it is in the normal way. But now he has added something new that is not in the normal way; and that is that the municipality will be forced to pass a resolution saying that this is necessary, that this is in the spirit of the Act. So I return again to the question I asked earlier: Are you not now giving municipal councils apparently an absolute veto as to whether or not boards of education can take advantage of this? If they refuse to pass the resolution, they will not get the loan. Is that not a veto?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Well, we are getting a little technical now and I think that the hon. member is entitled to his opinion and I am entitled to mine. I would suggest to him that there is good co-operation between the school boards, the boards of education, and the municipal councils generally. There again we will have to live with this and just see how it works out.

Mr. Singer: Well then, it is a veto.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: No, it is not.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Minister, my own community happens to have a five-year capital works programme. Now, would only projects after that five-year period be eligible for this assistance or anything, say, within the period 1965-1966?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I think the hon. member has to read the bill, the federal bill, which uses the term "acceleration". I dealt with that in my remarks this morning.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Oh no, it has to be a new project. But it can be a project which is part and parcel of a term plan.

I will read the proper section of the federal Act:

When a municipality has received the provincial approval the board may in accordance assist the municipality with the financing of a municipality project or part thereof by the provision of the loan under this Act in circumstances where the board is satisfied (a) that the municipal project or part thereof would not without such assistance have been included among the capital works projects to be undertaken by the municipality within such period and that its inclusion therein will not result in any other capital works project of the municipality being replaced or postponed within such period.

So that if a municipality has a programme—and many of them in the province have capital works programmes prepared on a five- or ten-year basis—the municipal board requires these, and I believe that some 150 municipalities already have filed these with the municipal board. And all that they have to do is accelerate the programme, as I understand it, to fit in with the requirements of the federal Act. They might move 1965 to 1964 or June of 1964 to December of 1963.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): In the agreement with Ottawa, is there a federal inspection clause?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Yes, there is a federal inspection clause.

Mr. Nixon: It has already been mentioned on several occasions that the hon. Minister should use his power to allocate this credit to regions where there is greater unemployment than elsewhere or something like that.

I wonder if the hon. Minister would comment on this, whether it is going to be first come, first served, per capita, or what?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to attempt to sort out how these funds are going to be allocated, depending on the number of requests we get. We are going to notify every inquirer, every municipality that has inquired, that once this bill is passed we are going to circularize to them the complete details of the operation of this loan fund.

In that way, within the next short while, we will have a pretty good idea of what projects will be applied for.

We are going to keep a—well, a sort of a record, you might say—that there have been inquiries. We will keep funds available until a certain time next spring or something of that nature. Remember that our total here in Ontario is only about $136 million that can be used up until March 31, 1966; that is not a great deal of money. It has been suggested by one of the hon. members that Toronto will take one-third of it. That will be about the way it will work out.

Mr. Nixon: So the hon. Minister does have a sort of mental allocation—

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: It is rather a per capita allocation, is that it?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Well, that is one way of doing it and that would be the fairest way of doing it, if that can be done.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. Minister feels then it would be the fairest way to do it, on a per capita basis? I want to remind him, as one who comes from a constituency where there are a large number of rural municipalities and many of these have living in them citizens who normally work in cities elsewhere, it must be borne in mind that their rights to this credit will have to be looked after very carefully.

I would also like to remind the hon. Minister that these small municipalities do not have large staffs advising them. They are normally a group of farmers who meet maybe once or twice a month; and although the letter from the hon. Minister may be on file in the office, they might not just be aware of everything that is going on. I certainly do not want to imply that these people are in any way incapable—as a matter of fact they are very capable of running the affairs of the municipality—but I do hope that the department will see to it that when allocation comes around the needs of these small municipalities will be kept in mind.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Oh, very definitely, for the very reason as I mentioned some while ago about the service of the department. We realize that there are many municipalities which do not have chartered accountants as their treasurers, and graduates of universities as town or township clerks.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, may I have clarification as to exactly what subsection 1 of Section 4 means when it says the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may borrow or raise by way of loan in the manner provided by The Financial Administration Act, such sums as he may deem requisite for the purposes of this Act, and of the agreement entered into under Section 2? If the provincial board is going to loan only money that it got from the federal board, it is not going to supplement in any fashion the one-third that is left to the municipalities. In other words, it is not going to meet the point that the hon. member for Yorkview raised: Why do you need this power here to raise money; for what purpose?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: We will need funds—

Mr. MacDonald: To administrate it?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: No. It will be funds to assist the municipalities with partial payments; and it takes time to process them to get our money back from Ottawa. That is under The Financial Administration Act.

Mr. MacDonald: It is in effect—

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Working capital.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, the thing that disturbs me about this bill, and when we are talking about the bill really we have to take the federal legislation and the provincial legislation together. It becomes a unit that presumably is going to meet the objective we have spelled out; and that objective is to increase employment in the under-employed areas.

I listened very carefully to what my colleague, the hon. member for Yorkview, spelled out in terms of the difficulties that the very areas that need this are going to face in being able to avail themselves of the money under this Act. They are under-employed areas; they are likely to be areas therefore whose position vis-à-vis the Municipal Board in terms of considering further debentures is going to be a critical one. And the Municipal Board may have to lift the ceiling and be a little bit more generous if they are going to permit them to come under.

If they are under-employed areas they are going to have taxation difficulties and will have difficulties in paying the loan back. In other words, inevitably, if you are going to fulfil the objective of the overall purposes of the federal and provincial bills, of coping with unemployment, I submit to you that my hon. colleague has made a very strong case. You simply cannot do it if you are going to dump even one-third of the responsibility on the municipal taxpayer.

He made a comment to the effect that we have learned nothing and have forgotten nothing since the 1930's—at least one-third of it—we have learned nothing and we have forgotten nothing. We are unloading on the municipal taxpayer the problem of providing full employment during the period of economic recession or stagnation that we have in this country, or at least to cope with the problem of providing full employment.

It seems to me that you may find people who will take this money because it is a relatively small amount of money. We could get one or two projects in the Metro area which could gobble up half the money very easily; they could use it very, very readily, so there is no problem in getting rid of the $136 million or $138 million.

The problem is, are you going to get rid of it to fulfil the objective of meeting unemployment in the under-employed areas? And if this is the objective which is the one we must pursue, I submit we have ineffective legislation. The only way in which you can make it effective is that the provincial government should make money available for the remaining one-third that is not met, with also equivalent forgiveness features.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, just to underline this point, I want to move an amendment, that since you have the powers here to borrow more money—I am talking of subsection 1 of Section 4—it be amended to add thereto:

such sums to include monies for the setting up of the fund designed to provide municipalities with loans up to one-third of the total cost of projects entered into under the provisions of this Act.

In other words, this would make it possible for the provincial government to say: "Here is a municipality that has unemployment, it wants to come to grips with it, we are going to provide the loan for the final one-third", and I would add, though it is not covered in this amendment, I would think it would be only fair that the same forgiveness features would be in it. You would still be leaving the municipalities with the responsibility of borrowing the money but they would be getting it from the provincial government at more favourable rates with a comparable forgiveness features so that you would have 25 per cent across the whole board, instead of only 25 per cent of the two-thirds. In this way, I think you really would fulfil the objectives. So I move, seconded by Mr. Young, the amendment that I read just a moment ago.

Mr. Chairman: It is out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: How?

Mr. Chairman: It is the expenditure of government funds.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, at this hour I do not want to get into an argument. We are not spending funds; we are commending legislation to authorize the government to borrow money.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: What about the forgiveness feature the hon. member suggested?

Mr. MacDonald: That is not in my amendment. If you are going to be technical about it, I am talking about this government being able to borrow money so that they could then in turn loan it for the final one-third.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: I rule that it is out of order as the borrowing of money requires that it be introduced by a Minister of the Crown with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I accept your ruling; I have made my point. I think the legislation is going to be ineffective for the municipalities that need it.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, I can only repeat what I said at the very beginning of my remarks: We are a very charitable group here on this side of the House; we are willing to co-operate with any government and this is entirely Ottawa's problem; we are only going to give them a hand of friendship and assistance.

Mr. Nixon: Unemployment is entirely Ottawa's—

Mr. MacDonald: I was very interested in a comment that I was not aware of, namely, the hon. Minister's contention that the Finance Minister contended that he was not interested in long-term financing of municipalities.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: That is right; he made that statement.

Mr. MacDonald: It is in contradiction of his statement somewhere else that my colleague, the hon. member for Yorkview, read; namely that when we have expended this $400 million he would be willing to consider more, so apparently he is contradicting himself.

Mr. Singer: No. No contradiction at all.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: I think I have the floor, have I not, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Either be factual or—

Mr. MacDonald: I am being factual. All I am saying is that if he is not interested in the long-term financing of municipalities, then he would not have said on another occasion that he would contemplate the proposition of loans beyond the $400 million.

Section 4 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: It being one of the clock, I will leave the chair until 2:30 p.m.

It being one of the clock p.m., the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2:30 o'clock, p.m.

On section 5:

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, on section 5, I have read it several times and I am not quite sure what it means. I wonder if the hon. Minister could elaborate on it. The language is a little difficult to follow, it is to me.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The language is simple enough.

Mr. Singer: Well, all right, the words are simple, but what does it mean?

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): This is to permit loans with the Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation being participants in this programme. The municipality could borrow their one-third from OMIC without any prejudice to this Act. Generally, I would say that is what—

Mr. Singer: Well, that perhaps opens up a somewhat different field of inquiry. Did I gather from your remarks earlier today that you intend to re-vitalize OMIC? OMIC has pretty well slipped into—

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Oh no, not at all. OMIC is healthy—

Mr. Singer: Are you going to give it a shot in the arm?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: OMIC is functioning every day of the week.

Mr. Singer: Yes, it is functioning, but at quite a high rate of interest and it is not the thing that municipalities are anxious to resort to at all. In the annual figures, as I recall them, I am just bringing them back out of memory, the resort to OMIC has been quite minimal over the four years that I have been in here. You intend to do something to re-vitalize OMIC, to use it to a greater extent than it has been used in the past?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Well, it is entirely up to the municipalities and the school boards if they wish to use OMIC. If they are able to raise money elsewhere that satisfies their purposes sufficiently, there is no need for them to use OMIC. OMIC is operated on the basis of cost plus, that is the interest cost of provincial funds, plus a small service charge.

Mr. Singer: What is your OMIC rate today?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I believe it is six per cent.

Mr. Singer: I believe you quoted earlier figures of about five point six.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Five point six seven!

Mr. Singer: So that there is a quarter of one per cent?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: About that.

Mr. Singer: A penalty if you go into OMIC.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Well, that is the cost of operating.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Sections 5 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 1 reported.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee rise and report Bill No. 1 without amendment.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report Bill No. 1 without amendment, and moves the adoption of the bill.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves third reading of Bill No. 1.

Motion agreed to; third reading of the bill.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor entered the Chamber and took his seat upon the Throne.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Lieutenant-Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly of the province has at its present sitting thereof passed one bill which in the name and on behalf of the said Legislative Assembly I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

Assistant Clerk: The following is the title of the bill to which Your Honour's assent is prayed: "An Act to Assist Municipalities to Finance Capital Works".

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor doth assent to this bill.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was then pleased to deliver the following gracious speech.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe: Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, the first session of the Twenty-seventh Parliament is nearly drawing to a close and it is now my duty to prorogue it.

During this special session you have passed legislation permitting the province to enter an agreement with the federal government with regard to certain municipal works. Two select committees, which ceased to exist with the dissolution of the last Legislative Assembly, have also been reconstituted and their members appointed.

Many thanks are extended to you for your work at this special session.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of the Legislative Assembly, it is the will and pleasure of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor that this Legislative Assembly be prorogued, and this Legislative Assembly is accordingly prorogued.

His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor, retired from the Chamber.

The House prorogued at 2:50 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Wednesday, January 15, 1964, being the first day of the second session of the Twenty-seventh Parliament of the Province of Ontario for the despatch of business pursuant to a proclamation of the Honourable W. Earl Rowe, Lieutenant-Governor of the province.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 15, 1964

The House met at 3.00 o'clock, p.m.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor entered the House and, being seated upon the Throne, was pleased to open the session with the following gracious speech.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Lieutenant-Governor):

Mr. Speaker and hon. members of the legislative assembly of Ontario, it gives me great pleasure to welcome you to the opening of the second session of the 27th Parliament of Ontario. At this session, hon. members, you will have an opportunity to study and review the government's economic and financial programmes including the budget and the departmental estimates, and the new legislation, all of which is designed to continue the expansion of our province and to promote the welfare of our people, so that Ontario will continue to remain in the forefront as the "province of opportunity".

The extent of the opportunities available to all residents in this province is of tremendous inspiration and advantage to the youth of Ontario. Of major interest today is the encompassing participation of our younger people in public affairs and political life. For instance, as a result of events following the dissolution of the last House, the youngest group of members in our entire history now holds seats in the Legislature. There are 23 members aged 40 and under. The average age of the 108 legislators is 49. These new hon. members are buttressed by a large group of able and experienced men who have served in the House for varying periods of time and whose knowledge of and familiarity with legislative matters and practices will assure continuity and be of great assistance.

I extend my greetings and best wishes to hon. members and include for special mention the hon. lady member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard). It is a matter of deep satisfaction to all of us that once again a woman's voice will be heard in this Legislature. May her success result in an even greater representation in the years to come.

The large majority of hon. members chosen by the people of Ontario to support the government will not be cause for complacency. It is the policy of the government that every hon. member of the House will play his part, and take his place, in serving the interests of Ontario and its citizens. You will, therefore, be asked to approve the appointment of several select committees to assure that the talents of hon. members are fully utilized and that they make their full contribution.

Hon. members, it is of great importance to all of our countrymen, particularly to the youth of today, who will be challenged by the problems of tomorrow, that the "banner province" should continue to play, as in the past, a major role in the promotion of unity in the Canadian nation. One cannot fail to realize that in the development of such a huge land, differing from region to region in resources and economic opportunities, in language, and in the customs of its people, continuing understanding and, indeed, sacrifice are required. Our forebears clearly perceived these needs. The Fathers of Confederation never underestimated them. Most important of all, however, was their realization that this far-flung nation reaching from sea to sea could only grow and develop and prosper in an atmosphere of concord and amity amongst its people.

It was in this spirit of perception and goodwill that representatives of the government of Ontario participated in the federal-provincial conference last November. There they made known their views to the federal government with whom, at least as it affected the fiscal arrangements which were imposed, rested the final decision.

It was the submission of Ontario that the tax-sharing arrangements had been in operation for less than two years of their five-year term. They had been evolved after long months of careful study and consideration. With three years in the arrangements yet to run, there was a natural reluctance to accept the changes imposed which would result in providing a less favourable distribution of revenue to Ontario in relation to that of other provinces. In the end, as a contribution to Canadian unity, Ontario did not oppose the revision.

The principle of providing fiscal-need payments as a right to less favoured provinces had been endorsed and advocated by Ontario for many years. The interpretation and application of this principle, however, can create difficulties. The recognition of the concept of "fiscal need" or "equalization" can be extended to a point that not only involves grave inequities but also destroys the revenue-producing power of the provinces or regions that provide the funds from which the fiscal-need payments are made. It is a hard economic fact that the rapidly growing regions require the greatest expansion of services. In the conferences that lie ahead, the fiscal arrangements must be such that they do not impair Ontario's ability to finance its rapid industrial and community growth. The programme to be submitted to hon. members will reveal the vast obligations and responsibilities confronting us if we are to maintain a healthy climate for economic growth and play our part in keeping Ontario and Canada strong.

This does not mean that Ontario will be unmindful of the needs of the federal government or of the other provinces. We will co-operate in promoting the even development of all of Canada. We will resist attempts to divide us through economic competition among the provinces. The fragmentation of the Canadian market by preferential price treatment policies at the provincial level will render all provinces less competitive both at home and abroad. Every Canadian has a stake in maintaining the national market and the benefits from industrial specialization. Canada has reached a state of prosperity and development achieved in few lands. It has done so through a working partnership and by acting as a single nation from shore to shore. It is my government's hope that the people in all provinces will work to keep it that way.

It is with a sense of pride in our accomplishments that we can turn to a review of the performance of the economy in 1963. This is particularly true because of the rewarding role played by my government in its well-timed and very successful trade crusade.

The over-all growth of the economy continued at a rapid pace in 1963 and this is expected to continue in 1964. The current period of economic expansion which started in 1961 has become the longest in the post-war period.

Recognizing the need for a high level of employment and economic growth, for strengthening secondary manufacturing and for an improvement in the balance of payments, my government introduced the Ontario Trade Crusade, and it can now boast an impressive list of significant results. Opportune timing, imaginative organization, skill and co-operation on the part of industry and labour, along with the devalued dollar, made this one of the most successful programmes ever adopted by government. Merchandise exports during 1963 were close to nine per cent higher than the year before, while imports rose at a much smaller rate. The sharpest increase in exports occurred in manufactured products, the bulk of which came from Ontario.

The employment objectives have also been very successful. In 1963, our buoyant economy produced 60,000 new jobs and unemployment fell to an average for the year of 3.8 per cent in Ontario, compared with 5.6 per cent for Canada as a whole. The gross provincial product of Ontario rose by another six per cent to $18 billion. Total industrial production exceeded that of the previous year by over four per cent, with the manufacturing sector expanding by five per cent. New capital investment in the province last year reached $3.2 billion, which is the highest level since the record year of 1957. The advances in production and employment resulted in a healthy 5.5 per cent rise in personal income during the year.

To further improve our productive and expanding economy, many bold new programmes and measures will be introduced by my government, including the following.

As part of the trade crusade, the government will further expand and intensify its trade promotion efforts. The successful programme of sales missions abroad will be maintained. So that Ontario products will become better known around the world, we will institute a new programme of participating in national and international trade shows, in close co-operation with the federal government.

Also, we will intensify our efforts to promote Ontario products in the United States and to encourage the production in Ontario of products at present imported from the United States, and to explore the possibility of further trade with eastern Europe. A series of community clinics for trade expansion will be sponsored during the year and a two-day seminar for municipal industrial commissioners will be held. My government has been pleased with the recognition given to provincial efforts in export and industrial promotion and regional development by the federal government and by the intention to hold annual federal-provincial meetings to discuss programmes for the following years.

In co-operation with the Canada Economic Council, the Ontario Economic Council will broaden its work in the coming year, especially in the field of long-range planning to ensure consistent economic growth for Ontario over the long term.

The activities of the Ontario Development Agency will be extended in the coming fiscal year through increased services to our industrial community. Already the agency has been responsible directly and indirectly for 3,300 job opportunities and nearly $13 million in additional annual exports, and has provided advisory services to more than 600 Ontario firms.

An intensive examination of the administrative functions of a number of departments of government and the set-up of their branches has been made. As a result, certain changes will be proposed, involving the establishment of two new departments—University Affairs and Energy and Resources Management — and the reorganization and modernization of the activities of a number of others, including Labour, Tourism and Information, Attorney-General and Reform Institutions. Government activities and departments will continue to be reviewed in order to ensure that all departments remain at peak efficiency and function in a manner to give the best possible service to the people of Ontario.

With the assistance of substantial government grants, our universities are continuing to expand at a rate sufficient to meet the needs of the rapidly increasing numbers of young people seeking university education, and enough new places were available last year to accommodate the 5,000 additional students who entered academic life.

A new Department of University Affairs will be set up to act as liaison between the government and the universities and, in conjunction with the advisory committee on university affairs, to deal with grants and other university matters.

A new Crown corporation will be established to assist the universities with their capital financing programmes.

Legislation will be introduced to establish the University of Guelph. Provision will be made for an arts college, to be known as Wellington College, as part of the new university. The three present agricultural colleges located at Guelph will continue as at present, though as an integral part of the new university, and will be supported from government funds. A widening of the teaching facilities at Guelph will enable the students attending our agricultural colleges to broaden their educational opportunities.

New universities and university facilities will be opening on schedule. Trent University will open in Peterborough in September and a bill creating Brock University in the Niagara peninsula will be presented. Brock University has secured suitable temporary quarters and the required renovations will be carried out in preparation for opening in September of 1965. The University of Toronto is proceeding with its plans for the development of Scarborough and Erindale Colleges to serve the eastern and western parts of the Metropolitan Toronto area. With the opening of all announced new colleges and universities, there will be 16 degree-granting institutions serving the cause of higher education in Ontario, compared with five only 20 years ago.

The Ontario graduate fellowship programme will be continued during the next school year, and there will undoubtedly be an increase over the 800 students who were awarded fellowships during 1963, to enable them to continue their post-graduate studies.

The province's natural resources of power and water, extensive though they be, are being used up rapidly, with the great expansion of population and industry that has occurred in the last two decades. We need to manage these precious natural assets in a way that will best preserve them for the continued use of ourselves and the generations to come. To achieve this result, The Department of Energy is being expanded into The Department of Energy and Resources Management, which will include the conservation authorities branch, at present part of The Department of Lands and Forests. Also reporting through the hon. Minister of the new department (Mr. Simonett) will be the Ontario Energy Board and the Ontario Water Resources Commission.

The new department will continue the programme of improving oil and gas production in Ontario. Data-processing techniques will be used to record and correlate geological data, in collaboration with the University of Western Ontario.

This will enable the department to produce quickly certain types of geological maps, and the availability of such material will promote increased exploration for gas and oil in Ontario. Construction of the Douglas Point nuclear power station is virtually complete and major items of equipment are being installed with the 200,000 kw unit scheduled for service in 1965.

A provincial water management programme will be a primary responsibility of the new department. With a rapidly increasing population and a soaring per capita use of water, it is imperative that steps be taken immediately to implement water conservation projects designed to restore the receding water tables of the province, to provide sources of water for industrial and domestic requirements and to conserve our great natural heritage of water. This will require the closest co-ordination of the efforts of the conservation authorities, the agricultural rehabilitation and development directorate and the Ontario Water Resources Commission, under the direction of the hon. Minister of the new department.

Recognizing that a provincial water programme will depend largely on combined effective participation at municipal, provincial and federal levels, the government will ask county agricultural committees to become the bases of committees embracing agricultural organizations and other interested groups within the counties to act in an advisory capacity to the water resources commission and the ARD directorate. The Ontario Water Resources Commission has been asked to intensify its studies of Ontario's water resources with particular emphasis on agricultural needs, and will implement steps to ensure adequate water supplies on Ontario farms and for Ontario industries.

The organization of The Department of Labour is being revised and strengthened, with the redefinition of lines of responsibility, the creation of important new administrative positions and the expansion of staff, particularly in the minimum wage, safety inspection, apprenticeship and labour standard branches.

In conformity with the report of Professor Laskin received a few months ago, a new industrial standards Act will be introduced, to meet today's requirements and to provide a more effective instrument for establishing fair working standards in industries and trades.

Amendments will be presented to simplify and speed up proceedings under The Labour Relations Act.

A comprehensive minimum wages programme has been brought into full operation in the Oshawa-Toronto-Hamilton area, where more than one-third of the province's population lives. An organization with a full staff has been set up to administer the programme. The Department of Labour is now completing the first detailed and scientifically based survey of wages and other working conditions ever undertaken in Canada and the data obtained will be the basis for further steps in the minimum wage field. The government now requires fair wages to be paid on all government contracts for highway and building construction.

Following the very successful conference on automation and social change held last September, the government appointed a steering committee to recommend the form that the Ontario Foundation on Automation and Employment will take. The committee's report will provide the basis for the organization of the foundation, which will deal with the problems arising out of automation in our industrial society.

The Apprenticeship Act will be completely modernized, implementing the report of the select committee on manpower training. Certification will be introduced in a number of trades to induce more young people to enter them and to ensure high standards of competence. With an enlarged field staff, the apprenticeship branch is developing a strong programme for the recruiting of apprentices.

The government will introduce a new industrial safety Act to replace The Factory, Shop and Office Building Act. There will be amendments to other safety statutes, including a complete revision of The Operating Engineers Act to bring it into line with modern equipment and technology. New regulations are in force protecting the safety and health of employees in underground work and foundries, and regulations are being drafted to further safeguard the men employed in logging operations. A review of other safety regulations is continuing. The Department of Labour staff engaged in promoting the safety of persons in employment has already been increased and the House will be asked to provide funds for additional personnel. Full-time staff will be provided for the labour safety council.

The new women's bureau is developing programmes relating to present trends and problems in the employment of single and married women, and to their potential role in the labour force, and the House will be asked to provide further funds for this work.

The Department of Travel and Publicity has undergone an extensive reorganization during the past few months to enable it to provide more effective and comprehensive services to tourists and to those engaged in the travel industry. Its name will be changed to The Department of Tourism and Information, in order to convey more adequately its increased duties and responsibilities. The newly formed travel research branch will continue to seek more effective ways of stimulating the province's tourist industry. A major programme will be the preparation of an inventory of Ontario's convention facilities for the purpose of publicizing them more effectively. The advertising, promotion and travel counselling services of the department are to be accelerated to provide services to such special groups as campers and boaters. Representation will be established at several United States points to increase contacts in this important travel market. Thoroughly trained, full-time development officers will be appointed to service resort operators. Travel information centres will be opened at Cornwall, Prescott, Sault Ste. Marie and Middle Falls on the Pigeon River to assist the travelling public using the new international bridges located at these points of entry.

The Department of the Attorney-General is regrouping and consolidating its existing administrative branches into a number of broad functional lines, under the direction of senior staff. These include separate divisions of legislation and civil law, criminal law, administration of justice and public safety. A new branch has been organized to handle the work arising out of The Proceedings Against the Crown Act. The Insurance Act will be amended to provide for certain procedural and administrative changes within the department. Legislation will be introduced to appoint a chief magistrate who will function in respect of the Ontario magistrate courts in a manner similar to that of the chief judge who has been co-ordinating the work of the county and district courts. The Crown Attorneys Act will be amended to provide for the appointment of special Crown attorneys to act throughout the whole province to relieve any delay there may be in the handling of cases. Amendments will be made to The Division Courts Act and other statutes to expedite the handling of work and to afford greater protection to our citizens.

The Ontario Police Commission, which has the widest possible powers of investigation, is continuing its enquiries into organized or syndicated crime existing in or entering into Ontario.

The Department of Reform Institutions is developing new plans to expand progressive policies in the treatment of offenders. With this aim in mind, it will expand academic and vocational training in the various institutions so that the inmates will be better equipped to take their places in society. A psychologist has been appointed director of staff training and a new position of director of education has been created to give greater impetus and direction to this important aspect of our rehabilitation programme. The new rehabilitation and after-care branch now has staff located at 18 institutions and clinics as well as five outside offices. The chaplaincy service has been expanded and a director of chaplain services has been appointed.

A new treatment centre for female drug addicts has been opened at Brampton. Treatment processes over a six-month period include various types of progressive therapy. A new forestry camp for juveniles was opened north of Bowmanville and you will be asked to provide funds to establish more such rehabilitation camps where boys will receive academic instruction and practical training. For the purpose of modernizing the statute, a committee has been appointed to study and recommend revisions to The Training Schools Act. A grant will be given to the institute of criminology being established at the University of Toronto. This institute will analyze all aspects of the science of criminology, including the study of the causes and prevention of crime and the treatment of the offender.

The Ontario Foundation Tax Plan presented last session is being implemented this year to further the equality of educational opportunity to all the young people of the province. The general legislative grants to elementary and secondary school boards will be substantially increased to attain the objective of the plan and to relieve the tax burden placed by the cost of education on municipal taxpayers.

The policy of providing text books without direct cost to the student will be extended to Grades 9 and 10 beginning in September of this year. This policy represents a further step in the equalization of educational opportunity throughout the province. The problems of distribution and supply will be eliminated for these grades since school boards will provide the text books and will receive additional grants to make this possible. At the same time, boards will be encouraged to exercise every economy possible and, through carefully planned replacement policies, to ensure the full and economical use of every book.

The new bilingual teachers' college in Sudbury for students preparing to teach in schools attended by French-speaking pupils opened last September, with an enrolment of nearly 150. This enrolment indicates the necessity for a teachers' college of this kind. We look forward to its continuing, successful operation.

Agreement has been reached with the University of Western Ontario for the operation of a new Ontario College of Education to serve the population of western Ontario. Plans for the building are now completed and tenders will be called immediately.

New trade institutes are under construction at Ottawa, London and Sault Ste. Marie. Further institutes are planned for Hamilton and Welland. A new institute of technology is being built in Ottawa and an addition is being planned for the institute at Kirkland Lake. The Ryerson Polytechnical Institute will soon operate under its own board of governors. A new branch of The Department of Education is giving full attention to activities in the field of technological and trades training, including all programmes under the federal-provincial vocational training agreement.

The needs of youth are receiving special attention on the part of the government. A select committee of the Legislature will be set up to study the whole question of greater youth participation in every sphere of community life and the place and problems of young people in a modern technological society. A youth branch has been established in The Department of Education to co-ordinate the activities of private, voluntary and government agencies in this field.

The Department of Public Welfare will continue its support of charitable institutions which give specialized care to children, the elderly and handicapped persons. The department will arrange with the Association of Children's Aid Societies to carry out additional research in the child-welfare field. It will work towards the consolidation of welfare services at the county and district level. The new programmes of allowances to widows and single women at the age of 60 and extension of mothers' allowance benefits to families where a child over 18 is at high school has proven of great value. Further funds will be requested for these programmes.

The government is most concerned with the problems of older persons, extending beyond public welfare measures. The fact that our elderly population is substantially increasing indicates that a comprehensive examination of their economic, social and medical needs is necessary to guide us in future legislative action. A select committee of the Legislature will be established to carry out this review. This committee will be prepared to co-operate with the Senate committee on aging.

A record number of proposals has been received for rental housing and land assembly projects. Construction is under way or will begin in the spring on a greater number of projects than in any previous year. Nearly 50 per cent of these will be in communities in northern Ontario. The former federal policy precluded the development of housing projects in small communities and one-industry towns, but now any community in Ontario which needs rental housing may qualify.

A new form of housing development will be started this year in Hamilton, and a similar scheme is under consideration in Toronto. Under these schemes, existing houses in redevelopment areas will be bought, rehabilitated and rented to low-income families, under federal-provincial housing arrangements. This type of development will serve to encourage private owners to carry out similar improvements. You will be asked to provide funds for studies to determine the form and extent of assistance that would be necessary to enable low-income or moderate-income families that now occupy or qualify for a low-rental housing occupancy to become home-owners.

A course of training in housing and property management will be instituted to provide a nucleus of highly trained property management personnel for the residential, commercial and institutional fields and especially for the staff of housing authorities.

Proposals to be submitted in the final report, expected this session, of the select committee on municipal legislation will be given due study and consideration.

Grants for hospital beds were increased during the year to a basis of $3,200 per bed from the previous $2,000 grant. Funds will be requested to meet these payments for the coming fiscal year. As a result of these increases, hospital construction in Metro and other areas has been stepped up considerably. A study is being made of costs in hospitals which train medical students, with a view to establishing a more realistic basis for grants.

Continued expansion of services is under way, involving in-patient and out-patient departments as well as the opening of the new hospital school at Palmerston. Construction is proceeding on the Psychiatric Institute in Toronto. Two new community psychiatric hospitals have been approved at Windsor and Sudbury and these will offer a comprehensive psychiatric service in space no longer required for the treatment of tuberculosis. Services at the Community Psychiatric Hospital in Ottawa will continue to be expanded.

Psychiatric out-patient services in general hospitals are being encouraged as a supplement to the Ontario Hospitals and to make them real community centres. The government will provide recovery of the cost of approved professional staff for operating psychiatric out-patient services to those public general hospitals in which such units are authorized.

It is expected that five new clinics will be established this year.

As the federal government does not provide coverage for the mentally ill under its hospital-insurance cost-sharing agreements, the province bears the full burden of mental-care costs. Ontario is still pressing the federal government to have the cost-sharing agreement extended to cover the mentally ill.

A number of new projects to improve the methods of air-pollution control will be brought forward. A policy of assistance to municipalities which set up satisfactory air-pollution control programmes will be introduced, with the aim of having the local authorities bring forward proposals of practical value at the local level. Funds will be provided for research projects on the many problems associated with air pollution.

Fourteen ARDA projects costing more than $3,000,000 are now under way and additional projects have been submitted to Ottawa for approval. Projects so far approved include community pasture projects, alternative uses of land projects, soil and water conservation and research projects. In the coming year, emphasis will be given to the agricultural water-supply projects which are of paramount importance to the economic growth of rural Ontario.

Amendments to the junior farmer establishment legislation will be introduced to raise the maximum loan permitted from $20,000 to $40,000. This is in order to provide more adequate credit opportunities for junior farmers and to assist in further strengthening the family farm.

A programme will be presented to eradicate common barberry, which harbours stem rust on oats and is estimated to cost Ontario farmers $6,000,000 a year. The cost of the programme will be shared on an equal basis by the federal and provincial governments.

It is hoped to eliminate this weed within five years.

In order to advance the knowledge of and extend the exploration of Ontario's mineral resources, The Department of Mines will increase its survey and mapping programmes by 25 per cent. There will be 23 geological parties in the field. In a continuation of the co-operative programme between the federal and Ontario governments for an airborne magnetometer survey, a block of 35,000 square miles between Cochrane and James and Hudson Bays will be surveyed this year. A new programme of seismic exploration in rivers emptying into these bays is planned, in conjunction with the federal government. A new office was established in Sudbury for a resident geologist to serve that important mineral area.

In implementation of this government's policy of the full use of all our natural resources for the benefit of our people, a select committee will be appointed to enquire into the exploration, discovery and development of our mineral resources.

The Department of Lands and Forests is expanding its programmes of park development, wildlife preservation and forest management and development. A vast forest regeneration programme is being pursued and it is estimated that 51,000,000 trees will be supplied this year for tree planting projects on Crown and private lands.

Following the approval given to the extensive shoreline and parks acquisition programme, a departmental survey and inventory was made and negotiations are being carried on to purchase lands valued at more than $5,000,000. A preliminary report on about 1,000 existing and potential boat landing and servicing sites was prepared under the survey of marine resources and the final report will be prepared this year.

Two new waterfowl hunting areas will be added this year to the nine game and waterfowl public hunting areas used last year. Three public fishing ponds will also be operated. Nearly 1,400 students were accommodated in 60 camps under the junior forest ranger programme last year and a further substantial increase in the number of both junior rangers and camps will be made this year. Measures will be introduced to improve the sport of hunting.

Under the province's highway construction programme, the widening of the Toronto bypass portion of Highway 401 will be accelerated. Elsewhere on 401, the emphasis will be on completing those sections where only two lanes are now in service. In northern Ontario, progress is continuing on Highway 101 between Wawa and Highway 129. In the northwest, the linking of Atikokan and Fort Frances through the extension of Highway 11 will be completed. Construction will start immediately on the new highway link between Sudbury and Timmins, for which 104 miles of new road will be required.

The Roads-to-Resources programme will continue, including work from Savant Lake southerly to Highway 17, and on the Spruce River Road from Port Arthur northerly, the Pickle Crow Road northerly to Lingman Lake and a road from north of Elliot Lake toward Highway 129.

While extension of the King's Highway system and improvement of the existing mileage within it will continue at a high level in 1964, the increasing emphasis of The Department of Highways is on greater financial and other assistance to the municipalities. This is by way of supplementary assistance to certain townships, increased participation in connecting link facilities which tie in with the King's Highways and direct aid to specific major urban projects. More than 200 townships have received an increased rate of road subsidy and the rates have been increased for the connecting link facilities of many municipalities.

The direct aid programme has led to approval of an expressway in Port Arthur and Fort William and for a similar road in Kitchener-Waterloo, with both construction and property acquisition being subsidized at the rate of 75 per cent. The advance payments of subsidies based on the previous year's expenditure, instituted last year, will assist the municipalities in the financing of road work and will minimize financing costs, thus reducing the burden on the municipal taxpayer.

The committee studying transportation in Metropolitan Toronto has already established the physical feasibility of certain commuter-train operations. It will now examine the economic feasibility of commuter services and the impact of transportation planning on land use and other aspects of community development.

Metropolitan Toronto will be eligible for a subsidy of 33⅓ per cent on its expenditure for construction of the right-of-way for the Bloor-Danforth subway, beginning next April 1. The subway grant is a recognition by the province of the unusual transportation problems which face Metropolitan Toronto and will result in an earlier completion of the subway. The cost of such assistance will be offset by the lessened requirement for the expansion of arterial streets and expressways in this area.

The sum of $20 million will be requested to enable a further purchase of debentures of Metropolitan Toronto for subway purposes.

The Royal commission on redistribution is continuing the work involved in effecting a further redistribution of seats throughout the province.

An interim report of the select committee on consumer credit is expected during this session and the government will study it carefully with a view to implementing the measures necessary to protect the people of Ontario. You will be asked to extend the life of this committee so that it may continue its work.

A committee will continue its enquiries into various stock purchase transactions and company reporting, to ensure that the necessary disclosures are made for the information of the investing public.

The centennial of the Canadian Confederation, of which Ontario was one of the founding provinces, will be celebrated in 1967. Plans are proceeding to ensure that the historic significance of the centennial should be observed and commemorated in this province in an appropriate manner.

Following clarification of the programme of the federal authorities, Ontario regulations have been made. The municipalities of Ontario have been sent detailed information by The Department of Municipal Affairs concerning centennial projects which they can undertake and arrangements into which they can enter, and in so doing, qualify for federal and provincial monies available for such purposes.

There are great figures in our Canadian history whose vision and efforts resulted in the establishment of the Canadian Confederation. These are the leaders whose memory we should revere, and of whose achievements all Canadians are entitled to be justly proud. The government is planning to mark, in a special way from time to time, the role played in the life of our country by these great statesmen of the past to whom our homage is due.

Bearing this in mind, it should be noted that on January 11, 1965, will be celebrated the 150th anniversary of the birth of the great Canadian and first Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald. While the sesqui-centennial of the chief architect of Confederation will undoubtedly be organized on a national scale, it will be of particular interest to our province, in which he lived his entire life after coming from Scotland as a lad of five. It was in Ontario that Sir John A. Macdonald first practised law, and began the remarkable career in the course of which his brilliance as a political leader and statesman won for him national and international renown. It is proposed that due honour and recognition be accorded the memory of the great patriot and statesman whose political wisdom, clear vision and unfaltering courage were such decisive factors in placing Canada on the road to nationhood.

The legislative and budgetary programme that is being placed before you this session has been developed to promote the expansion of our province and to extend our economic, social and welfare services. The programme covers all departments of the government. It has been formulated with regard to the needs of the province and the extent of our financial resources.

May Divine Providence bless you and guide you in the course of the deliberations which lie ahead.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was then pleased to retire from the chamber.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that to prevent mistakes I have obtained a copy of His Honour's speech, which I will now read.

(Reading dispensed with.)

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Conveyancing and Law of Property Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Cass) that the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor to this House be taken into consideration tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I would like through you to extend a welcome to the new members who are here. We had a short session in the fall, but this is the first formal session of this government at which relatives and friends can attend the opening and I would like to extend a welcome first to the new hon. members. Thirty-seven men, or 34.2 per cent of the hon. members, are here for the first time. I extend them a welcome, Mr. Speaker, and of course I extend also a welcome to their friends and guests who are present.

I might say things do not always proceed in this chamber in this atmosphere of lightness and sweetness which exists today. I think probably we are embarking, Mr. Speaker, on what might be described as a lively session. I can only assure the company assembled here that while we have varying ideas of how to achieve things, I think perhaps, among the members, we have common aims, and that is the well-being, in the final analysis, of the people of the province.

I would like to draw your attention to some portraits, Mr. Speaker, if I may, that are hanging in the east end of the second floor. We do and will continue to commemorate the men who have served this province. There are six portraits hanging there covering about 34 years of government. Two of them were hung yesterday, if I may put it that way. I do not know how else to put it.

Of these six men whose portraits are on the wall, the first is Mitchell Hepburn, who was Prime Minister from July 10, 1934 until October 21, 1942. Next to him is Gordon D. Conant, who was Prime Minister from October 21, 1942 until May 18, 1943. Next to him—and this is one of the new pictures—is Harry Nixon, whose son sits in this House, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Nixon was Prime Minister from May 18, 1943 until August 17, 1943.

Now we leave one era of Ontario politics. The next man whose portrait is there is George Drew, who was Prime Minister from August 17, 1943 until October 19, 1948. Tom Kennedy's portrait follows; he was Prime Minister from October 19, 1948 until May 4, 1949. The final picture is that of my very dear friend, the Hon. Leslie M. Frost, who is with us today, and who was Prime Minister of this province from May 4, 1949 until November 8, 1961.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the hon. Prime Minister this afternoon and I rise primarily now because I find myself in the unusual experience of being in agreement with everything he has said. I take this occasion to remark upon that because I doubt if there will be many occasions in the days that are to come when my thoughts and his will harmonize to the extent that they have done today.

I, too, offer my congratulations to the new hon. members of the Legislature and express the hope and the belief that they will quickly be assimilated into the work of this Legislature and will be able to make the maximum contribution to the political life of this province. I share my hon. friend's view as well when he anticipates that this will be a lively session. I assure you we will bend our efforts toward making whatever contribution we can to the fulfilment of his prophecy. But, all in all, while I am sure we will disagree on many items that come up in the future of this House, we are, after all, as the hon. Prime Minister has said, conscious of the responsibility that we have here and we are determined to carry it out as we see it should be carried out.

The purpose that all of us have in mind is the same. The avenue or the road that we traverse to attain that objective sometimes is different, but the end result, it is our fervent hope, will be the same. That end would be for the betterment of the people of this province and the strengthening of this province in the chain of provinces throughout Canada.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to comment on an even more remarkable situation—I find myself in agreement with both the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver). I do not know what this presages for the current session. I have been told by both of them it is going to be lively. I shall do my best to fulfil their prediction.

The only comment, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to make—and it is one I have made in the House before, perhaps it is more appropriate now than ever before with some 37 or 38 new hon. members in the House—is that I do not think there is any nobler pursuit than the offer of a man to serve his fellow men in a democratic society in a Legislature such as this. I am hoping that those 38 will find it as satisfying an experience as those of us who have been in the House for quite some time.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 4.10 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JANUARY 16, 1964

The House met at 3.00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves, seconded by Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General), that during the present session of the legislative assembly provision be made for the taking and printing of reports, debates and speeches and to that end that Mr. Speaker be authorized to employ an editor of debates and speeches and the necessary stenographers at such rates of compensation as may be agreed to by him. Also that Mr. Speaker be authorized to arrange for the printing of the reports in the amount of 1,600 copies daily, copies of such printed reports to be supplied to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, to Mr. Speaker, to the Clerk of the legislative assembly, to the legislative library, to each hon. member of the assembly, to the reference libraries of the province, to the press gallery, to the newspapers of the province as approved by Mr. Speaker and the balance to be distributed by the clerk of the assembly as directed by Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, does the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) include the ethnic press when he mentions copies of the debates?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, they are distributed to the newspapers and I assume that the ethnic press is included in the list. In any event, the Speaker has discretion to do this. If they are not included they will be, but I am quite certain they are.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, on the same topic, I certainly think that consideration should be given to having copies sent to the libraries of each of the high schools.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves, seconded by Hon. Mr. Cass, that a select committee of 15 hon. members be appointed to prepare and report at all convenient dispatch, lists of the members to compose the standing committees ordered by the House, such select committee to be composed as follows: Mr. Carruthers, chairman; Messrs. Cowling, Edwards, Ewen, Farquhar, Gisborn, Gomme, Lawrence (Russell), Mackenzie, Rollins, Wells, Whicher, White, Whitney and Yakabuski, and a quorum of the said committee to consist of four members.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): I have an observation, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to make with respect to this motion. I understand that the committee is scheduled to meet at ten, ten-thirty—one o'clock on Monday? Well that is quite all right. I thought it was earlier than that, pardon me.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, in this connection, is the hon. Prime Minister going to inform the House of some plans with regard to standing committees? Next motion? Sorry.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves, seconded by Hon. Mr. Cass, that standing committees of this House for the present session be appointed for the following purposes: 1. on agriculture; 2. on education, health and welfare; 3. on government commissions; 4. on highways and tourism; 5. on labour, legal and municipal bills; 6. on natural resources, wildlife and mining; 7. on private bills; 8. on privileges and elections; 9. on public accounts; 10. on standing orders and printing; which said committees shall severally be empowered to examine and enquire into all such matters and things as shall be referred to them by the House and report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, what we are doing with this motion is consolidating the committees that we have had in previous years and moving some like functions together. The purpose of this change is to see if we cannot have our committees operate in a somewhat more efficient manner than they have in the past. We had 18 committees last year, but under this year's arrangement we have ten. There are no subjects ruled out. Everything that was involved in the 18 committees last year is involved in these ten committees. In other words, it is a consolidation.

I would hope that these can be big committees. In other words, as many people as want may sit on these committees, but we should be able to arrange it that no two committees will sit at the same time. This may not be possible 100 per cent, but this is what we will arrange for. When a committee does meet it will have a proper agenda and a proper line-up of business to be dealt with.

I am also attempting to have the agenda for these committees prepared at least five days prior to meeting. It is the case, of course, with the private bills committee by statute, that the agenda must be set down five days ahead. I am going to attempt to do this with these other committees. The agenda that they will be dealing with will be on the notice boards around the building so that each hon. member will be able to inform himself of what is coming before these committees. I would hope in this way that we will have a more satisfactory arrangement than previously. If necessary, as the work of the session goes along, we can take a day, a week perhaps, and not sit here. Hon. members will recall that several years ago we reserved Wednesdays for committee days. In my opinion this proved to be highly unsatisfactory. It simply meant that everybody went home in the middle of the week. I did not notice that the committees functioned any more efficiently. However, if this proves to be necessary, we are sufficiently flexible that if the time comes when we need a day off to deal with committee work, we can do so.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, speaking to this motion and in an endeavour to continue the very pleasant atmosphere with which the House got started yesterday and has continued today, I suppose we shall not formally oppose this motion, but I did want to take the opportunity to express some reservations. Especially is that so when it comes home to me that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) has now informed us that, I believe it is labour, legal and municipal bills, are to be consolidated within the purview of one committee. As I say, we are willing to try it, but I want to put on record my reservations. I have always felt that the legal bills committee was the place for the lawyers, of which some people feel that we have too many in this House.

Mr. MacDonald: I notice that protest came from the Tory benches where most of the lawyers are.

Mr. Sopha: Speaking fairly seriously on that score, I felt that the legal bills committee was the place where the lawyers hammered out and analyzed from a legal point of view bills that are strictly legal bills and in most part deal with the administration of justice. Now we are informed that labour bills are to go to that same committee and it somewhat buttresses a feeling I always had that one of the problems of labour legislation in the province is that there is too much legalism and too much jurisprudence connected with the subject. That is the main reservation.

In other words, I just do not see how these two, in the words of the hon. Prime Minister himself, are like subjects—matters of a similar nature. I contend that legal bills and labour legislation are two entirely dissimilar subjects. If we find it does not work out, and again adopting one of the words used by the hon. Prime Minister, flexibility—it is a nice word, Mr. Speaker—I hope he will speedily change it, during this session in fact. But we will try it out in order to endeavour to co-operate with the government, of course keeping in mind the reservations that I have expressed.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to make any extended comments on the principle of consolidation which the hon. Prime Minister has just enunciated. It sounds to me like a good idea and one that is worth trying. The hon. member for Sudbury, Mr. Speaker, may have a point that one committee—labour, legal and municipal—is something of a catch-all and one that perhaps we can watch closely and reconsider at a later date if necessary.

However, I think that most of us will agree that our committee system in the past has not worked very well and that this experiment the hon. Prime Minister is proposing provides hope that we will have more effective operation of the committees in the future.

My principal reason for rising, Mr. Speaker, is to refer once again to what I would call the orphan committee. Certainly it has been the orphan in the past and we have no clear assurance from the revised line-up that it will not be an orphan in the future. That is the public accounts committee.

The previous head of this government had—he was a very experienced legislator—a great knowledge of parliamentary procedures, but he did have one rather queer notion and that was that the public accounts committee was a sort of scandal committee, that it never met unless somebody wanted to charge the government or someone else with some scandalous activity. Now I do not really know what authority he ever had for that proposition, because my conception of public accounts committees, and anything I have ever read about them in other jurisdictions, is that they are committees whose function it is to review the spending policies of the various government departments. I would venture to suggest that it has been a great many years since a public accounts committee in this Legislature performed that function.

Last year we once again raised the question of making the public accounts committee operate effectively. My recollection is that its first meeting was called about a week before the adjournment of the Legislature; and everyone knows what it is like in the last week; there is no time to consider anything. It seems to me that this committee should be in a position to undertake a programme of activities so that over the life of this Legislature—which presumably as we see it now—will be for perhaps four years, it can review the accounts of all of the government departments. I would urge upon the hon. Prime Minister that he should arrange for the committee to be called together in the very near future, not waiting for the public accounts to become available, but calling it together immediately so that it can at least map out a plan of action.

I would suggest to him also that he might give consideration to the possibility of providing for the committee to meet between sessions of the Legislature, so that it can carry on this very important function without the members being continuously under the pressure of other business which arises in connection with the meetings of this House.

There has been no effective review of public accounts in this province. The hon. Prime Minister and others—at least, I think it was the hon. Prime Minister—but at any rate some spokesmen for the government, last year suggested that we could undertake a review of past expenditures in committee of supply in this House.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that is a poor procedure. The committee of supply has sufficient to do in simply trying to analyze the government's plans for the future, without considering in any detail how it has administered the funds of the province in the past. In any case, it is not possible in committee of supply to have the provincial auditor and departmental heads and other witnesses present to give information to hon. members. Surely in a democratic society financial accountability is basic, and yet we have no system of financial accountability in this House, or have not had for many years, because of the fact that the public accounts committee has simply not operated.

I would urge upon the hon. Prime Minister that he take steps now, at the beginning of this new Legislature, to rectify this situation, to give the committee an opportunity to do a proper job. As I have suggested, that would be facilitated if he would have an early meeting of the committee so that it could map out a programme of action.

I would also suggest another reason why there should be an early meeting of the committee before the public accounts come down. There should be some inquiry into the reasons for the resignation of Mr. Robert J. Cudney, former Provincial Secretary, rather Deputy Provincial Secretary in the province of Ontario. This, I think, could very appropriately be a committee that could inquire into that matter. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite insufficient when a public servant, a senior public servant of many years standing—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

I think that the hon. member is straying from the motion and I shall have to ask him to confine his remarks to the motion before the House.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I will bring my remarks quickly to a conclusion. I had not intended to go into the Cudney affair other than to indicate that it appeared to me to be an appropriate area for investigation by the public accounts committee and an additional reason why the committee should be called together as soon as possible after it is set up.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I think it is interesting, it is noteworthy, that the hon. Prime Minister has suggested some form of revision to our committee system and the hon. members for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) and Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) have added their views to it. I think all three views put together indicate that there has been much lacking in our system of working committees and it may be that what the hon. Prime Minister proposes is going to be an improvement, but I do not think it is going to be the answer.

One phrase that the hon. Prime Minister used was that the committees will be larger. To my mind, where committees have consisted of 50 members, and many of them have in the past, if the government is going to make them larger, it really means that we are going to have a small session of the Legislature in a committee room and it is going to make it much more difficult to follow any standard programme of procedure and any continuity of study and programming.

In Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, there has been experimentation along these lines with a desire by the government, by all parties represented there, to produce out of the committee system a real method of allowing back benchers to do work and study and to review various government procedures. It would have been my thought that committees could be smaller, much smaller, perhaps eight or ten members. The committees could have assigned to them, and should have assigned to them, permanent groups of civil servants who could do research and study for them. Also, there could and should be assigned to them, permanent groups of civil committees to inquire into various phases of government.

I think we have all noticed, Mr. Speaker, that the defence committee in Ottawa made a pretty thoroughgoing examination of Canada's defence procedures. It was given power by the House of Commons to summon before it various governmental people—civil servants, outside experts and so on—who gave opinions. That committee travelled extensively throughout Canada and other places in order to come to certain conclusions insofar as their opinion relates to the defence policies of this country. Certainly, within the purview of this Legislature there are many such fields that could be assigned specifically to designated committees.

I would suggest they be small in number of members—not larger in number—with specific civil servants assigned, so that there could be research and that sort of thing. In this way, Mr. Speaker, I think a dual purpose could be served. Number one, there could be concentrated study in specific subjects while this House is sitting. Number two, there could be education of individual members of the House into specific government policies and a better understanding promoted. Over a period of years membership in these committees could be rotated among other members in the House, and those who are not sitting on the Treasury benches could have a much better opportunity to participate in government than is allowed at present.

It is encouraging, perhaps, that this motion is brought in, indicating that the government is prepared to have another look at the committee system. I have grave doubts that these changes are going to produce much of an improvement. I think we are going to have more of the same with bigger attendances and more on the agenda and less accomplished, but I would certainly urge upon the government, Mr. Speaker, that some more careful review be made of the committee system, with perhaps a purpose in mind of moving along the line of some of the suggestions that I have made.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would just say to my hon. friend, do not be too pessimistic because I think this will work, and it is not really my intention to make these committees any larger. What I meant to say was, I would not reduce them in size. I do not agree that they should be small, because there are many men here who want to sit on these committees. Of course, the minute you limit the size of a committee, you are going to eliminate some men who want to attend when the committee is sitting.

In regard to the whole committee situation, over the years the committees have taken unto themselves functions they did not have, say, ten years ago, and there are other changes that have taken place. I think perhaps we use the committees too much. I would prefer to see fuller debate on many of these matters in the committee stage in this House when everybody is present. I point out to you that what we do now, for instance, in dealing with estimates, is quite a change from what was done 10 or 15 years ago. At one time the estimates of the entire government were passed in this Legislature in one night. Now we spend sometimes two and three days with both afternoon and night sessions, dealing with the estimates of a department. What really has happened is, that estimates have come to be where a complete review is made of the entire function, policy and operation of a department, sir, and the Minister with his deputies must answer, and does answer, the most searching questions into all the functions of the department.

I think perhaps we have referred too many things to committees which should be dealt with here. Why take a subject and refer it to a small group of this Legislature when we have the means here to debate it fully with everyone present? Committees really, in my opinion, are designed to permit the general public to come and make representations. The type of thing that should go to a committee is that on which the general public may want to come and express its opinion about the legislation being dealt with. Of course, in some instances, some of these matters are properly dealt with in committee stage, but I do not like to see the committees become larger or more powerful than the Legislature itself, because after all, they are only one segment. However, we will try this and see how it functions and we are flexible.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister has made no comment at all on the public accounts committee. Is it going to meet?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, the public accounts committee will be set up. I just noticed last year that it met but none of the hon. Opposition members turned up at the meetings—

Mr. Bryden: When did it meet, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It met on a Monday morning —

Mr. Bryden: But late in the session.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It met on a Monday morning and not a single Opposition member turned up at that meeting.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if I am still in order, I would like to pursue this. The hon. Prime Minister's whole attitude and approach to this clearly is open to the interpretation that the public accounts committee is going to remain the orphan. For the hon. Prime Minister, in an uncharacteristic way, to resort to this argument, that last year the committee met and the Opposition members did not turn up, is simply to ignore the basic fact that the committee met in the last week or ten days or two weeks of the session when clearly it could not do any job.

Mr. Bryden: And we failed to turn up out of protest.

Mr. MacDonald: The question that was put to the hon. Prime Minister was: Is this going to be a meaningful committee; is it going to be called early in the session so that there is some intention to make it a public accounts committee in the tradition of British parliamentary experience? I will not clutter the question up beyond that, and that alone.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, certainly if I were not going to call the committee, I would not set it up in the first place. It will function and I will bring it together. We have gone through this each year for the last three years. I have a programme which I think will definitely make this committee meaningful. I am certainly not going to permit it to be used as a—I did not intend to enter into this debate, but now it is started — I do not intend it to be used as a place where the members can go on witch hunts. It has a function and we will give it work to do.

I would point out too, that it is simple to say we have no examination and so on. We have in the government administration what is called pre-audits. This is done by the provincial auditor and the audit is done on all our accounts prior to the time any disbursements are made. In other words, to get a cheque from the Treasurer, you have to get the approval of the provincial auditor before the cheque is drawn. We have some very good safeguards. On the other hand, these are things obviously not known to members of the House and it might be that a committee could start with a complete examination of how the government does its financing, how the provincial auditor works, and we can move from there into more detailed examination item by item. This is what we had planned to do last year in that famous meeting when the Opposition did not turn up, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to re-emphasize the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Downsview, to the hon. Prime Minister, because I have noticed in previous sessions, Mr. Speaker, where the previous Prime Minister had emphasized with some pride the fact that the committee system really was a method by which hon. members would get information, would get knowledge of different departments, where experts would be called, where people not only in the civil service but outside the civil service—delegations—would be able to come and present views. I suggest that certainly the committees should not override or dominate the position of the Legislature, but having been in Parliament through previous sessions, I must say that the committee system to me—perhaps it is because of personal inadequacies—but I would say I did not get a great deal from the rush and the bustle of having to dash down and attend one committee, get your name ticked off as being on that, see a movie or some such programme, then hurry over to another committee.

But I would say that one committee in which I learned much, was the committee on retraining, of which the hon. Minister from Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Simonett) was the chairman. After having got information, after having experts come to us, having people from outside come and make presentations, I felt that when I came to the House I was more informed and more able to ask sensible questions. I am sure that all of us wish on all sides such background could be developed in committees.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I believe that was a select committee, it was not a standing committee.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, it was a select committee.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: We are dealing with standing committees.

Mr. Thompson: Exactly, but I want to see the standing committees focus and be as effective as the select committees have been.

I would like to say another thing, sir, if I may, about these committees which I found rather ironical. I noticed where there were hon. members on the government side who in the committee meetings would stand up—and I could give many examples, I take the example of retired teachers—where even one hon. member from the government side stood up and said that he would push in the Legislature to see there was a fair deal for the teachers. Now that was behind the closed doors of the committee room. Nothing was recorded in that committee, and I can assure you nothing was said on behalf of those teachers by that hon. member in the Legislature. I would hope that there would be some kind of minutes kept of how these people propose motions, etc., in the committee; that there be some permanent record so that then we could follow through and see that a stand is consistent not only in the committee but also in the Legislature.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I get quite a laugh out of the last speaker, if you do not mind my saying so, because as I recall in the last session the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) was not around very much, either in committee or in the House. Now for him to get up at this stage of the game and expound on his theories of what we should be doing in committees is very humorous—

An hon. member: He was around enough to be re-elected.

Mr. Cowling: The thing for him to do, Mr. Speaker, is to start attending the committees first of all. I think if he would do that and find out what we do in our standing committees, he would be in a much better position to discuss it now.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves that tomorrow, Friday, and each succeeding Friday for the present session, this House will meet at ten-thirty o'clock a.m. and that rule 2 of the assembly be suspended so far as it might apply to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner), notice of which has been given to him.

In view of the fact that the city of Windsor made application to annex the surrounding suburban areas and in view of the fact the Ontario Municipal Board issued an interim annexation report ruling out annexation at that time, when can the city of Windsor expect a final decision on its request to the annexation of the surrounding suburban area?

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. member, I would say that the government does not consider that the situation in the Windsor area justifies the establishment of any new special purpose authority on a regional basis, even as a temporary measure, pending the final disposition of the city's application for amalgamation. At the same time, it should be understood that the government has no intention of interfering with the jurisdiction and the powers of the Ontario Municipal Board or directing the manner or the time within which it should finally dispose of the application in question.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis). Is the hon. Minister aware that school boards are being hampered in the preparation of their budgets for 1964 because they have not yet been informed of the grant structure for this year?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member (Mr. Troy) for notice of this question. I think the answer is very simply, yes; but in view of the fact that I am sure the hon. member has such a great interest in this I might point out to him that some three years ago, if memory serves me correctly, the grant regulations were available in March; some two years ago the latter part of February; last year it was a little earlier in February. I think that I can assure the hon. member that we can look forward to even further improvement this year.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Does the hon. Minister—did he not inform the boards—

Mr. Speaker: No further questions in that relation without the permission of the hon. Minister.

Mr. Troy: May I ask a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Troy: The hon. Minister must be aware that he informed, I understand, the school authorities that they would have that information before Christmas.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The authorities, Mr. Speaker, were never given that information at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to address to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree), a copy of which I have submitted to him in advance.

Pending the final report of the investigation into the advisability of compulsory arbitration of the labour-management disputes in hospitals generally across the province, has the hon. Minister received or requested an interim report on the Trenton Hospital situation where the workers have been on strike for nearly three months?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question I would say that the department has been in touch with the commission appointed under The Public Inquiries Act last fall. I think that a further statement by reading recent correspondence might answer the question more directly.

On my return to the office on January 6 last I reviewed with senior officials of the department the status of the bargaining negotiations which were going on with respect to certain collective labour agreements across the province and with particular reference to the position involving hospitals in Ontario.

On that day I directed the deputy Minister to communicate and get in touch with the chairman of the committee, His Honour Judge Bennett, to make certain inquiries of him and to communicate certain facts with respect to the hospital situation as it then existed. Now it has been indicated that Judge Bennett has no objection to this correspondence being read and I will therefore read a letter directed to His Honour Judge C. E. Bennett of Owen Sound, under date of January 10 of 1964, as follows:

Dear Judge Bennett—

this letter is from the deputy Minister of Labour:

Dear Judge Bennett:

I was pleased to have the opportunity of talking to you by long distance telephone on Monday last, January 6, 1964, as to the arrangements which you have made in reference to the Chatham General Hospital and the group of four hospitals at Windsor, Ontario, having in mind that the unions and hospital authorities were in negotiations for new collective agreements. My Minister, Mr. Rowntree, had asked me for a report on these situations and it was in pursuance of his request that I was in touch with you.

The deputy then proceeds to report and I shall go on:

With reference to the Chatham General Hospital I informed you on Monday that a basis of settlement had been reached subject to ratification by the union membership. I am now able to tell you that this settlement has been ratified by the parties.

With regard to the Windsor situation, I understand from you that the commission has fixed a date of Thursday, January 16, 1964, to hear representations from all parties at Windsor, Ontario, which you indicated was the earliest feasible date for such a meeting.

I confirm our further conversation on Tuesday, January 7, 1964, when I advised you that Mr. V. E. Scott, a department conciliation officer, was meeting that day with the interested parties in Windsor, Ontario. The meeting was adjourned in Toronto and resumed in The Department of Labour building on Thursday, January 9, 1964. After a full day of negotiation a basis of settlement was reached last evening (Thursday) which is subject to ratification by the employees.

As I informed you on Monday last, the Minister is interested in knowing whether or not the commission intends to submit an interim report, having in mind the specific mention of the Trenton situation in its terms of reference; and further, if an interim report is to be made, do you propose to make specific recommendations at that time?

Your advice on this matter will be appreciated.

Yours faithfully,

J. B. Metzler,

Deputy Minister of Labour.

And under date of January 14, the chairman of the committee, Judge Bennett, wrote as follows:

Mr. J. B. Metzler,
Deputy Minister of Labour,
8 York Street,
Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Metzler:

I acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 10, 1964.

The commission has met on four occasions, once in Toronto and three times at Belleville, all with respect to the Trenton situation.

We are sitting at Windsor on this Thursday, January 16; at Toronto on January 17; at Toronto on January 23; at Niagara Falls on January 24; and at Toronto on January 30 and 31. Briefs are expected from: Canadian Union of Public Employees, Trenton Memorial Hospital, Ontario Hospital Association, Ontario Federation of Labour, International Society of Medical Technologists, International Union of Operating Engineers, Canadian Union of Operating Engineers, Building Services Employees Union, Canadian Manufacturers Association, Board of Trade Metro Toronto, Hamilton General Hospital Union, Professor Arthurs and Professor Crispo of the University of Toronto, Chatham General Hospital, The Hospital Board for Windsor, and the union and hospital from Fort Erie, Ontario. You will appreciate that these associations and organizations had to be given a certain amount of time for the preparation of their submissions on a subject as important and with such widespread implications as compulsory arbitration.

Answering your enquiry as to whether we intend to submit an interim report on the Trenton situation, it is our intention to communicate with the government immediately upon completion of the above sittings or sooner if possible. We are very concerned with the situation at the Trenton hospital. However, our terms of reference include the feasibility and desirability of compulsory arbitration with respect to disputes at hospitals generally in the province of Ontario, and as we have not heard any submissions on the general question of compulsory arbitration at hospitals, the majority of our commission consider any recommendation based solely on the evidence presented to us regarding the Trenton dispute would be premature and of uncertain value. One member of our commission has been of the opinion that an interim report should be made.

In answer to your question as to whether the commission will make specific recommendations in this report we believe at this time—

And I now interject and comment outside the letter because it is my opinion that a word has been omitted from the typing and since I received the question I have not been able to reach Judge Bennett to ascertain whether it was deliberate or otherwise, but I will read the short paragraph as it appears in the letter.

In answer to your question as to whether the commission will make specific recommendations in this report we believe at this time that specific recommendations will be made in accordance with our terms of reference.

I again digress and I think that that should read, having in mind the tenor of the rest of the letter, that no specific recommendations would be made, but I shall check that out and report again to the House.

Mr. MacDonald: With regard to the Trenton situation?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: With regard to the statement in the letter. I think it should read "no", as against the background of the letter.

And I go on with the last paragraph:

While mediation may not be strictly within our terms of reference, the commission in December did explore the possibility of effecting a settlement at Trenton but was unsuccessful in its efforts. We have decided to try again. A committee of the Trenton Hospital Board is meeting with the commission in Toronto on Friday morning and the union is meeting with us in the afternoon.

Yours truly,

C. E. Bennett.

I think that by reading the correspondence on this subject that the question of the hon. member will have been answered.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Cass), as follows: Will the hon. Attorney-General conduct appropriate enquiries into and report to this House on allegations that three taxi drivers picketing in front of the Parliament buildings yesterday, after having complied with a request to move to a spot where they would not be in the way, were ordered by a police inspector to leave the area altogether and were subjected to physical violence?

If I may make just one explanation of my question, Mr. Speaker, I hope we will never reach the situation where citizens of this province cannot come to the seat of government.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member has submitted his question and I am afraid that I cannot allow further elaboration upon it. I shall ask the hon. Minister to reply.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer this question in the affirmative and I would like to say in addition that the matter had already been drawn to my attention as early as yesterday afternoon and preliminary inquiry by me would indicate that the area at the time and place in question was under supervision of the police of Metropolitan Toronto and I had already been in touch with the chairman of that commission requesting that there be a full inquiry and report to me. When that comes to hand I will be glad to produce it for this House and also, if further action is indicated by the contents of that report, to see that such action or further investigation is taken.

Mr. Bryden: I would like to thank the hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker, and now I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

In view of evidence of mounting discontent with the policies of the Metropolitan Toronto Licensing Commission, is the hon. Minister prepared to reconsider the powers given to the commission by part XII of The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act to provide a reasonable degree of accountability to the public or the duly elected representatives of the public?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question of the hon. member in that it gives me an opportunity to perhaps provide some clarification on this rather interesting subject.

Now if I may have the attention of the hon. members opposite, I will be pleased to continue.

This is rather a complicated subject. I want to be very certain of course that the information I provide to the hon. member who asked the question in the House is complete in every detail.

When the police forces of the 13 metropolitan area municipalities were amalgamated into a single metropolitan police force effective January 1, 1957, the legislation provided for a metropolitan board of commissioners of police. It was then considered that to require such a board to exercise the licensing powers with respect to certain trades and occupations of the former city commission, in the case of the city, and by the councils in the other twelve municipalities, would impose an excessive burden upon the metropolitan police commission.

For the protection of the public and in the interests of uniformity throughout the area, certain licensing powers should by legislation be committed to a separate commission called the Metropolitan Toronto Licensing Commission. The powers given to this commission by the province were confined to those that throughout the rest of Ontario had been previously exercised solely by police commissions in all the other cities of Ontario.

The main classifications were carters, teamsters, owners and drivers of cabs, taxi cab brokers, auctioneers, bill posters, driving schools and instructors, electricians and electrical contractors, plumbers and plumbing contractors and the regulation of tag days. The only new principle introduced at that time was, in effect, the decision to transfer to a separate commission licensing powers and duties which at that time were by law the duty of police commissions in all cities. As the hon. members of the House are aware, these commissions are composed of the head of the council and two persons designated by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, one of which must be a county or district judge. The head of the council is thus able to convey to the commission, the views of the council with respect to licensing policies generally.

In the case of the metropolitan licensing commission, by an amendment made last year, the commission is composed of the chairman of the metropolitan council, or his delegate, and two persons appointed by the metropolitan council who are not members of the council of any area municipalities. In this manner, it is possible for the members of the licensing commission to follow in a general way the policy views of the metropolitan council responsible for their appointment.

Reconsideration by the government of the present powers of the licensing commission, in my opinion, should be given only after the present Royal Commission on the Government of Metropolitan Toronto has concluded its work and brought forward its recommendations.

Mr. Bryden: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. Minister is prepared to answer, the hon. member may ask.

Mr. Bryden: I would like to inquire, Mr. Speaker, if the House is to understand from what he said at the end of his answer that any matters relating to The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act will now be in a state of suspended animation until after the commission has reported, or is there a possibility of getting amendments made if clear need is demonstrated?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member's question is not relevant to the former question. If it is desirable I will deal with Bill 80 and any amendment to it in the ordinary course of events.

Mr. Sopha: May I ask if that memorandum said one member must be a judge?

Mr. Speaker: Order! No further questions—

Mr. Sopha: Well, if he will answer—

Mr. Speaker: Even if he will answer, any question must be submitted to the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, if it will assist the hon. member for Sudbury, I will be glad to answer his question. Would he please speak?

Mr. Sopha: Did you say in your memorandum that one of the members of the police commission must be a judge?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: You are questioning me now as to the metropolitan licensing commission?

Mr. Sopha: No, your statement—your own statement.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I spoke about the appointment of the police commissions and the answer is yes, that is quite true, under the general legislation.

Mr. Sopha: That is not so.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Under the general legislation? Under The Municipal Act?

Mr. Sopha: We amended that—

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I beg your pardon.

Mr. Sopha: We amended that two years ago. It is not so. He does not have to be a judge now.

An hon. member: Why did you ask that?

Mr. Sopha: To see if the hon. Minister knew about it.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I am advised by my legal adviser that the hon. member for Sudbury is wrong in his statement.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House I would like to say to the members that in these first few days it is going to take a little time to get a flow of work running. We will meet tomorrow morning, probably fairly briefly. Monday we will have the opening addresses in the Throne Speech debate and then I would hope by Tuesday or Wednesday we will have a steady flow of work going through the House. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) will speak in that debate on Thursday next week and will be followed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald).

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The House stands adjourned until 10.30 of the clock tomorrow morning.

The House adjourned at 4.05 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves, seconded by Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition), that Mr. W. G. Noden, member for the electoral district of Rainy River, be appointed as chairman of the committee of the whole House for the present session.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I would like to speak to this motion for a moment, if I may, and say that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) and I are very happy to make this motion to appoint my very good friend, the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Noden).

The hon. member entered the Legislature first in 1951 at the same time as I. He represents a very beautiful part of Ontario. If hon. members can ever find any good reason to pay a visit to that riding of Rainy River I would suggest they take advantage of it. I recall some years ago we were fortunate enough to take a select committee into that area and, by a little judicious timetabling, we were able to see and enjoy some of the natural beauties and assets that the hon. member has in his riding.

I am sure that the hon. member will do the task we are going to ask him to do and I can assure him from the government point of view he will receive every co-operation from us.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Before the motion is put, Mr. Speaker, I would join with the hon. Prime Minister in seconding the appointment of the hon. member for Rainy River. I think this is perhaps the first time that we have had a chairman of the committee of the whole House from that great northwest. The hon. member for Rainy River will, I am sure, exhibit that great tact and patience, and yet at the same time that persistent attitude, that he must have had in order to get the great causeway up in the northwest. I am sure those faculties will be put to wider use as chairman of the committee of the whole House. I can promise my hon. friend that when he takes the chair as chairman of the committee of the whole House that we will give to him the usual courtesy that has prevailed in the past.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I cannot play any formal role in this motion that has been made by the hon. Prime Minister and seconded by the hon. leader of the Opposition, but I do want to assure the hon. member for Rainy River that, in those carefully chosen words of the hon. leader of the Opposition, we will do everything possible to fulfill the traditions of this House now so firmly established.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, in keeping with another portion of the remarks already made in regard to the causeway up there, that the job is unfinished. Schubert had his unfinished Symphony and Rainy River has its unfinished road, so I hope in these positions of greater power here that we can get that road finished, not only for the benefit of the hon. member in question, but for the people there.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole House.

House in committee; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. members of this Legislature, I want to take this opportunity of thanking the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) for the honour which you have bestowed upon me this morning. I assure you that I will try to be impartial as your chairman during this coming session.

This also applies to all hon. members of this Legislature.

I want to thank the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) for their kind remarks. We in north-western Ontario feel that we have mutual understanding of all of Ontario and we enjoy having hon. members of this Legislature and others in this part of Ontario visit that part of Ontario which today we feel is so important to the economic welfare of this province. I assure you that in the days to come I will try to carry out my duty in the manner in which other chairmen of committees of the whole have done in the past and to the best of my ability. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: The committee of the whole House begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

HUMAN RIGHTS CODE

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Human Rights Code, 1961-62.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to make reference to the question of the committee appointed under The Public Inquiries Act to study compulsory arbitration and the reference I made yesterday to a communication received from the chairman of that committee, His Honour Judge Bennett and addressed to the Deputy Minister of Labour. I have since been in touch with the chairman of the committee myself and have ascertained that it was his intention that the letter as received should stand as it was written and that it was accurate as I read it in the House yesterday.

I understand from the chairman that it is the committee's present position and intention that no interim report is to be made at this date as certain relevant submissions are to be heard, hence the reference to the hearings yet to be held in his letter. However, it is the present intention of the committee that an interim report on the Trenton situation, and possibly with recommendations, will then be made and the intention is that this interim report would be made at an appropriate time and ahead of the final report.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): In moving the adjournment of the House, we will proceed on Monday with the motion in reply to the Address from the Throne.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.00 o'clock, a.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JANUARY 20, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE INDUSTRIAL SAFETY ACT, 1964

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): moves first reading of bill intituled, The Industrial Safety Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to this bill, The Industrial Safety Act, 1964: It is a complete rewriting of the old Factory, Shop and Office Building Act and involves a major overhaul in industrial safety legislation. Where possible, the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Industrial Safety have been implemented and the safety and welfare provisions have been expanded and modernized.

Some of the features of the new Industrial Safety Act of 1964 are, first, to increase flexibility and adaptation to changing conditions. The Act will contain only the fundamental welfare provisions, while the detailed requirements will be contained in the regulations. Care will be taken to ensure that the safety and welfare provisions are in line with today's needs.

Provision has also been made for making regulations respecting protection from fire, provision for sanitary facilities, safe atmospheric conditions, protective clothing and devices for employed persons, control of explosive dusts, gases and volatile liquids in industrial establishments, and storage and handling of combustible and flammable material. Processes requiring the use of face masks and helmets are specified.

Inspection of camps for factory workers has been transferred to The Department of Health as The Public Health Act already provides the necessary facilities for enforcement. Children under 15 will not be allowed to work in a factory. Public laundries, laundromats and laundries operated in conjunction with hospitals, hotels, institutions for religious or charitable purposes, and educational institutions, except public and separate elementary and high schools, are deemed factories for the purposes of this Act.

The sale or transfer of possession of any unsafe machine for use in an industrial establishment will be prohibited. Provisions respecting home workers will be modernized. And protection will be provided for trade secrets which may become known to an enforcement officer; these will be protected.

This legislation is one new aspect of the department's programme to ensure that the safety, well-being and rights of every Ontario citizen are being protected.

THE APPRENTICESHIP AND TRADESMEN'S QUALIFICATION ACT, 1964

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves first reading of bill intituled, The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act, 1964 is a complete rewriting and updating of the present Apprenticeship Act. The new Act will follow in general the lines suggested by the select committee on manpower training in its unanimous report.

Our desire to streamline the Act in the light of present-day conditions has resulted in a number of important changes in this legislation. For example, to make provision for the formal recognition of tradesmen; to meet the evident need for more skilled workmen who will be required in this province in the years ahead; to encourage the training of people already in industry to enable them to cope with the technological changes which are so rapidly taking place; to help provide opportunities for many of the young people of the province who will be graduating from secondary school in the years ahead.

Some of the principal changes in this Apprenticeship Act are as follows: The Crown will be subject to the same duties as any other employer of apprentices; administration of the Act will be placed in the hands of the director, who is responsible to the Minister of Labour. This change will bring the Act into line with current administrative practices.

Power to appoint a provincial advisory committee will now be held by the Minister of Labour. This committee is composed of representatives of employers and employees for any trade or group of trades. A committee member sits for a specified term and will not be eligible for reappointment for two years. The new Act will empower the Minister of Labour, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, to make agreements with the Minister of Labour for Canada respecting apprenticeship and/or manpower training.

An employer who employs persons under 21 in any trade for which a training programme is in effect will be required to notify the director. The director will be required to advise these persons of their right to become apprentices. No person will be allowed to perform work in any government building contract unless he employs an appropriate complement of apprentices. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council will be empowered to establish the complement, and regulate in relation to this requirement.

A contract of apprenticeship will not be considered to have been violated because the apprentice engages in a lawful strike.

Certificates issued under the existing Act, or apprenticeship contracts entered into under it, will remain good under the new Act. Discretion will be given to the directors who enroll a person as an apprentice or issue a certificate of qualification of apprenticeship or efficiency where health is a factor or where there is other good and sufficient reason for such action. At present the Act does not allow for dealing with such special situations.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I wonder, before the hon. Minister gets on with another bill, if he would permit a question?

THE INDUSTRIAL STANDARDS ACT

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Industrial Standards Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, the recommendations made by Professor Bora Laskin after his exhaustive study of The Industrial Standards Act have received widespread and favourable attention. Many of the amendments proposed in this bill grew out of the recommendations contained in the Laskin report.

Chief among these changes are the following: First, administration of the Act will be vested in a director of labour standards and not in the industry and labour board. Second, the power of the Minister to enlarge, reduce or divide a zone as economic considerations and the public interests indicate will be clarified. The Minister will have the power to amend the definition of an industry without invalidating an existing schedule for the industry. Third, as recommended by Professor Laskin, notice will be published of any proposed amendment to a schedule or of any proposed conference. Fourth, the jurisdiction of a conference is broadened and a conference is empowered to propose vacations with pay and statutory holidays payment as terms of a schedule. Fifth, the Act will also be amended to empower an officer convening a conference to conduct closed conference investigations and to recommend in the public interest variations in the schedule to the Minister.

The Act also empowers the Minister to approve the schedule with such variations recommended by an officer as is considered desirable. This provision will permit the officer to consider conditions of labour, not necessarily to hear submissions of persons who failed to attend the conference. The duty of employers respecting the keeping of employment records for their employees is clarified.

The Act will create collection machinery through the county or division court to collect arrears of wages which have not been paid; and, lastly, it will be an offence for an employer to discharge or threaten to discharge an employee who has given information or assistance to the department or an inspector with respect to the enforcement of the Act.

THE HOURS OF WORK AND VACATIONS WITH PAY ACT

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves, seconded by Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture), first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to amend The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: In this legislation we propose that the hours of work and hours by the clock provisions of the old Factory, Shop and Office Building Act be updated and transferred to this legislation. Responsibility for the administration of these provisions will rest with the industry and labour board rather than with the factory inspection branch. This is in keeping with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Industrial Safety. Maximum number of weekly working hours of youths and young girls is also considered. The earliest starting time for youths, young girls or women is 6 a.m. and the latest quitting time is 12 o'clock midnight. Provision is made for third shift under special circumstances. Provision is also made with respect to eating periods as suit the situation and the circumstances.

THE HOURS OF WORK AND VACATIONS WITH PAY ACT

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East) moves, seconded by Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East), first reading of a bill intitled An Act to Amend The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to make an announcement that will be of great interest to the dairy farmers of Ontario. Beginning this summer, it is the intention of The Ontario Department of Agriculture to launch a province-wide programme to control mastitis in the dairy herds of Ontario. This is one of the most important programmes ever undertaken by the department in the dairy industry. Although milk consumed by the public is not affected by the disease, mastitis is estimated to cost the dairy farmers of Ontario about $10 million a year in lost production. Pasteurization, as it is universally practised, kills all known mastitis virus, but the problem has plagued farmers at the milk production level for more than 150 years.

Mastitis attacks the udders of cows and although researchers have been unable to pinpoint the cause, a programme to control the disease has now been developed by the Ontario Veterinary College. Results of a pilot project, which has been conducted at The Ontario Department of Agriculture's experimental station in Ridgetown over a two-year period, involving some 150 herds, has revealed that mastitis can be successfully controlled. It is now our intention to extend this programme eventually to all parts of Ontario as soon as laboratory and other services can be arranged. Dairy farmers may enrol their herds in the mastitis control programme and following a period of testing and treatment, obtain a mastitis-free herd certificate, issued by The Ontario Department of Agriculture. An extensive education programme as well as a continuing research programme will be necessary to achieve success in controlling this problem.

On the basis of the pilot programme, we know that in many cases the problem can be rectified by participating in the control plan for about six months. Having met the problem, some farmers may not wish to continue in the control plan indefinitely. Others have indicated to the department that they would want to become members of the plan on a permanent basis. A nominal fee per cow, which has yet to be worked out to make the plan self-sustaining, would be charged to the farmer to cover initial laboratory and veterinary services when the farmer enrolls. Research today indicates that mastitis must be attacked on a herd basis to be successful, and for this reason farmers will be encouraged to enrol all their cows and to follow herd standards and uniform milking methods.

The department, in conjunction with the Ontario Veterinary College, is now working out arrangements for the control plan, including an effective starting date, laboratory services, field personnel and other services to the farmer that will be required. As well as the work of The Department of Agriculture, including that of the county agricultural representatives and the dairy branch field men, the full co-operation of the veterinary profession and others involved in the dairy industry will be necessary to achieve success. It is estimated that the loss in all of Canada because of mastitis is between $25 million and $30 million a year. In the United States the figure is estimated to run as high as $400 million a year. Based on our present research and knowledge, an effective programme against mastitis must include detection, diagnosis and treatment, environmental factors, and milking methods and procedures. A programme that ignores any of these factors will have little chance of success. The dairy industry of Ontario cannot afford the loss of production because of this problem, and it cannot continue to absorb the increased cost of treatment without some major attack on the whole problem and its costs.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall), notice of which has been given to him. When will the government make public the report of the committee set up to make a full-scale inquiry into the economic conditions in the Windsor area, as had been ordered by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in December, 1962?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving notice of this question. The government has not as yet received a report from the Windsor committee, and I might say that as late as last Friday the committee discussed this with the Ontario Economic Council. Conditions have improved in Windsor considerably and the committee itself wishes to take the report back and update it before submitting it for final approval. I think very shortly it will be submitted for council approval.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. The public accounts of the province of Ontario for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963.

2. The report of the Provincial Auditor of Ontario, 1962-63.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the west gallery students from St. Michael's Choir School, Toronto.

Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. K. E. Butler (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard) that an humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, as follows: To the Honourable Earl Rowe, P.C., Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario.

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

On behalf of myself and the residents of the riding of Waterloo North, which I have the honour to represent, I wish to express my sincere thanks for the honour accorded to us in moving the acceptance of the Speech from the Throne. It is a privilege most deeply appreciated.

I would also like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your recent appointment. You have already straightened us out on points of order and privilege, which was certainly news to me, and I know you will guide the House wisely and well in your tenure of office.

It is less than four months ago that the people of Ontario went to the polls and gave the government of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) an overwhelming mandate. I wish to formally congratulate the hon. Prime Minister on the able leadership which contributed so much to these results and which was of such great assistance to us in our individual ridings.

In North Waterloo, my opponent was the leader of the official Opposition, Mr. Wintermeyer. Although our political views are obviously divergent, I wish to pay personal tribute to Mr. Wintermeyer as a sincere and dedicated man.

In reviewing past speeches of the acceptance of the Speech from the Throne, in many cases there appeared to be a pattern of reviewing past governmental activities. Not only does my lack of knowledge of the past history preclude this, but as well the time involved in pointing out details of these achievements and the great forward progress in the past term under the guidance of the hon. Prime Minister and his Cabinet would consume too much time. For those in the House who may have other appointments today, I might say my speech will not take more than 20 minutes.

Rather than review the past, I would prefer to look to the future. But prior to this use of the crystal ball, a question that has often been asked in the past few months is why did you run for office? I would ask the hon. members present to review this question themselves. As a green member, it does not appear that the financial return is sufficient attraction to enter this business. I do not think it is the prestige or power, for in effect a member is at the beck and call of every resident in his riding to act as a public servant on many occasions. It must therefore be a combination of the challenge of attempting to win a seat and the fascination of taking an active part in our provincial affairs and contributing something to our people. This, combined with a new opportunity to learn, and possibly the glamour of sitting in the same House where great men have been in attendance and made far-reaching and vital decisions, influences us to enter the political field.

A few moments ago I mentioned a look at the future. I will take my own riding of Waterloo North, as it is the one with which I am most familiar.

With the absolute certainty of reaching complete disagreement with 107 hon. members of this House, this Kitchener-Waterloo area is the finest place to live in Ontario. The riding is sizeable. There were approximately 66,000 voters in the last election. There is a great diversity of manufacturing, very rich agricultural land and a generally high level of employment.

I will use some rough figures in our area as a guide to the future. The population will—and this is on some surveys only—be approximately doubled by 1970. This means the needs of the people for governmental legislation which is wise and progressive is vital. The sewers and watermains, the roads and the sidewalks, will be increased not in feet but in miles. New classrooms and schools will be required, not in dozens, but in hundreds. More water will be necessary, millions of gallons.

As these problems become greater in our riding, they also become so throughout the province in multitudes of municipalities. It would be wise to continue to pursue the planning of regional or metro government at county level. This is not to take away the autonomy of the many existing governments but to prevent the overlapping of services such as sewers, water, planning, police, fire protection and roads.

This is not a simple problem to solve, but by earnest study and accurate forecasting of requirements, improvements will be made.

To amplify this growth, 100 new workers in a community means, on the average, 296 more people, 100 new households, 51 additional school children, 107 more automobiles, four more retail establishments, half a million dollars more in personal income. These details are wonderful for the general economy of the province, but point out that there will be attendant problems requiring bold and imaginative planning.

In line with this planning, there is a specific area which should have further study. Under the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay), the Ontario Trade Crusade was generally welcomed by industry and I am sure this success will continue under the capable guidance of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall).

The area of which I speak is maritime shipping. This was under federal guidance but apparently, from what I can gather at the moment, there is not too much activity in this field. On checking with the shipyard in Collingwood, for example, there is one ship under way and no further ones on order at the moment. It might be asked by hon. members why an inland province like Ontario should take action in the maritime field. The reason is that the St. Lawrence Seaway has brought the world to Ontario shores and the world shores to Ontario.

As a highly industrialized province, and with the advanced automation possible to run ships with a smaller crew these days, if our government took steps to give some help to Ontario firms which build ships in Ontario shipyards, the cost of exporting could be reduced to a more competitive basis. In addition, our government could assist in the building of better docking harbours and warehousing facilities along the Great Lakes.

This question of subsidies for various industries and agriculture, I fully realize, is always a tender one. But we must remember that Canada, as a nation, is younger than England was when she achieved greatness through her maritime trade and that there is as much or more gold and furs in the present world market than there was in the days of England's maritime dominance.

We must also remember that a move in this direction would help all our export industry and not just the shipbuilding trade. At the present time there are foreign ships delivering produce to our warehouses and in turn picking up our produce to deliver to various parts of the world because we are not sufficiently competitive in some areas.

In the field of education, the Robarts government has taken, or will take, major steps towards improvement. Through increased facilities at all levels, and particularly university facilities, we are steadily increasing the flow of highly qualified men and women into our economic bloodstream. In Waterloo North, the University of Waterloo started in 1957 with 75 students in a new type of co-operative plan of education specializing in engineering. Today, seven years later, there are 2,400 students and by 1970 it is estimated that there will be from 8,000 to 10,000 students in the total enrolment at the University of Waterloo.

This co-operative plan is being studied in the field of social sciences as well as the existing course in engineering, with a $25,000 grant from the province. At the University of Waterloo, under this system which is comparatively new in Canada, the students spend a four-month period of study and then go out to work for four months in an industry of their choice, or being chosen by a particular company on the basis of their activities and recommendations of the school. This system has been most effective, as the student not only earns funds to get through university on four-month intervals, but also by practical on-the-job training, which as we know is quite different from theory when a man actually gets out to work, finds out during his school training the type of work for which he is best suited.

Our one concern for education in our rapidly increasing automation is the drop-out before sufficient educational training is attained. The percentage of students getting through Grade 13 is not too high across Canada. More and more these untrained personnel are difficult to employ and become a problem in our economy. The trade schools now under way in the province should greatly help this situation and it would appear these facilities will expand. Representation has been made to the hon. Minister to have one of these schools in the Kitchener area, and we hope a survey is to be made shortly to decide on whether this area is a good spot to have one. Naturally we hope the results are positive.

Another area of interest and which was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne is the agriculture of the province. We have quite a heavily populated agricultural area where we are and one of the main concerns here is the steadily dropping water table. Last fall we had a comparatively serious drought and the results of this drought will not be known until the spring crops come up. There were other areas of drought in the province in 1963. With tremendous water resources within comparatively easy range, we are hoping that with further research water supplies will be made available on a year-round basis through pipelines or some other method which will be recommended. Study and research is going on, as we know, and this we are hoping will be expedited.

We are pleased to note that the hon. Prime Minister has announced that our provincial liquor laws are under study for revision. This may not seem too important a point, but what has caused quite a bit of interest in our area is that a piano player is not permitted to play in a hotel beverage room. This may be for a very sound reason but it does seem to a few—when they can have radios and TV there—that, just to provide additional employment alone, it would seem worthwhile to consider this particular section.

The only other point I would mention, specifically directed to our area, is that there is under study and will be started in the year 1964, a new expressway system across the boundaries of Kitchener and Waterloo as a link road; we hope to have some type of traffic on it in 1966. This has to be built under special legislation and is now under consideration.

Due to my close association with the War Amputations of Canada and the Canadian Paraplegic Association, it is my feeling that any public building should be made accessible to persons with physical disabilities. This may seem a sort of pie-in-the-sky idea but it has actually been done under federal legislation in the United States and has proven of great benefit to physically disabled people.

They eliminate steps in favour of ramps, and doors are made wide enough to permit the entrance of wheel chairs. Regulations to this effect, with co-operation of municipal, provincial and federal levels, would add greatly to the independence of our disabled people in the use of libraries, hospitals and other public buildings. This particularly applies now, as the average of our longevity increases and disabilities are more prevalent among our senior citizens.

Some of the above recommendations cost money. Most of them do. As in business, generally speaking, the only way to expand is to borrow or to raise the price of the product. The purpose of expansion in general business is to increase profits and thereby increase dividends to the shareholders.

In government circles our shareholders are our citizens. The dividends paid to them when the product price increases, in the form of taxes, are not paid in cash. They are paid in better roads, better schools, better agricultural facilities and better opportunities for our children. We must advance or go backwards, as there is no such thing as standing still. As shareholders in the province, although none of us likes taxes, I am sure the broad feeling is to go forward.

It is now my very pleasant duty, Mr. Speaker, to introduce the seconder of this motion, the hon. member for Hamilton Centre, who is the first female member of the provincial Legislature to sit with the party in power. She has had broad experience in government affairs, being elected to Hamilton city council in 1952 and serving for three years. The hon. member was elected to the Board of Control in 1955 and re-elected each voting term until 1963. She was elected vice-mayor in 1963, and was elected to the provincial Legislature in 1963 as the member for Hamilton Centre. My hon. colleague has served on most council committees, and the list of her other city functions is a very lengthy one. She was the chairman of the Hamilton Women's Progressive-Conservative Association for four years and is a very active member of five women's clubs and associations in Hamilton, including the Council of Women, of which she is a national life member, the Quota Club, and the Business and Professional Women's Club. With her broad knowledge of government and her personal charm, the hon. member will, I know, be a great asset to our legislative assembly.

Mrs. A. Pritchard (Hamilton Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct honour and a great privilege for me to have been selected to second the motion of the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler) for the adoption of the Speech from the Throne so graciously presented by His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. It is most gratifying to me personally and is a significant honour for the people of Hamilton Centre, whom I represent, and further, to the women of this great province.

In this year of grace 1964, the second session of this 27th Legislature will probably prove to be one of the most challenging and important sessions in our history. The government will be faced with continued increasing demands for assistance from the municipalities and a realistic approach must of necessity involve increased revenues. Fortunately the industrial, commercial and the construction picture shows great promise of excellent economic prospect for 1964.

The employment situation is steadily improving which is undoubtedly the outcome of the strenuous efforts of this government under the steadfast leadership of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). The provincial retraining programme for the unemployed has, in Hamilton, as in most centres of Ontario, been most successful.

The Buy Canadian programme of this government received a real boost from the recent move of the entire assembly operations of the Studebaker Corporation's automotive division from South Bend, Indiana to Hamilton, Ontario.

We are very proud of the confidence shown in Canadian industrial know-how and aggressiveness. I have been assured that this operation will be responsible for Studebaker automotive sales throughout the world and will be managed and directed by a Canadian team with a Canadian president, Mr. Gordon Grundy. This fact not only is a source of pride but, from a practical point of view, assures a real interest in developing Ontario and Canadian sources for the many component parts which go into the manufacture of the modern automobile.

I am also informed that the Made in Ontario, Canada label will soon be appearing on cars on the roads of Australia, South Africa, Israel, Western Europe, South America as well as the immense market of the United States.

The move to Hamilton, Ontario will make a significant contribution to our export drive and exchange programme and to Canadian employment, particularly here in Ontario.

One encouraging effect is that the Hamilton Industrial Commission has received many inquiries from firms interested in locating in Hamilton.

As a member of the Hamilton Board of Control for nine years I have had a broad experience covering many municipal problems, especially those directly contributed to by this government.

Having served on the Hamilton Welfare Board for 12 years I was particularly pleased at the enactment of legislation providing assistance at the age of 60 to widows, deserted wives and single women unable to provide for themselves. As a member of the Business and Professional Woman's Club I became aware of the drastic need for action in this area through the club's efforts to help these unfortunate women, particularly when the slump in the textile trades forced many out of a job.

This legislation has had the commendable effect of removing many long-term welfare cases from the welfare rolls five years earlier than would have been possible prior to this new legislation; this is a continuing effort by the provincial Department of Public Welfare under the able direction of the hon. Minister (Mr. Cecile). However, there are many individual males on public welfare until they qualify for old age assistance at age 65. It would appear a logical step for the province to expand the new legislation to include the individual male, subject to his need. It is indeed difficult for the man over 40 to get a job; for the man over 60, almost impossible.

The high cost of drugs is an increasing problem and serious consideration should be given to the resolution presented by both the Welfare Officers Association and the Ontario Municipal Officers Association asking the provincial and federal governments to share in the cost of drugs to welfare recipients presently borne by the municipalities alone. General welfare costs are contributed on the basis of: federal, 50 per cent; provincial, 30 per cent; municipal, 20 per cent.

In the near future I intend discussing with the departments concerned the possibility of examining a new approach relative to welfare costs on a per capita basis with all the municipalities in the province.

There would be many advantages such as elimination of the bickering between municipalities as to who is responsible for the municipal portion under the complicated residence provisions as well as the more important factor that a sudden loss of industry or employment such as was experienced in the city of Cornwall would be absorbed by the whole of the province rather than have one municipality bear the brunt of the impact. The reference to Cornwall is in connection with the completion of the St. Lawrence Seaway where many migrant workers had settled down with their families during the years of construction of the seaway.

To turn to public housing, a subject which has been of pressing interest to me during my years in public life, I feel that Ontario has done extremely well but could do better.

Perhaps some guidance will come from the study being prepared by Professor James A. Murray of the University of Toronto for the Ontario housing authorities. Other ideas have, I know, been put forward by the Ontario Housing Advisory Committee set up by the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) when he was Minister of Economics and Development, and now being studied by the extremely able new hon. Minister (Mr. Randall).

I was very pleased that one of my city's leading citizens, Mr. Kenneth D. Soble, was chosen to head up this important citizens' committee with help from representatives not only from Hamilton and Toronto, but from communities large and small throughout Ontario.

The Hamilton City Council has requested the housing branch to make a survey of the housing needs particularly in respect to the low-income family. Such a survey in Hamilton, a big city, may provide information pertaining to the needs of smaller communities and result in Ontario itself taking the necessary steps to implement a housing policy which will meet the needs of all the communities of this province. The proposed study to assist the low-income families to become home-owners, as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, is commendable.

Ontario has improved and shown great leadership in the care of the aged. The modern senior citizen home is no longer a place to dread. Today the residents of our homes enjoy spacious, pleasant surroundings, good food, medical services and recreational facilities. The women enjoy the sewing classes and the men the hobby shops. But, I am still very concerned with the plight of the single pensioners, desirous of independence, who struggle to maintain themselves while living in squalid and lonely rooms.

The high cost of land and construction, plus high interest rates, makes it practically impossible to build apartments for this limited income group.

Hamilton has built apartments for pensioners under the limited dividend plan wherein this government makes an outright grant of $500 per apartment.

During the five-year period, 1960 to 1965, our population age group from 18 to 21 years will double in size. This phenomenon has already had its effect by increased registration in our nursing schools where vacancies existed several years ago. Mr. Speaker, as you know, registration of girls in nursing training has certainly been a great problem.

We are not relying, however, solely upon this factor to solve our problems. The Ontario Department of Health, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission and the College of Nursing, have been and are working together to produce additional schools, better standards in nursing education, and are experimenting with new approaches to nursing training.

These efforts will be continued, recognizing that the fine new hospital buildings constructed to meet Ontario's needs must be adequately staffed, not just at present standards but in the way that future medical progress may dictate.

Post-hospital care—Mr. Speaker, the following is a quote from a report sent to me by Mr. Atwood, the welfare commissioner in Hamilton:

Due to the necessity of freeing hospital beds as rapidly as possible, every effort should be made to eliminate delays in placing indigent patients, who have been certified as not needing further hospital treatment but who are not able to care for themselves at the time of dismissal from the hospital.

The most obvious solution for such cases would be to place them in a boarding home where they would receive some care in addition to basic room and board.

However, the maximum payment to an individual eligible for subsidy is $57.10 per month and the type of care needed for the cases mentioned previously cannot be secured for this price.

The province of Ontario has recognized the need for just this type of care for discharges from tuberculosis sanatoria wherein they, along with the federal government, share 80 per cent of the cost of providing maintenance in these cases up to a maximum of $75 per month granted by the municipalities. This is known as post-sanatoria care and it is my contention that there is a similar need for post-hospital care to enable a municipal welfare officer to properly place an indigent hospital discharger who cannot look after himself at the time of discharge.

The following resolution was, therefore, sent to the Timmins convention:

That The Ontario Department of Welfare be requested to enact new legislation or to amend the present regulations concerning post-sanatoria care so that municipal welfare officers could authorize public assistance to individual indigent patients discharged from hospitals to a maximum of $75.00 a month. This type of assistance would only be granted for limited periods of time and would be subject to the certification of the medical hospital superintendent specifying that this type of care is necessary.

Further I would like this government to establish proper standards for the private nursing homes and a rigid inspection. This is of great concern to me particularly as it mainly affects the aged sick and, in my opinion, is a public health problem.

One of the most fascinating fields in which I have had the opportunity to work in the past two years is that of urban renewal. This is a field where both the province of Ontario and the city of Hamilton are offering leadership to the whole of Canada.

This province is one of the few which participates fully in both the planning and the implementation of urban renewal programmes by its municipalities. Financially, Ontario contributes a full 25 per cent of the cost of acquiring and clearing land in designated renewal areas, quite apart from its participation in the provision of the necessary public housing to take care of families displaced by clearance activities.

The redevelopment section of The Department of Municipal Affairs has prepared a pace-setting report called, A Better Place to Live. It will show the way to preserving and maintaining the older areas of our cities and towns, thus avoiding the need for extremely expensive bulldozing operations which have commonly been accepted as the only way of undertaking renewal until now. I am very hopeful that the recommended legislation covering minimum standards of maintenance, put forward in this report, will ultimately be presented to and accepted by this Legislature.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the idea of preserving what we have in our cities is a very practical one. By heading off decline and blight in the older, central areas, it may be possible to avoid some of the almost uncontrollable movement to outlying areas which results in skyrocketing service costs to our municipal taxpayers.

Hamilton is working toward this ideal of rehabilitating and saving our existing housing stock, as a more acceptable alternative than total demolition. The first urban renewal project in Hamilton did involve bulldozing and total clearance of an area covering some 175 acres. This will eventually provide one of the finest waterfront parks and public beaches on Lake Ontario, which will serve the people of Hamilton and its areas for many years to come.

The second Hamilton project, which has already received the approval of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner), may well set the future pattern for such projects across Ontario and Canada. What was once a fine old residential area, near the heart of the city, has fallen into decline. The project will provide three new schools and a recreation area, remove heavy traffic, rehabilitate homes and generally upgrade the whole district of some 260 acres.

I would like to suggest that some early consideration be given to extending financial aid to municipalities that wish to face up to the extremely pressing problem of renewing their downtown areas, by extending the legislation to cover commercial as well as purely residential redevelopment. The rebirth which such a programme could bring to countless of our cities would quickly repay any money invested in renewing downtown areas.

I know this illustrious body would be sorely disappointed if I failed at this time to address myself to the women of Ontario. Of course I cannot underestimate the first sphere of women, the role of mother. The influence of the home level is paramount; it is the beginning of the education to adulthood and responsibility. The so-called ordinary housewife is possibly making the greatest service of all in the background fortress of the home.

However, women should make no apology for now venturing into the political and economic life of the nation. It is outmoded to believe that only the rebel enters into public life. Educational opportunities for women are today affording a great change for the better, and women have been quick to avail themselves. They have created a force to be reckoned with, exemplified by the great numbers of married women employed outside the home, who feel their role of housewife is not enough and get their greatest satisfaction from a job well done. The changing pattern of our way of life accents the second role.

Sex has no monopoly on brains. Experience is a great teacher. Those who have studied the progress of women and observed their improved status realize the value of their contribution whether it be at the level of government, business or the professions.

I acknowledge with pride the tremendous contribution made to society by women in the purely voluntary field of service to mankind, participated in from the housewife to the top executive. It was very gratifying that recently the outstanding services of Mrs. H. A. Ricker of Hamilton and Mrs. Henry Krug of Kitchener were acknowledged with the awarding by their respective communities of the distinguished-citizen award medal of the year.

Personally, I believe that for a healthy happy approach to life one must assume some responsibility toward the community. The first qualification of good citizenship is the acceptance of this basic duty. I sincerely appeal to all women, whatever their role, to take an intelligent interest in their city, province and country, strongly voicing their opinions on all matters.

That this government is aware of the great emancipation of women is obvious by the enactment on March 28, 1951, of Bill No. 120 for equal pay for equal work, a day to remember. May I again commend the legislation giving assistance to women at the age of 60.

The city of Hamilton has greatly benefited from the stupendous road programme of The Department of Highways. The recent opening of the first leg of the Chedoke Expressway, Highway 403, by the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) has greatly eased the traffic congestion.

The forthright approach to the ever-increasing needs for the proper education of our children is encouraging. It is important that our young people can avail themselves of the best standards of education possible.

The proposed 70-acre technical training campus, at West Fifth St. and Fennell Ave., Hamilton, will house close to 2,000 students in an institute of technology and a provincial institute of trades. These will be in separate buildings but will share the campus and such facilities as playing fields, auditorium, and certain services such as heating plant and cafeteria.

The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell), recently stated, and I quote:

This technical training centre will be unique in Canada. It will provide the area from Oakville to Winona and west to Brantford with the most modern trades education facilities available anywhere. This means that schools in Hamilton will serve some 600,000 persons living in the area from Hamilton to Hagersville to Port Dover, Paris and Stoney Creek and the intervening rural areas.

As a newcomer to this legislative assembly, I must, of course, tailor my comments to my as yet limited knowledge of the programme of this important body.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have been accorded the very high honour of expressing the appreciation of this House for the Speech from the Throne, which honour is reflected to the people of Hamilton Centre, whom I have the privilege to represent.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I may say that I have been moved by the speeches that have just been delivered and I think there should be a pause for reflection. Consequently, I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Oliver moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Roberts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I would revert to orders of the day so that the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) may make a comment which would properly have come before the orders of the day. It is a personal matter and I am quite sure that all hon. members of the House will agree.

Mr. Speaker: Will the House stand unanimous?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a personal explanation. In the current issue, dated January 25, 1964, of Maclean's Magazine, there appears an article which is defamatory and libellous and affects my honour and integrity. Immediately on learning of its publication, I took legal advice and began proceedings under The Libel and Slander Act of Ontario, which provides the method of bringing the alleged libel to the attention of the publishers of the magazine, as a condition precedent to issuing a writ of summons in the action. I am glad to say that immediately this was brought to the attention of the publishers, they, through their counsel, expressed extreme regret and have today agreed as follows:

1. To publish an apology, which I will read in a moment, in the Globe and Mail immediately.

2. To publish the same apology in the next available issue of Maclean's Magazine which I understand will be dated February 22, 1964.

3. To pay the full legal costs involved.

4. To concur in the making of this statement to this honourable House that a complete retraction is being made.

The form of the apology reads:

AN APOLOGY TO THE
HON. A. KELSO ROBERTS

By unintentional innuendo, serious and completely unfounded allegations against the character and reputation of the Hon. A. Kelso Roberts formerly Attorney-General and now Minister of Lands and Forests in the province of Ontario, were contained in an article which appeared in the issue of Maclean's Magazine of January 25, 1964, under the heading: A Little Honest Graft Never Hurt a Politician at the Polls. The publishers of Maclean's Magazine regret the unfair insinuations which the article and the photograph accompanying it contain and desire to extend to Mr. Roberts their sincere apologies. In so doing the publishers desire to say that they have never questioned Mr. Roberts' integrity.

That is the end of the form of apology.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the integrity of an individual is an essential qualification for the holding of public office and membership in this House. I know that all hon. members will agree that the protection of the individual from unwarranted defamation of character is the cornerstone of our society.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I would say that tomorrow we will introduce some more legislation. We are gradually building up the order paper but I rather doubt that we will have a long session tomorrow or Wednesday. On Thursday the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver), followed by the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. MacDonald), will make their contributions to the Throne Speech debate and I would think thereafter we will be sitting regular hours full time.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the motion for the adjournment of the House is moved, I wonder if I might ask the hon. Prime Minister whether or not in this early stage of the session, when there are on the order paper bills and resolutions in the names of hon. members of the Opposition, that these cannot be called now. Why should the House be adjourning hours early and not attending to this business when the alternative is that it is going to be crammed in some time between 11 and 12 midnight, or something of this nature, in the dying days of the session?

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might make one other constructive suggestion. Is this not the time to assign an hour a week, or some specified time, as is the fashion in the House of Commons at Ottawa, for the consideration of bills and resolutions that can be taken in rotation, so that if they are talked out at one stage they go to the bottom of the list and may or may not come up again? But at least this business put on the order paper by hon. members of the Opposition or, as I have said before in this House, by hon. members on the government side who do it in a private capacity, might be dealt with in a serious manner instead of being sloughed off in the fashion that it has always been dealt with in my experience in this House. I would appreciate it if the hon. Prime Minister would inform the House as to whether he is giving any consideration to this kind of thing.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there are several points involved here. In the first place, none of the business of this House is ever sloughed off. Second—

Mr. MacDonald: We will document that.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member may document it as he wishes.

Mr. MacDonald: It has not even been called—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is the prerogative of the government to call the legislation appearing on the order paper, and I have read the motions and resolutions that are on the order paper today. Some of them appeared in the latter part of last week and it never occurred to me that had I called them right now, this afternoon, hon. members would be prepared to proceed with the discussion of them.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Prime Minister lets us know, we will be prepared.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: One other point: The hon. member speaks about the rules in the House of Commons. Well, I will be very frank with him and say that I would not like to see this Legislature get into some of the positions I have noticed in the House of Commons because of some of their procedures. So we are not necessarily copying our procedure here from the procedure followed in the House of Commons.

On the question of the motions that are here: I am quite prepared to call these as the business of the House proceeds. I realize full well that it would suit the Opposition if I were to call them as the first order of business on successive days but this is not necessary. As to the importance they have in the business of this Legislature—I can assure the hon. member that I will take into consideration the remarks he has made. Some of these matters will be called and will be discussed. I do not necessarily say that right at this moment is the proper time to do it, but in any event I will take into consideration the remarks he has made.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 4.15 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE PLANT DISEASES ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Plant Diseases Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation I might say that the proposed amendment would permit a municipal by-law to provide for the control and eradication of diseases that have not been designated as plant diseases in the regulations. This would permit a municipality to provide for the control of, shall we say, Dutch elm disease if they so wish, without our having to designate it as a plant disease in the regulations. Each municipality could set up its own standards of control and all of the by-laws as in the present Act would be subject to the approval of the Minister of Agriculture.

THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Department of Agriculture Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation, I would like to say that this amendment will provide the authority for the guarantee of loans made to such persons and for such purposes as the Cabinet determines, as for example loans made to farmers for the purpose of paying the costs of purchasing and transporting water if necessary.

THE JUNIOR FARMER ESTABLISHMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Junior Farmer Establishment Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation might I say that the purpose of this amendment is to increase the amount available under the Act from $20,000 to $40,000 available under the same terms as previously.

THE SLOT MACHINES ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to repeal The Slot Machines Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to repeal the provincial Slot Machines Act. Some years ago an Act similar to this was declared ultra vires of other provincial legislatures. It has not been in use. The control of these particular machines is handled now through the criminal code and therefore there is no purpose in having this bill on the statute books of Ontario.

THE TRUSTEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to provide that damages for torts committed by a person now deceased may be recovered from his estate in the case of such torts for which the person was vicariously responsible. In other words, an example is a case where the owner of a motor vehicle driven by another which was involved in an accident dies before the hearing of the action against the owner as well as the driver of the automobile.

THE COUNTY COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The County Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment to The County Courts Act to provide that costs taxable by the clerk of a county court on the Supreme Court scale may be taxed by the Supreme Court taxing officers at Toronto, London or Ottawa, who have authority to exercise a discretion in allowing certain fees in excess of the maximum under the rules of the Supreme Court which bind the local taxing officers.

THE RECIPROCAL ENFORCEMENT OF MAINTENANCE ORDERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to give a right of appeal when a juvenile or family court judge refuses to confirm a maintenance order which is received in his court from an outside jurisdiction with which we have reciprocal arrangements. At the present time there is an appeal from confirmation of the order but there is no appeal from the refusal to confirm.

THE MAGISTRATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Magistrates Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the establishment of a chief magistrate to co-ordinate and supervise the despatch of business in magistrates' courts in Ontario in a manner similar to that of the chief judge for county and district courts, a system which has worked exceedingly well in the past few years in those courts.

THE JURORS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Jurors Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this bill is to repeal an old requirement which now serves no useful purpose and that is that the sheriff shall post the precept on the court house door as well as his own door, to the hour at which the jurors will be chosen.

THE DOWER ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Dower Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this is one of several amending Acts which will be brought before the House this year, together with substantial amendments to The Registry Act to continue the process begun some years ago of having in The Registry Act and The Land Titles Act all the law referable to realty in the province of Ontario. This particular bill will amend The Dower Act for the purpose of bringing the provisions of this Act into line with The Registry Act and for taking out the schedule of fees payable to registrars of deeds under The Dower Act and placing them in the schedule of fees to The Registry Office Act.

THE EXTRAJUDICIAL SERVICES ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Extrajudicial Services Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, hon. members will remember that at the last session of the Legislature the provincial allowance to county and district court judges for their services under and with respect to provincial statutes was increased to $3,500 per annum per judge. For almost 80 years the judges of the Supreme Court benches in Ontario have been receiving the sum of $1,000 per annum for their services under Ontario statutes.

This bill increases the provincial allowance to judges of the Supreme Court to $4,000 per annum.

THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY RESOURCES ACT

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Department of Energy Resources Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, the first three sections of this bill deal with the change in name of this department from The Department of Energy Resources to The Department of Energy and Resources Management.

Section 4 of this bill deals with the appointment of staff in the department and we are bringing it up to date.

THE DEPARTMENT OF TRAVEL AND PUBLICITY ACT

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Travel and Publicity) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Department of Travel and Publicity Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Travel and Publicity): Mr. Speaker, this bill will do two things; one is to change the name of the department as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and the other to change the annual reporting from the Provincial Secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council in conformity with other departments.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts), proper notice of which has been given to him.

Has the hon. Minister completed the investigation into the sale of Crown land in the Tea Lake district? And is he prepared to report thereon? And is the hon. Minister prepared to hold a new sale and make revisions in the method presently used to dispose of Crown land?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is "yes". A complaint was received by me on Monday following Saturday, December 14, 1963 regarding the sale of eight lots in the Tea Lake district. I immediately instructed a thorough inquiry as to the manner in which these sales had been conducted. The inquiry included interviewing the persons who were successful in obtaining lots and a number of others who attended in the hope that they would acquire lots.

Regulations 20 to 28 of The Public Lands Act regulations govern the sale of summer resort locations. Pursuant thereto, the eight lots remaining in the subdivision on Tea Lake in the township of Matchedash, Simcoe county, were advertised. While the regulations do not require advertising, in this case the sale was advertised.

I might say that a number of lots had previously been sold but these eight lots had not been offered previously for sale because the department's plan for the whole lake had not been completed. There had, however, been inquiries from time to time as to the availability of these lots—hence the advertising.

The price at which lots are sold under these regulations is fixed—and I would emphasize that—sold under these particular regulations is fixed. This has some obvious advantages in that the amount of dollars to be paid alone does not determine who gets the lot. It has some obvious disadvantages also, as has been indicated in this particular sale.

Here we had a first-come, first-serve situation. The referees responsible for determining who were the successful acquirers were not in too enviable a position. Under the circumstances and after interviewing all those responsible for the sale, I am satisfied that they did the best they felt they could and did not show any favouritism.

The sale in question was attended by about 25 persons. The hour of the sale was 10 a.m. on December 14. Some prospective purchasers had come the evening before in ten degrees below zero weather and were offered shelter in the department garage. Some had arrived in the night and early morning and secured numbered cards which had been placed on the office door at 12.30 a.m. Some arrived between 6 a.m. and 10 a.m. on the morning of the sale and lined up at the door on which the numbered cards had been placed. The first eight people to arrive, as determined by the referee, on the basis of these facts, received the lots.

The answer to the second question as to whether a new sale will be held is "no". However, the department is looking at the Tea Lake situation carefully again to see if some additional lots can be put up for sale.

With regard to methods for disposing of Crown lands, I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that there are several methods available under the Act. For example: sale under the regulations at fixed prices and conditions as in this case; sale by auction; or sale by tender, on such terms and conditions as may be fixed in the notices relating thereto. It is a matter of judgment in the light of the circumstances in each case as to the procedure to be adopted.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Minister allow a further question?

Will any provision be made for the complainants to be advised of the possible extra lots that were mentioned, Mr. Speaker? And will they be given any priority as to purchasing those lots?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: When I mentioned that we are now looking into the possibility of other lots being made available, I would think that those who had been trying to get lots before would be given some consideration in relation to this particular position. But I do not think that there are more than three or four additional lots that would be available, so we may still have less lots than there are people desiring them.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), which has been duly submitted.

Is it the policy of The Department of Education to allow schools to use plays or entertainment, and textbooks, with derogatory and stereotyped phrases pertaining to minority racial groups?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member (Mr. Paterson) for notice of the question. Actually I think it amounts to two questions. I am not too clear on what one means by "school plays or entertainment" but I think perhaps we could answer it best by quoting section 35 of The Schools Administration Act, as the responsibility for deciding the activities such as school plays or entertainment to be permitted in school buildings rests with the local boards—and I quote the section to the hon. member:

A board may permit the school buildings and premises to be used for any educational or other lawful purposes that it deems proper provided the proper conduct of the school is not interfered with.

Now, dealing with what I believe would be really part two of the question and not being too clear on what the hon. member means by "stereotyped phrases": In the case of approved textbooks, The Department of Education does not allow the use of derogatory or stereotyped phrases, if the hon. member is using it perhaps in the same context, pertaining to minority racial groups.

Every effort is made to ensure that no such phrases are included in an approved text. Where it is found an expression or phrase may be objectionable, not only to minority racial groups but to other persons or groups, the matter is referred by the department to the publisher and his authors for their comments. In the great majority of cases, action is taken by them to overcome the objection. If it is considered that the publisher has not adequately met the objection the department asks that a change be made as a condition of continued listing of the book as an approved text.

I think I could give the hon. member an example. Mr. Speaker, some few months ago, a group of people in this province was mentioned in one of our reference books, I believe in the schools. I think it referred to our Japanese friends and after consultation with the publisher the word that this group felt was somewhat objectionable was in fact removed.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Simonett) which was duly submitted. Does this department, which now contains the Conservation and Authorities branch as well as the Ontario Water Resources Commission, intend to allow further offshore drilling for gas and oil in the Great Lakes?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for giving notice of this question. The answer to his question is "yes". This department does intend to follow offshore drilling for gas and oil in the Great Lakes.

At present, and since 1959, such drilling has been, and is, restricted to Lake Erie in accordance with express government policy. This policy was substantiated in 1961 through the recommendations of the Langford committee on oil and gas resources. Also in accordance with the recommendations of that committee the government is presently considering opening other parts of the Great Lakes to drilling but as yet no decision has been reached as to how, or under what circumstances, this may be done.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts), notice of which has been given.

Is the hon. Prime Minister in a position to make a statement respecting the Ontario government's position on the issue of revisions in the federal pension plan as proposed in letters to the provinces?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): From the revisions that were suggested by the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) and are presently being studied, I will prepare an answer to his letter which he asked for and I will make statements to the Legislature when I am in a position to draw that letter. I would hope that this would be some time next week.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wish to ask the hon. Prime Minister. Will the hon. Prime Minister inform the House of the names, occupations and qualifications of the members of the special committee established by Order in Council to consider and report on the government's medical care bill? The second part is what were the terms of reference that were issued to this committee?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I might perhaps more properly give you the terms of reference first. These are contained in an Order in Council dated August 22, 1963 and for the information of any of the hon. members I have tabled this Order in Council so it will be available to them. The terms of reference read:

Having regard to the maintenance of the physical and material well-being of the people of Ontario and the social, economic and health benefits to be achieved through the establishment and operation of a feasible medical services insurance programme to examine and inquire into and hold meetings for the study and discussion of, to receive representations in connection with matters related to and consonant with the basic principles, purposes, objectives of Bill 163 of the 1962-63 session of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario respecting medical services insurance and after due study and consideration to make recommendations and report upon matters inquired into under the terms set out herein as the commissioners see fit to the Prime Minister and Executive Council of Ontario.

This committee was appointed under The Public Inquiries Act and has all the powers that it contains therein.

Now, the personnel, and their occupations.

The chairman is Dr. J. Gerald Hagey who is president of the University of Waterloo.

The members are Mrs. G. O. Aylen, chairman of the board of directors of Ottawa Civic Hospital; Dr. William Butt, who is on the staff of Toronto Western, South Peel and Queensway Hospitals in the Toronto area and the General and St. Joseph's Hospitals in St. Catharines. He is a general practitioner and I believe lives here in Toronto.

Miss Helen Carpenter, dean of the school of nursing at the University of Toronto; Dalton J. Caswell of Sundridge, who is an executive member of the board of regents of Huntington University in Sudbury. He is a businessman and a director of various associations in the north. A. Roy Coulter, of Campbellville, who is chairman of the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board and secretary-treasurer of the Halton County Federation of Agriculture and has had a great deal to do with the Halton Co-operative Medical Services over the years.

Dr. Robert Galloway, who is a surgeon on the staff of St. Joseph's Hospital, Toronto, active in the affairs of the Ontario Medical Association, chairman of a special committee on medical care and practice which reviewed the basic principles of medical services arrangements. Dr. John Hamilton, who is dean of medicine of the University of Toronto. Miss Helen MacArthur, national director of nursing services of the Canadian Red Cross. W. S. Major, general manager of Physicians' Services Incorporated in Toronto.

P. J. Mulrooney, who is general manager of CUMBA Co-operative Health Services, Toronto, and has been active in the credit union movement for over twenty years. Carmen A. Naylor, who is an actuary with the London Life Insurance Company. Harry Simon, regional director of organization of the Canadian Congress of Labour, Toronto, vice-chairman of the Toronto Labour Committee for Human Rights. J. L. Whitney, president of the General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada, who comes from Waterloo and Toronto, former mayor of Waterloo and a member of the board of governors of the University of Waterloo.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am going to accept the suggestion made by the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. MacDonald) and we will have some discussion, in the next few days as time is available, on some of these resolutions on the order paper. I so notified the hon. members of the two Opposition parties this morning in order that they might be ready. This afternoon I thought we might, in view of the fact that I had this long question from the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy), deal with the fourth resolution under other motions under notices on the order paper.

RESOLUTION REGARDING MEDICAL INSURANCE

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 4, by Mr. S. Lewis.

RESOLUTION: That in the opinion of this House the government should proceed as soon as possible with the establishment of a universal, government-operated medical insurance plan to provide all of the people of Ontario with general and specialist medical services in addition to universal hospital care, the said plan to be based on the following principles: (a) everyone will be covered; (b) a comprehensive range of services of high quality will be provided; (c) costs will be equitably distributed; (d) there will be public responsibility in the administration of the plan; (e) medical decisions will be made by the medical profession; (f) a doctor will not be prohibited from practising completely outside the plan if he wishes.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I filed with this House a resolution which I trust the hon. members will allow me to remind them of by reading it as follows:

That in the opinion of this House the government should proceed as soon as possible with the establishment of a universal, government-operated medical plan to provide all of the people of Ontario with general and specialist medical services in addition to universal hospital care, the said plan to be based on the following principles: (a) everyone will be covered; (b) a comprehensive range of services of high quality will be provided; (c) costs will be equitably distributed; (d) there will be public responsibility in the administration of the plan; (e) medical decisions will be made by the medical profession; (f) a doctor will not be prohibited from practising completely outside the plan if he wishes.

That is the text of the resolution. Mr. Speaker, may I, through you, to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) say that he was essentially correct in one respect yesterday when he implied that some hon. members of this House, this one, a new member with a maiden speech, might be taken somewhat unawares; but I rise with considerable enthusiasm to speak on this resolution.

The area of medical insurance, in this province and in this country over the last couple of years, has caused considerable public ferment, much volatile debate, and it is not my intention this afternoon to add to that kind of atmosphere, which is not always conducive to proper contemplation of issues. I merely wish to suggest some persuasive factors with regard to medical insurance to the hon. members of this House.

I naturally recognize that there are profound differences in social philosophy operating on the government benches and on the benches of the New Democratic Party and the official Opposition in this Legislature. But even though that may be the case, Mr. Speaker, I find it hard to operate in the atmosphere of medical care which presently hangs over this province, an atmosphere which I suggest is essentially antiquated in nature and—even given the different social and economic organization of this society as compared to western Europe—an atmosphere which is almost nineteenth century in its formulation and its attitudes.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that medical care is by no means a new issue. For the interest of the hon. members of this House—and many may know it—a medical health insurance plan incorporating the principles outlined in this resolution, the essential principles, was enacted in Germany in 1883, in Denmark in 1892, in Norway in 1909, in the United Kingdom first in 1911 and then elaborated on in 1948, in Japan in 1922, in France in 1928, in Spain—anti-democratic societies can apparently also have medical care for their people—in 1942, in Scandinavia in the post-war period. So that almost without exception every single country in western society has adopted a full and universal medical care plan. Only North America stands as the exception.

What we are debating here today therefore, Mr. Speaker, is something that has been accepted in every other western society, namely the right that every citizen should be guaranteed full medical care, a right as inviolable as the guarantee of education, of employment, of food, clothing and shelter; a right which should bear no relation whatsoever to any state of economic penury or economic need.

Suppose, Mr. Speaker, for a moment that this be granted as the objective of every group in this House—which I am sure it is. What we are faced with then surely, is a balance as to difference of means, and this resolution is proposed deliberately as a stark contrast to Bill 163 passed through this House—a bill which is now in the hands of the Hagey commission, to which the hon. Prime Minister recently referred and to which that commission is wholly confined.

We of this party contend that a voluntary, privately-administered, government-supervised plan such as is presently being contemplated simply cannot do the job. All reason and experience dictate otherwise.

First, it is precisely the inadequacy of the present private scheme throughout Ontario which instigated the medical care furor, and which necessitated some kind of legislation, however inadequate. On the present premium basis, whether it be PSI or any other privately-sponsored plan, whether it be $129 per year per person under one clause or $141 a year for a family under another clause—regardless of terms—the premium was too high. What is more, the coverage and the ceiling of payment were inevitably limited. So the public expression of discontent grew.

Secondly, private plans with a government subsidy inevitably impose on society a set of class distinctions. I find a certain degree of irony in a Conservative government sponsoring class distinction, but that is precisely what this plan does because it necessitates a division into first- and second-class citizens. If, in fact, certain marginal groups are to receive a subsidy, then how and why they are marginal must be established. In order to establish that, a large number of people have to be subjected to a degrading and humiliating means test. And if that is the case, it is an odious test and one that is unacceptable to this party in this Legislature.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, such a plan continues to discriminate against those groups who are most in need of medical care in this province—of that there is no question. The government has said that it will subsidize all those in need who now fall within the scope of general assistance and public welfare. The fact of the matter is, as every hon. member in this House knows, those people already have medical expenses covered within public welfare and general assistance. If certain marginal groups are to be covered—so be it; it is a step forward—but what about the groups in society who fall in the income bracket of $3,000 to $5,000 a year, the low and moderate income brackets?

Perhaps the House would be interested in one or two pieces of statistical evidence. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics census bulletin showed that in Ontario for the year ending May 31, 1961, 48.3 per cent of families earned less than $5,000 a year. And that does not include individuals, just families.

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): That is more than I made.

Mr. S. Lewis: The Department of National Revenue's taxation statistics for the year 1961, demonstrate—and I think this is significant, Mr. Speaker—that for all those who filed income tax returns, 52.4 per cent of the people made less than $4,000 a year; 52.4 per cent. Perhaps that is slightly less than the hon. member opposite makes.

Mr. Letherby: Is that bad or good?

Mr. S. Lewis: And one suggests, Mr. Speaker, that these are important figures. They are statistics, but they are statistics that are meaningful in human terms and have to be taken into account and recognized by this House. And only a universal plan as embraced in this kind of resolution will do it.

The present system advocated by this government, I suggest to you, cannot do it, as indeed the only plan in Canada which parallels the government plan has already demonstrated, and that is the plan in Alberta. When enrolment came up in October of 1963 for that plan, Mr. Speaker, only one out of five people in the province of Alberta joined. Of those who were eligible for government subsidy only one out of three joined—some 135,000 out of 400,000 people. The premiums run at roughly $162 a year per family. For those whose incomes are below $2,600 a year the government pays half, which still leaves families with an intolerable premium burden. And for those whose income per year rises to between $2,500 and $3,000, the government pays one-quarter—another intolerable burden. It is no surprise that the people of Alberta—either through inability to pay or sheer negligence to enrol—simply are not benefiting from precisely the kind of plan which is presently presaged for the province of Ontario.

Mr. Letherby: What does the hon. member want us to do about it?

Mr. S. Lewis: I shall come to that.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): If the hon. member would listen to this it would do him a lot of good. He might learn something for once.

Mr. S. Lewis: The final point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, and I think that hon. members on the opposite benches will agree, is that if one accepts the general principle of human health care as an inviolable factor to which people are entitled as of right, then it is surely inconsistent for a government to supervise a plan which guarantees private insurance companies making a profit out of health. And that is precisely the position which will obtain in this province unless our type of resolution goes through.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I think the brief presented to the Hagey commission by the Ontario Association of Social Workers put it rather neatly when it said, and I quote:

In our opinion the proposed legislation does not provide a significant stage towards the achievement of adequate health services for the people of Ontario, nor is it designed as part of a comprehensive plan.

Other groups associated with the general public, Mr. Speaker, spoke likewise. Only medical societies and groups associated with the insurance plan as it now stands supported the proposed government legislation. And that is not surprising. They collaborated in its formulation; they benefit from its enactment. And so the Hagey commission thus becomes a sort of congenial façade to work out administrative procedures for a predetermined proposition.

Some of us in this House—I hope the entire Opposition in this House—rejects that point of view. I hope that some of us in this House do not accept the government's athletic approach to Medicare, which is essentially to begin with a somersault, to move into the air on plevaults hovering perilously in the stratosphere, and then to descend to earth in the form of a headstand.

I suggest that this standing on the head of the Medicare issue is precisely what is at fault. For where a universal scheme has been enacted, Mr. Speaker, as in the province of Saskatchewan, comparisons become vital and valuable and perhaps I might make one or two of those comparisons in answer to innuendos across the floor.

First, the coverage in Saskatchewan is 93 per cent of the population—880,000 people covered. The remaining seven per cent are covered by other provincial and federal plans.

Second, the premium level after the first year of operation was dropped to $12.00 per family per year.

Third, the number of doctors has substantially increased. Because the hon. Prime Minister was good enough to notify us that we might be called to speak on this resolution today, I got in touch with the Medical Care Insurance Commission in Saskatchewan to find out precisely how the doctor situation stands, and it is as follows.

In January of 1963 there were 881 doctors in Saskatchewan. In January of 1964 there are 939, an increase of 58 physicians—double the average rate of increase from the years 1950 to 1959. So despite all the suggestions of medical collapse and desertion of the province of Saskatchewan by physicians after a universal plan, in fact the number of doctors has substantially increased. And incidentally, Mr. Speaker, ironically enough, so has their income.

It is estimated by the Medical Care Insurance commission that for this past year the gross average income for doctors in Saskatchewan will be somewhat over $30,000 a year. If one assumes one-third for operating expenses and expenses generally, we have the situation of an average annual income of over $20,000 a year, which is $1,500 to $2,000 above what the doctors were receiving even before Medicare. So from the point of view of the medical profession it is hardly a prohibitive plan.

The number of students at the medical school has increased from 45, to 65, to 85 this year. The cost in 1963 of $19.7 million for the plan was under the estimates made by the Thompson Commission report whose actuarial bases incidentally, governed our representations to this House when Bill 163 was debated some time ago.

The most interesting thing is that all groups in Saskatchewan now endorse the plan. I would like to read to this House one quote from Mr. Morton Peterson, leader of the Progressive-Conservative Party in Saskatchewan, who said in a recent speech—this is the Regina Leader Post, December 11, 1963, I am quoting:

Medicare in Saskatchewan is not only here to stay but it is acceptable to the vast majority of people. The Progressive-Conservative Party has no intention of abandoning medical care or destroying it by altering the provisions of this Act in any major fashion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for those in this House who therefore doubt the viability of this kind of universal plan, I suggest that the doubts are confounded. The experience of Saskatchewan, whether it is documented in national magazines like Maclean's or individual newspaper items, or statistical data produced by the Medical Care Insurance Commission; this kind of evidence demonstrates that such a plan is viable. Indeed the entire British health service, modelled on essentially the same principles, demonstrates the same thing.

I was intrigued to note in a recent issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail of January 17 that Sir Arthur Porrit, chairman of a committee of doctors to review the British National Health Service—chairman of a committee representing the entire medical profession in the United Kingdom—endorsed British health insurance with only minor reservations as being a plan working effectively for both the doctor and the public.

And surely that is what is at stake—the public! I for one find it a little hard to constantly embrace the proposition that what is at stake here is a government and certain insurance companies and medical societies and doctors' groups. One tends to forget the average income earner of $3,000 to $5,000 a year for whom this kind of plan is an absolute necessity.

Mr. Speaker, to bring my remarks to a close, might I say that some time ago—some two months ago—the hon. leader of my party in this House (Mr. MacDonald) suggested to the Liberal Party that we would be pleased to have their support on this kind of universal medical care scheme.

We felt, Mr. Speaker, that a concerted effort on the part of the Opposition on such a principle was absolutely necessary to obtain for people the objectives we have in mind. We have not heard in reply, but we still sincerely hope that support will be forthcoming, because our type of scheme is not illusory. It is universal; it is total coverage; it gives low premiums with an equitably distributed tax base. It would gradually extend to other medical and para-medical areas—to the tremendous cost of drugs, dental care, psychiatric care in institutions.

The fee schedule would be set by the doctors themselves; the scheme would be handled by a medical care insurance commission somewhat parallel to that operating in Saskatchewan in which doctors have major representation. This would tend to obviate the fears of the medical profession by co-operating with them and, perhaps somewhat lessen the extent of medical propaganda from the politicians in the medical profession.

Above all, our plan would have a sound actuarial basis computed in the same way as Saskatchewan's was computed, amounting to an annual cost per capita of $26.25; some $165 million for the province of Ontario as a whole. Now, by and large, Mr. Speaker, we submit this as a reasonable proposition. We submit it as a just proposition. We submit it as indispensable to guaranteeing the health needs and security of the citizens in this society.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, may I, through you, say to the mover that I agree with what he has said. Seeing this has been the first time he has been before this House, I compliment him on the very fine way in which he has said what he had to say.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) has said that the Liberal Party has not informed the NDP as to what we think on this problem of medical insurance. Certainly we have been before this House on a number of occasions and I have, just as I stood up, said I agree with what he has said. Not so many days ago I was quoted in the press, and I am not afraid to repeat here, that although I may have disagreed with some of the ways the Saskatchewan government went about imposing their plan, that we have to face facts that the plan in Saskatchewan is succeeding. Certainly, with the previous speaker, we have to face facts that medical insurance has succeeded in Europe and in various parts of the world because it is something that the public needs. Again I emphasize, it is what the public needs, not necessarily the doctors or insurance companies.

One of the things that I cannot help but notice in observing the various briefs that come before the Hagey commission is this, that the briefs presented by the doctors and by the insurance companies are oriented toward being in favour of Bill 163, but those groups such as the social workers, that the hon. member for Scarborough West mentioned are all in favour of the public and those people who are in favour of the public and seek to help those who are underprivileged or do not have the means that other people have, keep emphasizing that the present plan, as presented by the government, is just not good enough. It favours the few, and it favours the very, very few.

In regard to the doctors let me say this, as we have said on previous occasions, that we in the Liberals believe that every man is entitled to his own wife, his own toothbrush and his own doctor and we have no intention of interfering with the doctor-patient relationship and we believe in a fee for service. Certainly with these assurances from men responsible in public life the doctors should have no fear that they are going to be overrun, that the government is going to have too much power.

Certainly it is far easier, I believe—and I think many doctors who I have talked to have assured me of this—it is far easier for a doctor to treat a patient knowing that that patient does not have to worry about the cost. There are many people, certainly those who have studied psychiatry, will tell you that the recovery of a patient suffers and takes longer because of the fear and the worry of the cost in order to pay for the doctor, to pay for the drugs, to pay whatever is necessary in order to get good health back.

I, as a Liberal, and we here as Liberals, say this: that our people are our greatest resource and it is up to us to see to it that they have the best of health and when they do not have good health, it is up to us to see to it that they get good health as cheaply and as quickly as possible.

If we are going to get good health as cheaply as possible we are going to have to take the profit out of insurance. The fact that large corporations can make a great deal out of the illness of the people in this country, and that this increases the costs of medical insurance, is something that we as men in public life are going to have to clear up. You can give the people good health without expensive insurance. It is true you cannot give the people good health without the best in medical service. So that is why any money that we can spare should go in improving our medical services, not for the profit of insurance companies.

Now just for example, to give you some idea of the various medical plans that are available and how the cost compares. Canada, Mr. Speaker, has 109 voluntary medical insurance plans in effect, of which 46 are private insurance plans and 63 are so-called non-profit plans. Together they cover about one-half of the population of Canada. Now that just gives you some example, Mr. Speaker; even with all these 109 plans, only half the population of Canada has medical insurance. The non-profit plans, covering nearly 5,000,000 persons, received a premium income of $100 million in 1959. They paid out $89 in benefits for each $100 received in premiums.

In other words, the non-profit plans retained $11 of every $100 they received. But the private insurance plans covering about 3,800,000 persons received a premium income of about $155 million. They paid out $72 in benefits for each $100 received in premiums. So that the private insurance plans retained $28 out of every $100 and the non-profit retained $11.

This shows that there is a tremendous difference and I believe that the money that is so often retained by the large corporations in matters of health should be poured back into the public service and given to our people in such a fashion that they get better health.

I would be prepared to go one step farther than the hon. member for Scarborough West was prepared to go, Mr. Speaker, and say that we also need insurance against ill health; sickness insurance. Now, in this respect, any plan has to go in stages, and to say that we can bring about everything all at once would, of course, be an exaggeration.

What is needed at the outset is certainly the medical services, and when I say medical services I include such ancillary services as chiropractors. I know that maybe medical men do not believe in chiropractors but if we are to have the freedom of choice we hear so much about, then if a person prefers a chiropractor, I feel they should have the privilege of choosing that person.

We should maintain our hospital services and immediately we should bring in, I say, this overall comprehensive coverage for medical insurance. Then there should be a second stage, Mr. Speaker. We should remember that probably the cost of drugs is almost as great as the cost of doctors, and that any plan that ignores the fact that drugs must be supplied to our people is simply not good enough. Even this could be done in stages. I would say in the near future our old people should receive drugs. Anyone who is an old age pensioner certainly will feel the cost of drugs far more than most and it is usually the elderly that need drugs more than the average.

Then, too, let us not forget that we need dental coverage. Again, in bringing about dental coverage—bearing in mind that there are possibly not enough dentists in Ontario to cover the population—such a plan again could be staged, beginning with children from the age of twelve and guaranteeing them coverage and then gradually advancing until we take in the entire population.

I would also mention through you, Mr. Speaker, to this House, that finally, we should have sickness insurance, because the absence from employment of our workers through sickness is 31 times greater than through strikes. One can see that there must be a tremendous absence from work as a result of ill-health and men need their income just as much when they are sick, if not more so.

Again, I would stress the importance of doing away with the means test. The previous

hon. speaker emphasized this point and I, and my party, agree wholeheartedly that in matters of health a means test should play no part.

Today, the very poor receive help from the government—from the taxpayer and the very rich—they do not have to worry. But it is the vast majority in between that need our help—these are the people that need the greatest help from this type of legislation.

These are the people that the Conservative Party ignores most. The Conservatives are always playing up to the insurance companies, or those who have wealth and do not need it. They have this nineteenth-century view of welfare as something that is like the dole. If you are going to give your people good health services today it should not be provided through the mechanics of insurance, but rather as a public service.

I feel that it is a tragedy that the government has seen fit, first to bring out half-baked legislation, and then to say it is going to come into effect in January 1965. It now looks as if it is going to be 1966 and I presume, Mr. Speaker, it will be passed back another year and when the next election comes along we will have some other plan brought forward in the hope that this will get the Conservatives back into power.

This business of bringing out what is in essence phoney legislation, is really treating the public of Ontario with contempt. It is something which should be brought forth and emphasized and I, as a re-elected member of this House, have seen how this government has operated in the past: literally, I say, treating the public of Ontario with contempt, by bringing forth such bills as they have in Bill 163 and then more or less throwing it into the laps of a committee that I presume will do no more than what the government has done in the past. So, in taking my seat, Mr. Speaker, I say once again, we in the Liberal Party support this resolution and we feel that it should be acted upon forthwith.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I very much enjoyed hearing the last speaker from the Liberal benches and appreciate the fact that he is supporting this resolution. I was rather interested because we have a federal government which represents his party and he talked a great deal about matters which I think are more the prerogative of the federal government. But since our hon. friends here have a chance to support this resolution and set the example to the federal government, then I think we are in a good position to have a health plan across this country.

I want to mention a couple of items in addition to what has already been said. The matter of cost has been raised in connection with the health plan. I would like to quote the Manchester Guardian of December 26, where it is pointed out editorially that 12 years ago the British health plan took 3.8 per cent of the national income. Today it is 4.1 per cent.

In other words, while the dollar-value of the cost of the plan has gone up, in proportion to the national income and the productivity of the country, the cost remains about the same. J. B. McGeachy in the Financial Post of October 20, 1962, points out that in Canada five per cent of the gross national product is taken up in health expenses, whereas in Britain he says the figure is four per cent of the gross national product. In other words, it is costing Canadians more money vis-à-vis the gross national product to get the health care they get than it costs the British people. And Britons are getting a full-fledged national health plan, including the things that my hon. friend mentioned a few moments ago, and yet Canadians are not getting anywhere near that kind of service.

So I bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and to the attention of the House, realizing that we have to face up to the fact that has already been outlined, that if we are to have the kind of medical care in this country that Canadians demand and Canadians deserve, then we must bring some sort of comprehensive plan administered by government.

In closing let me quote Leonard Bertin in the Toronto Daily Star of May 22, 1962, when he gives an account of an interview by Dr. Carl Evang, director of the Norwegian Health Services and widely recognized as one of the world's great experts on national health programmes. Dr. Evang says this:

The quality of medical care depends on many factors including medical education, post-graduate training facilities, teamwork, equipment and, last but not least, money, so that the patient can pay for the service. Medical care in Dr. Evang's opinion has reached its highest levels in countries where schemes of prepayment have been fully developed and cover all or almost all of the population.

We have on this continent two nations which are now behind most of the rest of the world in this whole forward move of medical care for the people. In this rich province of Ontario we at least should be setting the example, or, I suppose, following the example of another province. At least we should be working out our own plan here. It may not be the same as the one already in effect in the province of Saskatchewan. But under our own circumstances, in our own way, let us work out here in Ontario the kind of plan which will give to all our people the care that medical science is now able to give us without regard to the length of the purse of the person receiving it.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at great length on this resolution. I think the hon. member for Scarborough West has ably stated our case and I cannot improve upon it.

I just want to make one comment with regard to procedure, Mr. Speaker, not so much with regard to this motion as generally in the discussion of resolutions that are brought before the House in the name of some hon. member of the Opposition. I assume from what has happened up to this point that the government is not going to speak to it. This is perhaps understandable in this instance, the government policy is stated in their bill—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): That is quite an assumption the hon. member made.

Mr. MacDonald: Fine; if I am wrong I shall look forward with delight to the fact and the evidence that I am wrong.

However, Mr. Speaker, I just rise to make this suggestion that when we are debating resolutions—and I want to thank the hon. Prime Minister for his bringing these matters before the House now so that we can deal with them more leisurely rather than in a rushed fashion later. I think it was a reasonable proposition I made, I think it was so reasonable that even he saw it on reflection—but I think it is necessary, Mr. Speaker, that each party have an opportunity, at least with one speaker, to express their views and not to resort to the kind of tactics we have had in the past of moving adjournment as soon as it is even presented. However, we will await with pleasure as to whether or not the Conservatives have any variations in their bill or elaborations on it to present to the House in the course of this debate.

The only substance that I want to add to the debate at the moment, Mr. Speaker, is to clarify some of the points which were raised by the hon. member for Parkdale.

He referred, for example, to the need for drugs to be covered, for dental care and so on. We agree. We have in our approach to a full health insurance programme, viewed it in staging. The first stage was hospital insurance, the second stage is the coverage of doctor bills, the third stage, in our view, is obviously drugs because a very strong case could be made that drugs are as important as the coverage of doctor bills. On occasion you can go to the doctor and you can get a prescription, once he has diagnosed your problem. If you have not the money to buy the drugs, what is the purpose of having gone to the doctor in the first instance?

Finally, of course, there is dental care. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that having stated our Medicare programme a year ago, one of the most consistent criticisms that we ran into across the province was the query—and incidentally often by people from the British Isles where their health insurance scheme covered everything at once—why do we have to wait to get coverage for drugs? This was the criticism. So much so that we investigated the proposition of the inclusion of drugs in a plan.

It is rather difficult to come up with completely authoritative figures but we discovered, Mr. Speaker, if you accept the figures that are put forward by the pharmaceutical association, that full coverage in the province of Ontario would cost approximately $20 per person—or approximately $120 million for the six million-plus population in this province. In other words, you would have for the coverage of drugs at their present cost, at their present prices, a bill almost as large as the Medicare bill.

In attempting to put forward a programme that was financially feasible, that was sound and a practical programme, we came to the conclusion that we could not immediately include the whole of drug coverage. But we examined it closely and suggested that two things were necessary. One, that there was an immediate need, whatever might be the cost, of including coverage for old age pensioners and for people who have a chronic need for drugs—if I may put it that way—a person with arthritis or similar diseases and therefore has a considerable need for drugs. As well, of course, as for in-patient coverage in hospitals for drugs which, as I understand it, are covered at the present time under our insurance plan.

We feel it is advisable to move forward and provide this coverage now because there is such a desperate human need. But we feel that the coverage for the whole of the population should be studied, and more particularly that we should proceed with vigour on ways and means of reducing drug prices. This is presumably what this government had in mind when it set up a select committee, which looked into the whole question of the cost of drugs and ways and means by which they can be brought down to a more practical level.

I do not think it would be a fair proposition that the public purse should be used to fatten the already fat profits of the drug companies.

We have had very conclusive evidence on this as to the profit levels of these companies. Indeed most of it has come from the United States, but what has come from the United States has proven pretty conclusively that here in Canada their profits are even higher, or at least the price levels are even higher, than they are in the United States.

So it seems to me that this problem must be tackled before you can consider the provision of drugs on an overall basis to the people of Ontario. But hospital, medical, drugs, dental, in that order, as quickly as the problems can be tackled and the service can be consolidated, is our kind of approach to full health insurance.

Now in the course of his remarks, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Parkdale also made mention of what he called a sickness insurance. Well, this is what we have been presenting to this House for year after year through resolutions introduced, usually by my hon. colleagues from Hamilton, in what we describe as a sickness and accident benefit programme. I submit though, Mr. Speaker, that this is another matter distinct from health insurance as such.

We have this very great anomaly, this very great gap, in our present welfare system. I am always a little puzzled when I read some of the pontifications these days from Conservative theorists like George Hogan that the welfare state has been completed, or nearly so and we do not need to worry about it any more. I wonder if he has ever looked at some of the yawning gaps in it. And one of the greatest yawning gaps in it is the need for a sickness and accident benefit programme.

If a man today is working in an industry and he is covered by workmen's compensation he is covered for the very simple reason that years ago a Conservative government came to the conclusion that when a man suffered an industrial accident, his family should not suffer the deprivation arising from the lack of a family income. So we pay him now 75 per cent of his income. But what if the man takes sick, or what if he has an accident on the way to work or on the way home from work, or over the week-end? The consequences are just as devastating for the family.

If we have moved to accident insurance through workmen's compensation while he is on the job, why do we not face up to this major need—even a bigger need—for both the workman and everybody else in terms of coverage through sickness and accident benefits?

I would agree that this is important, but I submit to hon. members that we should not confuse issues that are really separate issues. This is not part of a health insurance programme, and I repeat, our approach to a health insurance programme is, having established hospital insurance, let us move without delay to coverage for everybody in Medicare and, then, at least, the first steps towards coverage for drugs for those whose need is greatest, finally complete drug coverage and then beyond that there is the problem of dental coverage which I will not go into now, Mr. Speaker, because it raises really monumental problems. We simply have not got enough dentists and we are not spending the money to train them in adequate number that we could provide coverage to everybody. Obviously we shall have to start by providing full dental coverage to the young people and others in urgent need.

But as for the general proposition that has been advanced by the hon. member for Scarborough West, as he pointed out, it seems to me the facts and the experience now underline beyond contradiction that this is the effective way to meet the medical bills of the people of the province of Ontario. No other half-baked plan—as it has been described in one form of words and another by those who have come before the Hagey commission—no other half-baked plan such as the government has now presented is going to be able to meet the needs of these people and I am hoping, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister, who on occasion shows that he is a reasonable man, is going to face the facts here and also come up with a reasonable programme to provide the coverage for all our people.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I intended to speak to this resolution before that large assumption was made by the hon. member for York South.

I might also point out that I must reserve to myself as leader of the government to call the business of the House. Some suggestions I will accept, but I must serve notice that I will not necessarily accept them all.

What we are doing in fact here this afternoon is rehashing a debate which was held during the last session, during the consideration of the bill which is presently before the Hagey committee. There are a few new things that have been added. I was delighted to find out that the policy of the official Opposition on this question coincides with that of the New Democratic Party. This is the first time in some years that I have really known what the Liberal Party actually thought about this subject at all. Having listened to the hon. member for Parkdale I can only wonder if he really does speak for all those hon. members sitting over there among the official Opposition, Mr. Speaker, because I heard nothing of this position during the last election when this matter was debated far and wide. Now today they are absolutely right with you all the way. But they made no such remarks last August or last September, so I say to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would say to you this, Mr. Speaker, that even though this is a rehash of a debate held in this House during the last session, something new has been added—the position finally of the Liberal Party in this matter. I am not particularly sanguine that it will remain as such for too long, but nonetheless, for this afternoon, there it is.

Mr. Bryden: The trouble is the hon. Prime Minister never changes.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Scarborough—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Will the hon. Prime Minister let us vote on the resolution?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Scarborough West on his obvious debating ability. I can see that something new has been added to this Legislature and this will be, of course, welcome and we will be very happy on this side of the House to hear the expression of his ideas and philosophy so well presented, even though I must almost guarantee him that we will not agree with them.

Mr. Letherby: The hon. member has had it right there.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: When this Bill 163 was introduced last year—

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Do not confuse him with facts.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —I made a statement in the House and perhaps it would not be amiss if I were to do what the other speakers have done—except the hon. member for Parkdale, who took a somewhat new approach. Most of the other ideas expressed have been expressed here before. What we were seeking with this bill breaks down to several points.

First of all, we are seeking to provide a non-compulsory medical insurance plan, Mr. Speaker, for every resident of the province. We vary, of course, in our philosophy from everybody over there in the compulsory aspect, because they all have now adopted, as I assume, the compulsory aspect of this programme.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister's ideas have been tried out in Alberta and failed.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would just point out to the hon. member that we have two other programmes in this province that are non-compulsory and effort has been made in both these fields to introduce compulsion too. I think probably the percentage of our population covered in these non-compulsory schemes compares equally well with the figures quoted this afternoon on a compulsory medical scheme in Saskatchewan. Of course I refer to the hospital services insurance scheme which covers over 95 per cent of our people, and also what we have been able to achieve in the field of automobile insurance.

Mr. Bryden: It is a compulsory plan.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now these are matters for debate on other days. I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that we will debate these questions on other days, but nonetheless the point I make, I think, is valid and that is that you do not need compulsion to achieve broad coverage in this province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: There was compulsion for 60 per cent of the people across the province.

Mr. MacDonald: And that provided your viable economic base.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well I think we might get in this debate, Mr. Speaker, something of a question of philosophy, because we do not believe in compulsion.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We believe in the right of the individual—

Mr. Singer: That is why we are here.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We do not wish to take away from him every choice he has left and we do not wish to socialize him so that whatever he has is taken from him by the state and handed back by a bureaucrat, whether in fact he wants it or not. These things we do not believe in.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I might say that I had several interesting questions on the tip of my tongue during the time the various speakers opposite spoke, I contained myself and I hope they will do likewise.

Now I would point out to the House that in what we are—

Mr. Bryden: Does the hon. Prime Minister believe in unified administration in the hospital plan?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In what we are suggesting here, we will not disturb about 70 per cent of our population who are presently covered by one form or another of medical insurance. I will agree with hon. members that all these plans are not perfect by any means, any more than what they suggest—

Mr. Bryden: That is the understatement of the year.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —any more than the suggestions made here will produce Utopia in this field. But nonetheless, these people are covered. They choose their own plan.

Part of it comes over the bargaining table, and obviously they do not think that what we suggest is so bad, because it is quite obvious, and of course I will be booed down for saying this, Mr. Speaker, but this was an issue in the last election. It was an issue as much as it could be made so by the New Democratic Party, and somehow or other—

Mr. MacDonald: Done, sure, done!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: And somehow or other—

Mr. MacDonald: Now it is not done, it is postponed for a full year—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that it is wonderful to be back in the same old atmosphere we left last April.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to remind the members that if they have a question to ask the Prime Minister while he is speaking, and if he cares to answer, then they may ask the questions. If not, I ask you to refrain from shouting across the floor.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would like to apologize to you for these comments across the House. I had been under the impression that the hon. Prime Minister would move the adjournment of the debate—

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister still has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I yielded the floor to the speaker, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bryden: Sorry, I thought you were through.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, I have not finished.

Mr. Letherby: You cannot make a speech now.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Frankly, Mr. Speaker, we are concerned about the feeling that exists among many people in this province. They simply do not want everything taken away from them by the state—the scheme financed by the state and then the whole thing thrown back at them. Now what this scheme that we have introduced will do is this: First of all, it will guarantee that every resident in this province may purchase health insurance, regardless of his age, or her age, physical condition—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): If they can afford it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: They may buy it, if they choose. It will be available to them, and what we say is that every person selling insurance of this type in the province must offer, to any resident of the province, regardless of the state of health or age of that person, a policy which will have certain benefits. In other words we will establish the least benefit that can be provided and we will establish the maximum that can be charged for this, and if companies are going to do business in this province, they have to offer that policy to everybody here.

Now the last speaker of the Liberal Party called me a stooge of the insurance companies, and if this is being a stooge of the insurance companies, I would repeat what one man said on a television programme, during the election: Some stooge, eh?

I will point out again that this is the government that took every insurance company in Ontario right out of the hospital insurance business. We just said you do not do business here any more. This is being a great stooge for the insurance companies.

Now, in addition to what we were doing, we will assume the responsibility of providing this coverage to those people in the province who cannot provide it for themselves. In addition, we will insist that the coverage available to our people is non-cancellable, it can be cancelled only by the person who is insured; it cannot be cancelled by the insurer.

The question has arisen about what is called non-profit plans. Well, anybody with any sense of business can see profit in non-profit. It all depends what you do with your money and there is, in my opinion, no greater virtue in a non-profit company than there is in a profit company. But under this plan, all the non-profit companies that presently exist—offering coverage to our people—will be able to continue. All they have to do is meet the requirements. In other words, we will not disturb these people who are presently offering this type of coverage to the people of our province.

Much is made of the fact that this has been referred to a committee. I would only point out to the hon. members that in developing what I think everybody in this House must admit is a very successful hospital insurance plan, precisely the same technique was followed. A bill was introduced here to engender such discussion as we have had this afternoon, and I believe I said when we set up the committee, that one of its purposes would be to permit the public to see what the government was offering and to make up their minds about it.

They appear to have come to some decisions about that, in any event, and that committee is composed of the men and women whose names I read out today. They are able men and women. Frankly, I personally have no knowledge of what their political affiliations are because we sought to find people who were able and who could render mature, skilful and professional and knowledgeable decision in the matter under consideration.

The whole matter was referred to them in order that the public could make what representations they wished and in order that we might have the benefit not only of the public representations made to this committee, but the committee's deliberations after they had received the various points of view put before them. Then, as I said last year, this legislation, this bill, will, in due course be brought back here. I have not a doubt in the world that it will be changed before it comes again on the floor of this House, as a result of the hearings that the committee has held.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are going to continue with the procedure that we laid down. What we said we would do, we will do. That is what I said I would do in the Speech from the Throne a year ago and for the benefit of those who thought I was wrong when I said "done", if hon. members will check the Speech from the Throne, they will find that I did exactly what I said I would do.

Now, sir, I think hon. members might be interested to know what the committee has done in order that they might make up their own minds as to whether it has been successful or not. It has received 57 briefs. It received 11 organizations who presented briefs in Windsor and 35 briefs will be received by the committee during the present series of sittings being held in Toronto.

I see the afternoon paper contains some remarks that have been made during the hearings of the committee. Thus the committee is proceeding to carry out its hearings and this plan is developing much as we hoped it would. I would only say before sitting down, as I think I said on the opening day here, that I believe we are all after the same thing. Our methods undoubtedly will vary and perhaps we have different approaches to certain things, but in this area we all seek the ultimate good of the people of Ontario in the field of health. I think that we have achieved this. I think that this government has achieved this in the field of hospitalization and I would hope that what we are able to develop in the field of health will be equal to what we have been able to achieve in the field of hospitalization.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I said a minute ago that I had been under the impression that the hon. Prime Minister would follow the procedures of previous years and move the adjournment of the debate upon the conclusion of his remarks. I am glad to see that he is apparently not following that procedure on this occasion at any rate.

I had not intended to participate in this debate until I listened to his speech and some of the extremely misleading statements made in it. They are in line with standard Tory propaganda but I think it is time that attention was called to them.

Mr. Speaker, on many occasions the hon. Prime Minister and spokesmen for the Tory party generally have persistently tried to make it appear that the health insurance bill, Medicare bill, that they had before the Legislature in the last session, and which is now before the Hagey commission is the same in principle as the hospital insurance plan in this province. Mr. Speaker, that is entirely wrong. The hospital insurance plan now operating in this province is basically the same in principle as the type of plan that the hon. member for Scarborough West is trying to put forward in his resolution.

But the government, sir, has departed entirely from that principle in the bill on Medicare that it had before the House although it did not pass, and is now before the Hagey commission. What are the basic principles of our hospital insurance plan? First: there is a single unified public administration of that plan. Is that what the government is proposing with regard to Medicare? It certainly is not. They are proposing a great welter of private plans, some of which are more or less adequate and some of which are totally inadequate. There is to be in effect a public subsidization of those plans through the assistance that is given to people who are so delightfully described in the bill as being in needy circumstances. This is a complete departure from the principle in the hospital plan and the principle which has made the hospital plan successful and which I submit to this House, Mr. Speaker, is essential if we are to have a medical plan that is successful.

Further, the hon. Prime Minister has once again stated and restated the old Tory myth that the hospital insurance plan in this province is voluntary. It is no such thing, Mr. Speaker. It is compulsory for all employees in all employment units with 15 or more employees. That provided the base which made the plan successful, and on that base further additional coverage became possible.

I may say that the government should thank the rural medical co-ops for having filled out the area, and having got in large numbers of people in the area—which is voluntary—but basically there was an important and essential compulsory element in the plan and a public plan could not have succeeded without that basic element in it. So the Tories for years have been trying to put across a bill of goods to the people of the province that is quite inaccurate and is not based on any facts at all.

What the hon. Prime Minister has said about the hospital plan we can agree with. We think there are some improvements in detail that can be made, but we agree essentially it is a good plan. But that in no sense is an argument in favour of that bill that the government had before the House the last session.

Indeed, sir, it is an argument in favour of the resolution which is now standing on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Scarborough West.

I wish the government would sit and contemplate that fact and perhaps they would withdraw the bill that they put before the House at the last session and bring forward a bill in accord with the basic principles set forth in the resolution submitted by the hon. member.

This government is really lagging so far behind that it is almost incredible. The government of Alberta has already put into operation a bill which is identical in all its essential principles with the bill that the government submitted to this House at the last session and which is now before the Hagey commission. That bill has already been proved to be a failure, that legislation has failed in Alberta. So the government is now going through the ridiculous procedure of conducting an inquiry into a failure.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: When did it fail?

Mr. Bryden: It has already failed. Practically no one is registering under the plan in Alberta. Even for a family making $3,000 a year it would cost about $72 a year for Medicare under the Alberta plan and people in that income category simply cannot afford insurance at that level.

So we have before us right now in Canada two plans, one of the type proposed by the hon. member for Scarborough West, which is basically the same in principle as the hospital insurance plan now in this province; a plan like the one that is operating in Saskatchewan where it has proven to be an unqualified success. We have a plan similar in all essentials to what the government is now contemplating in effect in the province of Alberta, and it has been a failure. Apparently the government is simply incapable of learning from experience. It continues to go through the meaningless ritual of having the Hagey commission inquire into a bill which ought to be dead before it is even born.

Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped that the hon. Prime Minister would have had better arguments to present than the ones he did today in opposition to the resolution from the hon. member for Scarborough West. It would seem to me that his total lack of any convincing arguments against the resolution ought now to lead him—and I believe he is inherently a reasonable man influenced by logical argument—to see the error of his ways in the past and to adopt the resolution or the principle of that resolution.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There must be something wrong some place.

Mr. Bryden: There is certainly something radically wrong, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Prime Minister has his heels dug in in an untenable position. I would have thought a man of his experience and urbanity would have realized that he looks ridiculous in such a position and would now take the opportunity to move out, and to say he accepts the principle of the resolution put forward by the hon. member and that he hopes to bring in legislation at this session implementing the principles set forth in that resolution.

Mr. Sopha: George Hogan would approve of this position.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Lewis moves, seconded by Mr. Young, the resolution standing in his name be adopted. Shall the resolution be adopted?

All those in favour of the resolution, please say "aye".

All those opposed to the resolution, please say "nay".

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the ayes are 27, the nays 62.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, I think we should be ready to debate any of these orders that are on the order paper. I rather doubt that we can get to the second readings because these bills are not printed. However, we will do so gradually and I want to call the second readings as soon as they are available. But I doubt if any will be ready tomorrow, so perhaps we will confine ourselves to other items on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1964

The House met at 3.00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Simonett). The question is: Has the Atomic Energy Council of Canada given approval to a site for the building of a second nuclear plant for electrical power?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Nipissing for notice of this question. The answer is this: The location of nuclear power stations is under the direct control of the atomic energy control board. No application has yet been made by Ontario Hydro to the atomic energy control board concerning the location of the next nuclear power plant in Ontario.

Mr. Troy: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: If the Minister cares to answer a supplementary question.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Troy: Is the hon. Minister aware that a published report had this site to be established at Fairport, which I understand is near Frenchman's Bay on Lake Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No, I am not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Troy: That is strange.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to make an announcement which I think will be of interest to

hon. members of this House and to the public generally.

The Department of Reform Institutions has arranged a conference on addictions to be held at the Alex G. Brown Memorial Clinic Thursday and Friday, February 6 and 7 of this year. This conference is being presented in order to provide interchange of ideas and methods and to present current research and clinical material to those who are interested in the rehabilitation of persons with problems of alcoholism and narcotic addiction.

Canadian specialists in this field participating include Mr. H. D. Archibald, director of the alcoholism and drug research foundation; Dr. Gordon Bell of the Bell Clinic, who is also a consultant at the Alex G. Brown Memorial Clinic.

Two visiting speakers from the United States will present papers. Mr. Leon Brill, project director, Washington Heights Rehabilitation Centre, Department of Health, New York, will speak on changing concepts of narcotic addiction. Mr. Raymond McCarthy, director of summer school of alcohol studies, Rutgers University, will speak on alcoholism. Other papers to be given include a follow-up comparative study of discharge patients from the Alex G. Brown Memorial Clinic for the years 1952 and 1961, by Mr. W. E. Marshall, supervising psychologist at the clinic.

Participating will be agencies and societies working in the fields of addiction, as well as police departments, magistrates, probation services, university and education department workers in this field.

I would like to extend to those hon. members in this House interested in these problems an invitation to spend such time as they can spare at this conference. I am sure the hon. members will find it most worthwhile. I have copies of the programme for anyone interested.

I am very pleased that we have been able to arrange this conference which I hope will be the first of many, because I know that the interchange of ideas and full co-operation between all concerned in this field is most necessary. We hope too that we may better direct our efforts if we can avoid wasteful duplication of research on a subject which needs concerted and co-ordinated study. Digests of papers and complete texts will be available immediately after presentation and the full conference proceedings are to be printed in the Canadian Journal of Corrections.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Cass), a copy of which has been submitted to him.

Is the hon. Attorney-General in a position to tell the House if he is considering further action against four former mayors of Ontario municipalities which granted franchises to Northern Ontario Natural Gas and if so, what action?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I can do no better in answering this question—notice of which I have received and I again wish to thank the hon. member for this notice—than to say that as I indicated in my press release of August 22 of this past year, 1963, that the law officers of the Crown recommended to me, after reviewing new information received from The Attorney-General's Department in British Columbia that: 1) perjury charge be laid against Ralph K. Farris; 2) evidence produced at the trial of these charges be considered in conjunction with the present report and its supporting material; 3) because of the perjury charges laid and the material being before the courts, the report itself should not be made public in fairness to the accused and in light of the fact that much of the evidence in the report was obtained from witnesses who pleaded the protection of the evidence Acts and whose statements may not be admissible against them in a court of law.

All that happened yesterday, Mr. Speaker, was a committal for trial. The evidence is to be presented at the subsequent trial and at the conclusion of the trial the legal officers of the Crown can review the evidence to ascertain what steps should be taken.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question which I have submitted, sir, through your office, addressed to the hon. Attorney-General.

The question, as I submitted it through your office, took up, oh, some seven or eight lines, and the revised version which I understand went to the hon. Attorney-General has only some three lines in it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I accept your ruling in this but I wonder just how far a question can be emasculated to take, really, from it, the meat of the question and to outline the problem that I propose to address to the hon. Attorney-General.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Get to the question!

Mr. Singer: No, I think this is of some substantial importance, Mr. Speaker, because I do not think that the emasculated version really conveys the question.

Mr. Speaker: I might inform the hon. member that I am having prepared today a number of copies to be put in the mail to all the members outlining the procedure in asking questions and setting forth the rules of making up the questions. I think perhaps when they are received it will help a great deal in forming the questions and they will not have to be cut down when they reach my office.

Mr. Singer: Well I would hope, sir, that the rules will be of sufficient erudition that it will make it much more clear. But again I suggest, even though I am quite prepared to follow your ruling, the emasculated version really does not convey the question. However, in your version I will put it to the hon. Attorney-General.

Does the hon. Attorney-General intend to take any action against tourist operators who have apparently breached the regulations of the Ontario Human Rights Code?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, in addition to the apparent difficulty the hon. members of the Opposition have in determining how to ask a question without making a speech, they are not quite sure towards which department such a question should be directed. I would like to suggest to the hon. member that this question should have been and should be directed to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) as the Ontario Human Rights Commission falls within his jurisdiction.

Mr. Singer: You are the chief law enforcement officer of the Crown and have a duty to act when laws of Ontario are being flouted.

Hon. Mr. Cass: I was not able, Mr. Speaker, to get in touch with the hon. Minister of Labour subsequent to receiving the question and prior to the sitting of the House and I therefore was in touch with Dr. Hill, the chairman of the Ontario Human Rights Commission. Dr. Hill advises me that this particular statute is enforced, and has been enforced for a period of time, very satisfactorily in our province of Ontario with a minimum of court actions and a maximum of discussion and understanding and goodwill. He further advises me that the procedure which has been followed in these matters in the past, and which has worked exceedingly well, has been for complaints to be made to the commission and the commission then, usually through its own counsel, takes the necessary action.

Dr. Hill advises me that as of approximately noon this date, when I was in touch with him, that no complaint had been received by his commission with respect to this matter so far as we can determine from the question; therefore the first move in this matter would be for a complaint as envisaged by the Act to be made to the commission.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, notice of which has been duly given.

Does the hon. Minister, sir, intend to take immediate action to avoid similar occurrences in the use of propane gas heaters as in the explosion of such a heater in a partially completed house yesterday? If so, what action does he intend to take?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question.

The answer to his question is "yes", we will increase our activity on the programme which has been in operation for some time. With regard to new propane gas-fired construction heaters, we have required that these be of an approved type, that is they must have laboratory certification. The prescribed test specifications require that a safety pilot valve of a complete shut-off type be installed on the heater. This device assures the shut-off of the gas supply to the burner in the event that the pilot is extinguished. Many older heaters were in use in the field before these requirements came into effect and in order to remove any potential hazard of unburned gas accumulating to a dangerous level, we require that these unapproved heaters either be equipped with safety pilot devices or taken out of service.

Mr. Gisborn: One other question, sir. In this case would it be the fact that the law was not enforced in regard to the statement the hon. Minister has read?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I might say that these propane gas burners are a very hard thing to police. As you know, they are not permanent installations and I think our inspectors are doing everything to make sure that all these burners are removed or brought up to our standards.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Labour. The preamble has been taken out by you.

Has the hon. Minister, sir, inquired how our hockey youth is optioned to professional organizations as he intimated on March 20, 1963, during consideration of his estimates and if so, has he uncovered conditions that would warrant action by his department?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the question as posed involves two questions which are incorporated in the one sentence and the answer to the first question is "yes" and the answer to the second question is "no".

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): A good average!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: However, Mr. Speaker, it will be helpful to the House if I were to give the members some background information which may assist them in approaching the subject matter of the question.

Professional hockey commands the interest of people across Canada and throughout many sections of the United States. Rivalry between the teams in the National Hockey League is well known. There is a constant effort to maintain the calibre of players in the league at the highest possible level and for obvious reasons. To do this, the clubs may sponsor teams in various leagues throughout Canada and the United States.

One of the leagues at the highest level locally would be the Ontario Hockey Association Junior A. Next move for a player from that plateau would be to professional hockey as we know it. As a young player becomes more skilled, he may be approached by one of the teams in a minor league set-up and if he accepts the opportunity to play with such a club, he may or will continue his education during the hockey season. When a player attains the age of eighteen years, if he is continuing in hockey under the OHA, the Ontario Hockey Association, he may be offered the opportunity of signing a form C which gives a professional hockey club an option on his services if he wishes to play in a professional, or so-called professional league. This option will be respected by the other clubs in the professional leagues.

A copy of the completed C form is filed in the office of the National Hockey League in Montreal. Under the by-laws of the National Hockey League, a boy must be eighteen years of age before he can be approached to sign a C form or a contract with a professional hockey team. A player under eighteen years of age is not permitted to attend the training camp of a professional team. While a boy is playing junior hockey and below in a league under the jurisdiction of the OHA, he must continue his education, if he is required by law to go to school.

To digress, Mr. Speaker, you will remember that an article appeared recently in one of the papers distributed in Toronto, pointing out that there are a number of players in the National Hockey League, who today are continuing their education at universities. Both the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and the Ontario Hockey Association take a great and strong interest in, and are concerned with, the players who come within their jurisdiction, and if a young player has a grievance as to his treatment, this can be aired before the proper authorities who control the league. Once a young man has made up his mind that he wants to follow hockey as a professional career, he graduates into an apprenticeship system in which he is supplied with equipment and maintenance and in many instances, the opportunity to continue his education.

Now we all recognize, Mr. Speaker, the fact that professional hockey is a highly developed exhibition of skill and ability on a professional basis. It may be a career, indeed a life opportunity, for the players and at the end of that career the players may retire with a pension. I should also like to point out to the House that if we are to have organized hockey below the professional level, the teams in every league look for and need sponsors, because in most instances, they would be unable to carry on without financial assistance. I think that everyone, including hon. members of this House, will realize that to carry on organized sports today is a costly proposition. Obviously, we want sports, including hockey, to continue. Sponsorship of teams, whether by private interests or by professional clubs, enables these sports to continue. I have found nothing in the set-up which now exists in connection with hockey, which warrants the launching of an inquiry into it.

Mr. Troy: I thank the hon. Minister for this treatise.

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Agriculture, a copy of which has been submitted to him.

What action, if any, has been taken by The Ontario Department of Agriculture in obtaining a more realistic valuation for livestock lost or injured through railway transportation accidents?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for supplying me with notice of this question. We also understand that the hon. member for Kent East (Mr. Spence) had made inquiry of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture on a question similar to this. I think it is about the same thing. I welcome the opportunity to answer both, if it might be so considered.

I think the Deputy Minister informed the hon. member for Kent East that he did not have the information at hand but he made inquiry from our livestock branch and this has just been submitted to me in reply to this question today.

Up to the present time, the livestock contract used by the Canadian railways in the movement of live commercial cattle provides a maximum valuation of twenty-five dollars on calves under six months of age. Previous to the formation of the Ontario Beef Improvement Association in 1963, several requests had been forwarded to the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada and the Canadian Freight Association for an upward adjustment, particularly on calves under that six months of age limit. Now, after formation of the Ontario Beef Improvement Association, the secretary of which is Mr. Ed Starr of our livestock branch, they held several meetings and at the time of the 1963 Royal Winter Fair, representatives of the Ontario Beef Improvement Association met with members of several livestock organizations from western Canada. One of the matters discussed at this meeting was the livestock contract that was used by the Canadian railways. As a result of this meeting, it was unanimously agreed by those in attendance that the present contract used by Canadian railways in the movement of cattle was not satisfactory and it was further agreed that the following recommendations be made.

First that the class of cattle now designated as calves under six months be changed to calves under 500 pounds invoice or loaded weight; and that the agreed valuation on the above class be made on invoice value up to a maximum of $125 each, in case of injury or loss during the ordinary handling involved in the transportation of such animals.

And second, that on cattle over 500 pounds the agreed valuation be made at invoice value up to a maximum of $225.

Now it would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that these were rather realistic recommendations made by the Beef Improvement Association which is indeed handlers of commercial cattle. And when we recognize the fact that we bring from western Canada into the province of Ontario approximately 200,000 head of cattle annually—most of them being six months of age or thereabouts but the great bulk of them being under 500 pounds, live weight, as feeder cattle—we can see the enormous importance of this to the cattlemen of the province of Ontario.

The secretary of the Ontario Beef Improvement Association forwarded these recommendations to Mr. G. A. Richardson, the general secretary of the Railway Association of Canada at Montreal with copies to Mr. R. K. Watson, the chairman of the Canadian Freight Association and to Mr. C. W. Rump, secretary of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada. A reply was received from Mr. Richardson of the Railway Association of Canada under date of November 28, 1963.

And as well a letter was received from Mr. Rump, of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, advising that the Board of Transport was requesting Mr. Watson, chairman of the freight association to give this matter his utmost consideration.

On December 18, 1963, Mr. Starr, the secretary of the Ontario Beef Improvement Association, received a letter from Mr. Richardson advising that the proposed revision of the special livestock contract, as submitted by the Ontario Beef Improvement Association, had been reviewed by their subcommittee on claims and it was agreed that there would be no objection to increasing the maximum liability for cattle over 500 pounds to an amount not exceeding $225.

However, they decided that the maximum liability of $125 for calves weighing 500 pounds or less was too high. While the committee had previously agreed to increased liability to an amount not exceeding $60, they were now prepared to agree to increase this to $75.

After receiving this letter, Mr. Starr of our department, who is secretary of the Association, contacted Mr. Harvey Ackert, who is chairman of the committee on freight rates, of the Ontario Beef Improvement Association, to ask his opinion. Mr. Ackert explained that in his opinion this offer as stated in the revision would not be satisfactory, and that it was still much below the value of calves weighing near 500 pounds.

Accordingly another letter has been forwarded to Mr. Richardson, advising him of this and a letter has been received under date of January 20, 1964—just this last week—to the effect that the matter of revising the railway special livestock contract continues under discussion as they are awaiting new proposals by the Canadian National Railways.

Now it is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that where losses of calves under six months have occurred it has been the responsibility of the carrier that settlement has been made at or near the full invoice value even though the present maximum is $25. There may be isolated cases where this has not been the situation but I think, generally speaking, that an agreement has been worked out to this effect. We hope this new agreement will be finalized and that everything will be settled accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Freeman), had a bill to introduce today. There were no other bills introduced to alert him to that fact and he missed that point in the proceedings. I wonder if we could revert for the introduction of that bill?

Mr. Speaker: Do we have the unanimous consent of the House to revert to introduction of bills?

HOURS OF WORK AND VACATIONS WITH PAY ACT

Mr. E. G. Freeman (Fort William) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

RESOLUTION REGARDING DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 6, by Mr. Belanger.

Resolution: That municipalities adopting daylight saving time have a uniform date for adopting and discontinuing same throughout the whole province.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): I move, seconded by Mr. Thompson, that municipalities adopting daylight saving time have a uniform date for adopting and discontinuing same throughout the whole province.

Mr. Speaker, unlike some of the other resolutions that were mentioned yesterday, mine is, I think, self-explanatory and I am not going to take up the valuable time of this House, but I would like to make a few comments.

I could never see why this government or the government under the leadership of the former Prime Minister, could not have regulated this some time ago. As you know, the municipalities after the war were left to decide themselves whether they should adopt daylight saving time or whether they would not. At the same time, the date that they selected to have daylight saving time and to discontinue this, was left entirely in the hands of the council in each of those municipalities. This has caused quite a bit of confusion throughout the whole of the province.

It would be a very easy matter for the government to pass legislation stating that any municipality which adopts daylight saving time should start it on a certain date and discontinue it on a certain date, so as to avoid the confusion there is at the present time.

During the war every municipality was on daylight saving time and this confusion did not exist. I am not going to argue the point whether we should go back to this type of legislation that we had during the war. I think this entirely a matter for the government to decide. However, I am asking that this government should enact some legislation to provide uniformity throughout the whole of the province and I do hope that the government will take this very seriously because it has caused quite a bit of confusion throughout the province. That is all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that in 1960 Bill 61, which was introduced by me, proposed that the starting and ending times for daylight saving time be made uniform throughout the province. At that time, the problem was very acute in western Ontario with a half a dozen or more starting and ending times, resulting in considerable extra expense to individuals and business enterprises in that part of the country. It resulted also in tremendous inconvenience to those people who might live in one time zone and work in another, or whose children might go to school in another zone and at that time I had a number of very specific illustrations to point up the acuteness of the problem as it existed. I am in full accord with my hon. friend. I think that something should still be done and I would welcome a bill on this subject.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Speak to your colleague from London.

Mr. White: I question if the problem is quite as bad now as it was then, because the force of public opinion and the publicity given to the problem a few years ago, has resulted in some uniformity. Time is not local, of course, any more than pounds or gallons are local. It is one of those measures arbitrarily fixed by mankind and uniformity is an essential ingredient. For that reason, I think it is inappropriate to leave these starting and ending times to the municipal councils, notwithstanding my general conviction that things should be left at the municipal level wherever possible. I think perhaps some of the opposition that came when the bill was introduced was because of the mistaken impression that it would make daylight saving time compulsory. That was not the intention of the bill and I am sure my hon. friend has not that intention in this resolution. Daylight saving time would not be compulsory. It would be entirely voluntary. It would simply mean that the municipalities which found it convenient for their citizens would start on a particular date and end on a particular date.

The American Railroad Association, funnily enough, is the group in the United States that decides on a starting date. They take the lead in the matter, because of course it is essential to their train schedules right across the continent and those states and municipalities in the U.S. and those provinces in Canada which have this uniformity, follow the lead of the American Railroad Association. Presumably we would do likewise so as to be in step with the rest of the continent. So in conclusion, sir, may I say that I continue to believe as I did then that uniformity in this respect will be a very good thing, although I am not as personally concerned because the matter has been mitigated in western Ontario since the bill was introduced.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how one would make up his mind to cast a vote in regard to this resolution. I do not think it really hits the main issue in regard to this problem. I feel that the real issue that should be dealt with is as to whether or not we should have daylight saving in the province or not. One can hardly favour permissive legislation that allows something to take place in one municipality and next vote on that permissive legislation then becoming uniform across the province. I think that there is a lot of merit in uniformity, once we decide on an over-all basis whether or not we should have daylight saving or we should be required to observe the regular time. Certainly I have had no problem of this nature brought to my attention as a member. I have not seen any great uprising as to confusion.

I know that in individual cases and for particular industries, particularly railroad people, there can be confusion. But certainly we should at least put out some feelers and ask the municipalities what they really think about it and maybe give some thought to a survey on just what do we want. Is it good to have confusion as to the times, or should we remove the permissive legislation, and bring in legislation that would provide mandatory daylight saving across the province? I think we need some study and should get some ideas in regard to this problem.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I was interested to note that this particular motion was moved by an hon. member from an area in which daylight saving time is not in force and where presumably it is not wished, else under the powers already contained in legislation the municipality concerned could very easily satisfy the wishes of its inhabitants by providing for daylight saving time.

In my short experience as Minister of Municipal Affairs I found, Mr. Speaker, that it was, generally speaking, the desire of this House, all sides of this House representing the people of Ontario, that all municipal autonomy should not be removed from the local councils and the people elected at the closest level to the voter, and that this was one matter which throughout Ontario was being dealt with according to the wishes of the inhabitants of the areas concerned.

True, as the hon. member for London South has said, Mr. Speaker, in various areas of the province there has been controversy, there has been difficulty. We do know that the present addiction to radio and television programmes on the part of our people—and we share in that I presume, Mr. Speaker—indicates that we are bound to a certain extent to the American Railway Association rules referred to by my hon. colleague from London South. I would not think, Mr. Speaker, from my experience both as a resident of rural Ontario, as a former occupant of the ministry of municipal affairs, or in my present position, that there was any unanimity in feeling throughout the province with respect to this.

There is a great deal of merit in what has been said by the hon. member for Wentworth East, Mr. Speaker. There is one problem that concerns the people in my rural part of Ontario with respect to this, Mr. Speaker, and one which I think should be much more carefully looked at before any action such as is contemplated by this motion should be taken, and I think all of us in rural Ontario are aware of it. That is the confusion which exists now and would continue to exist even if such a motion resulted in legislation, where all of the particular programmes on the air, all the particular matters such as schools and others, are not operating on the same schedule.

Now I feel, Mr. Speaker, very strongly, that this first of all is a matter that can be dealt with at the local level and should be dealt with there. I feel that the people in Windsor should not be forced to accept daylight saving time over any specific period of the year unless they themselves wish it. I feel further that there should be, as the hon. member for Wentworth East said, a much greater study in depth of this matter before such a motion as is before the House at the moment should be translated into legislation.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in respect to this practice of moving the adjournment of the debate on resolutions; that, of course, automatically bars that particular member from having another resolution during the session. Could there not be some way devised—I am not arguing the right or the wrong of this in this particular case—but could there not be some way devised now that we are dealing with these resolutions in the early part of the session, for the resolution to be considered to have been dealt with and the member, if he so desired, permitted to place another resolution on the order paper in his name? It seems to me that it is hardly fair to bar him, if that is the situation, from repeating with another resolution if he so desires.

Mr. Speaker: I am informed that the member's motion will become an order of the day on the order paper, and then he introduces a new notice of motion.

RESOLUTION REGARDING ELECTORAL PROCESSES

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 5 by Mr. A. E. Thompson.

RESOLUTION: That a select committee of the House be immediately established to inquire into and report upon the reform of our electoral processes, this enquiry to result in recommendations for legislation concerning: electoral expenses of parties and candidates; public or governmental participation in election costs; declaration of total expenditures and limitations thereon; establishing a system of permanent registration of voters; modernization of electoral machinery; methods of marking ballots; voting age.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. V. M. Singer, resolution No. 5 standing in my name which has just been read.

I appreciate the opportunity to discuss this resolution before the House because I would suggest that all the hon. members of this House are imbued with a deep-rooted conviction to uphold the fundamental tenets of our democratic life. I think that any of us would be alarmed if anyone was to suggest that our method of election was in fact an abuse of these principles. I ask for a select committee to examine the methods of elections because I, in fact, believe that it is an abuse. It is an abuse of democratic principles because we have not accustomed ourselves to living in a modern technological industrial society. We are conducting elections as if they were in the personal face-to-face relations such as would have taken place in some Greek forum in ancient days, and our apparatus seems to be geared for that type of election.

We believe in freedom of speech and association. We believe that it is essential that political parties and candidates should have equal opportunity to present their views in order that the electorate can come to an intelligent choice between the different platforms of the different parties. And yet I suggest, sir, in all honesty, when we in this House think of the election campaigns can we say that every party and every candidate has an equal opportunity to present his views? The methods of communication in a modern society are open only to those parties which can pay the high cost of television, of radio, and of newspaper advertising.

Let us be blunt and honest about this. It takes money to present our political views, whether as a party or as an individual. I think all of us having come through an election realize just how much money it does take to present our views to our electorate. And I suggest that the opportunity to run for election in this province is really based on having money in order to pay for a campaign.

This brings me to another point. Let me suggest that in order to achieve the financing of a party or of a candidate, there is an obvious question to be raised. Does the party or the individual, who receives funds from big or small business, from international or local unions, does he or the party have an indirect obligation to that individual or organization who supplies him with the money?

Furthermore, may I suggest, that if these finances are not made public, is there not a further temptation to assume that some obligation has been made between the receiver and the donor? Now, I am sure, everyone in this House will vigorously deny that those who pay the pipers of our respective parties do in fact call our political tunes. And in fact I sincerely believe that in most cases they do not but I would suggest that in British justice, it is not sufficient that justice is carried out but it is important that justice should also appear to have been carried out. That same principle should be carried into our election campaigns.

If we had a law with teeth to disclose election funds, then all responsible parties and all responsible donors would be far happier. And I think that we, as candidates, who have come through successfully would feel much happier. The federal government has such a proposal and my resolution is asking for a select committee to examine our own procedures in this connection. I feel sure that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is concerned in ensuring that democracy does truly function in our province, and that he is giving some consideration to examining the methods of elections.

Specifically what I am suggesting is that we should examine whether our elections should be wide open and I do not think there is any secret that right now, as of today, our elections in this province are wide open. I look for example at the Brantford Sun in which it has a headline, "No Limits," and then it goes into a statement from a Mr. Jack Wratten, Senior, who is the Brantford returning officer in which he says that:

The Ontario Election Act specifically allows election advertising by any medium up to and including election day.

And he goes into the whole procedure of elections in Ontario, and suggests that there is no limit.

Mr. Speaker, I am proposing nothing novel in suggesting that perhaps we should have a limit—and I am speaking now of a legal limit on election expenses. In Britain the first limits on expenditures were imposed in 1883, and limits were continually tightened in 1918, in 1928, and in 1948. Let me say that the question may cross various members' minds: So what, even if you do have a maximum limit of expenditures for candidates surely there are ways that you can get around this? And I would say that in Britain they have examined this question and they have ensured that people cannot get around the maximum. It is stated there that a candidate has to account for all the funds which were paid in connection with his campaign. If some organization other than the candidate has some kind of an operation serving tea and cookies in a hotel, or something like this, then the candidate himself is accountable for the cost of this operation.

There is another suggestion that no expenditure can be made which is indirectly helping the candidate unless it has been authorized by the candidate. Even if there are candidates who can conceive some way to slip around the law—and I suggest this is hard from looking at the situation in Britain—surely it is better that we have such a law acting as a deterrent to stop this wide-open expenditure of election expenses, than just to leave the field wide open for the wealthy man to be free to spend all he can in order to get elected.

The principle of the government paying the costs of an election is another question. I would say that to some extent this principle is already clearly established. For example, the federal government is footing a bill of $12 million every time we have an election. It is a bill for organizing and running the voting machinery. But I feel that there should be considerable discussion before we would move to the point of suggesting that the government would pay the cost of candidates' campaign expenses. On the one side there will be those who will say that political parties and candidates should have all the flexibility and spontaneity of a voluntary organization in a free society. They would feel that ideas and main grouping of citizens around ideas in a democracy should be given the greatest flexibility. They would suggest that if a government sets up criteria before recognizing a group or political organization—and I say if the government is going to grant funds to candidates or to a party—in a sense the government is then giving the stamp of authority that this is a political organization. There are those who would feel nervous at such a rigidity taking place in a democracy where we should have the fullest opportunity for people to stand up, express ideas and hope they can get others rallying around to have a political party.

I think there is another aspect to those arguing that the government should not help in candidates' elections. It is that from the point of view of the individual who pays to help a certain political party, he may feel that if the government takes over the cost of elections, no longer does he have a choice of being able to participate, not only with his vote but also with his money, in helping one's party to get into power. When the government takes over all the costs, the government then is using his money not only to pay for his party, but is also paying for parties which may be repugnant to him.

May I say that this is an argument which is raised by many in Britain. They are concerned about the government moving into the area of paying for the expenses of candidates. They feel that in having a maximum imposed for election expenses that this maximum—because it is not too high—permits anyone who feels inclined to get a group behind him and to run in an election. They do not want the rigid hand of government financing election campaigns.

But I would say there is the other point of view. Elections today are costing so much money that it is almost prohibitive for individuals to move freely into the political arena. For this reason, perhaps, the government should be helping in connection with the election costs for the individual candidates.

There have been various proposals with respect to this. We know there is a bill in Quebec, for example, suggesting that the candidate will get 25 cents for each voter provided that 60 per cent of the ridings are filled with candidates of his party. We also know that the federal government itself is considering enacting legislation to pay the expenses of candidates, if they get 20 per cent of the votes.

I would hope, at least in a select committee, that we would look at the main areas of expenditure in elections, and these of course are TV, radio and newspaper advertising. We see, for example, today that the CBC already has apportioned free time for the various political parties, both between and during elections. I think that we should be looking in our select committee at the possibility of not only looking at the CBC providing free time, but of all radio and television outlets providing facilities which should be available free to all parties during an election.

I say this for these reasons. The first reason I have been emphasizing is that in our society it is unfortunate that the day is past of the Greek forum when one can speak personally face to face with the electorate. The means by which we communicate with people on political matters effectively is through the mass communications. I suggest that the air belongs to the public and I think that during political elections we should certainly question any one party having a monopolistic control over the airwaves because they have more money to buy time on television or radio than another party.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as you will have observed in my discussion, I have presented both sides of the question and I have done this purposely because I do not think that the approach to this very important discussion is going to be presenting a bill at this time. I think it is something that is going to take far more consideration than we are going to be able to manage in the short time that we are allowed for discussing resolutions. I have suggested a select committee should be set up to discuss this.

For example, the discussion around reform in elections in Britain was not done overnight. Mr. Ede, the Home Secretary, in introducing a reform in 1948 in the British House, emphasized that the reform taking place was part of a long line of election reform that dated back to the Reform Bill of 1832. But we know that we have to start examining our procedure in order to have reform. Throughout every democracy there is the question of providing the best means and methods so that the electorate can make an intelligent choice—so that men, no matter what their wealth, can run for public office.

I was interested that in May, 1962, the late President Kennedy, a man of not inconsiderable means, suggested that surely it was time the federal government should move into the picture in connection with the cost of presidential elections in the United States. Throughout the free world there is discussion about ensuring that there is a freedom of men to express their points of view and that there is freedom of men to have the opportunity to run for public office. Because of this, there is an examination of the mass means of communication and of the limitation on people to express their points of view to the public.

In my resolution I cite other aspects which I would like to be considered by this select committee, and if I may, I will turn to my resolution. I have discussed the electoral expenses of parties and candidates; the public or governmental participation in election costs; and the declaration of total expenditures and limitations thereon.

I would re-emphasize from the point of view of expenditures during an election, that it seems to me there is a feeling on the part of the public that there is utter hypocrisy concerning the declared expenditures of candidates in the provincial arena; that really the declared expenses for campaigns are not the true costs. Let us get some open air into this whole situation so that none of us needs feel ashamed, or suffer this smear of something underhand being done, when we run for public office. Let us make the election expenses public and above-board to the people of this province.

May I come to the question of establishing a system of permanent registration of voters. I think we all know that immediately we call an election there is much machinery to put into motion. Getting the enumerators organized to go around the various streets; and the resultant delay before we can really get down to knowing who the voters are in our various ridings. There there is the cost attached to people going around and getting the list of voters.

The federal government is considering a permanent registration of voters and surely we, in co-operation with the federal government, might set up a basis for having a permanent registration of voters. This will do two things. We can streamline the elections—cut down on the time taken—and we can make the whole election procedure more effective. We can cut down on costs as well because of the cost of enumerators collecting the names of new voters.

On the modernization of the electoral machinery, there has been much written, and I could quote from a number of papers here. There is the suggestion that the party in office controls the polling station, and we know that when the party in office suggests who the poll clerks and the DROs will be they really do have a strong influence over the polling station. This whole area should be examined and I am sure that people from all sides would contribute in connection with reforming and modernizing our electoral machinery.

The methods of marking ballots: I speak personally of my own riding. Although many people may vote for or against me personally, when they go into the polling booth they are also interested in knowing whether I am a Progressive-Conservative, a Liberal, a New Democrat and so on. Mr. Speaker, there are people in this country now who are used to a system where the party is identified with the candidates. I would suggest that in view of the fact that we stand not only as individuals, but also as party members, surely, if it helps the voters to identify which person or party he wants to vote for, there should be consideration to putting not only the individual's name but also his party's name on the ballot.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Russell): There's some doubt over there concerning what party you belong to.

Mr. Thompson: Pardon?

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: I thought there was some doubt over there—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): If you want to come over we will try our best to tell you about it.

Mr. Thompson: I do not think there is any question in any of our minds about what we are speaking today—and yesterday—we are speaking for reform.

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That is an umbrella that is big enough to cover even the hon. member for St. George (Mr. A. F. Lawrence).

Mr. Thompson: There is also the question of voting age. This again is nothing that is particularly novel. The voting age, as we know, has been discussed by the federal government. We know that in two provinces already the voting age is 18, and in two other provinces it commences at 19. Surely it is time that we consider that the people of 18 can assume responsibility.

I do not want to go into all the discussion, which certainly we could have in a select committee, about young men of 18 being ready to fight and die for the country, but surely they should be allowed to vote for their country. I do not want to go into those discussions here but I simply say that it seems to me that we should have an examination of our age limit for voting.

I have been talking of the opportunity which I think this House should have of ensuring that it is going to have democracy working at its best, of ensuring that we are going to look at our outdated and antiquated methods of election campaigning, ensuring through a select committee from all parties, sir, that we are going to use our experience and our ability to bring forward modern, up-to-date reforms in our elections. Only then do I feel that we can hold our heads high, having given every voter the opportunity to make an intelligent choice in elections.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): On behalf of the New Democratic Party group in the House, I would like to say that we support the idea of appointing a select committee to inquire into our election law, particularly The Election Act.

One has been a little confused in the last two days, or perhaps kept in suspense, as to what is likely to happen to these private members' motions. Yesterday we had one go to a vote; today we had one called and the debate was adjourned, which is more in keeping with what some of us had become accustomed to in the past. I take it that this matter is determined according to certain exigencies that may exist in the mind of the hon. Prime Minister. If he wants to ensure that a motion on a certain subject may not be brought in again in this House, he will bring the existing motion to a vote; if he—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): That is not so. Any time I can put you two together, that's when we will have a vote.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I did not hear what the hon. Prime Minister said but if he cares to say it again—

An hon. member: Every time you put the two groups together—

Mr. Bryden: Oh, well, that certainly is a childish proposition, Mr. Speaker, every time you could put us together! Sometimes the hon. member should get on the side of common sense too, and let us have some of these things unanimous.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the member now to stick to the motion before the House.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I was just expressing my sense of suspense as to what was going to happen to this motion, Mr. Speaker—whether it will come to a vote.

I can assure the hon. Prime Minister that we will stand up and vote in favour of the motion if it does come to a vote, as I am sure the hon. gentlemen to my right will do. It may be that he proposes to adjourn the debate but I would suggest to him a solution which I think might be better than either of those, and that is that he should accept the principle of the motion and bring in one of his own that would accomplish the same purpose.

Surely it is obvious to everyone that we are operating in this province under an Election Act that is completely antiquated. There have not been any significant changes in it, to my knowledge, for at least a generation. It reflects concepts from the past, and some of them, I may say, could be described as pork barrel concepts, that have no place in a modern society.

I would take as an example the question of returning officers. Now, I would say in any modern jurisdiction we should have a system of permanent returning officers as they do in federal elections. These returning officers should be independent, and they should have no association with any political party that they may have had in the past. They should be expected to remove themselves from that association when they are appointed as returning officers. That surely is just in accord with ordinary concepts of fairness.

The conduct of an election should be undertaken not only impartially, but with every appearance of impartiality. A returning officer in a sense is a judicial officer, he is supposed to conduct the election in a way that is fair to everyone. The system we have now produces some incredible situations. For example, the returning officers are not formally appointed until after the election is called.

In one election campaign, I was in the rather ridiculous position where the election had been called and under the law I was required to produce a list of nominations for enumerators forthwith, I think the Act says. And a lawyer friend of mine says forthwith means immediately or even sooner, and for two days I could not find out who the returning officer was. I had no one to whom to submit my list. I could not find anyone who would accept it. I have no doubt my opponent on the government side had more information than I had, but that in itself is surely childish nonsense in this day and age.

I may say that in that same campaign, it was the election of 1955, during the course of the election a letter was sent by mail to all voters in the constituency urging the voters to vote for the candidate who was the Progressive-Conservative candidate at that time; the sitting member—and he continued to be the sitting member after that particular election, although not after any subsequent one—urging all voters to vote for this one candidate, the Conservative candidate. This letter was signed by the president of the Progressive-Conservative men's club in the constituency and the secretary of the Progressive-Conservative women's club in the constituency.

Now no doubt up to this point one would ask what is wrong with that. Well, I will tell you what is wrong with it. It happened that the gentleman who signed himself as the president of the Progressive-Conservative men's club also was the returning officer in the constituency and the lady who signed herself as the secretary of the Progressive-Conservative women's association was the returning officer's clerk. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, how either I or any of the other candidates on the outside could reasonably be expected to believe that the election was being conducted in an impartial manner when the returning officer and the returning officer's clerk during the course of the campaign publicly declared themselves in favour of one candidate to the exclusion of the others.

That sort of thing, in my opinion, should not happen. I may say that I did not make any reference to that matter at the time, either during the campaign or afterwards. I did not want anybody to think that I was trying to make excuses for losing the election. I am quite sure that in that 1955 campaign I would have been beaten whether the letter was sent out or not and I did not then, and I do not now, put it forward as an excuse. But I do call attention to it as a practice that is possible under our present legislation and surely should not be possible under any modern electoral law.

An hon. member: What do they do in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Bryden: I have no up-to-date information. I merely suggest again that we should have permanent returning officers as they do in federal elections so that we can avoid this nonsense of not knowing what the polling subdivisions are, not having anyone to whom to submit lists of enumerators, if that system should be continued. Let us have people working on this job all the time.

I would like to make one further comment on that point, Mr. Speaker. I would not like anything I have said to be construed as in any sense criticism of the lady who was returning officer in my constituency in the most recent election, although she has for many years been well known as a Progressive-Conservative and has contributed mightily to the organization of the Progressive-Conservative Party in that constituency. I believe that she did a first-rate job in conducting the election this time, I may say, in contrast to some other experiences I have had. She did a first-rate job and I would be happy to see her as a permanent returning officer. Of course, it would be expected if she or anyone else became a permanent returning officer, they would sever any connection they have had in the past.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): The hon. member is giving her the kiss of death.

Mr. MacDonald: It just shows how vindictive the hon. Minister can be.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I do not see why that should be. I think that everybody thought she did a good job and I would certainly hate to think that by complimenting the lady I do her any harm. I just think she did a good job in carrying out the provisions of the law.

Now one phase of this resolution which puzzles me, Mr. Speaker, is the implication in it, or the apparent attempt in it, to pre-determine the results of the select committee's inquiry. I am in favour of having a select committee, but the resolution goes on to say "this inquiry to result in recommendations for legislation concerning" certain matters that are itemized. Perhaps the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution did not intend to convey the meaning that I got out of this, but this seems to me to indicate that he would require the committee to come in with recommendations for legislation on certain subjects.

Mr. Thompson: For or against—

Mr. Bryden: The hon. gentleman says that what he had in mind was that they make recommendations for or against, which puts a somewhat different complexion on it. Just so there will not be any misunderstanding as far as this party is concerned, however, when I say we support the principle of a select committee, I would like to deal with just one or two of the items mentioned there so that our position will be clear as to what stand we take on the specific items.

The first three items mentioned relate to expenses in one form or another, the declaration of expenses, the control of expenditures, limitations on them and so on. I have no hesitation in saying that this party continues as it has always done to support legislation and advocate legislation to require full publicity of all election contributions and expenditures and to place reasonable limitations on such contributions.

In fact, every year since I have been in this House, I have brought in a bill to amend The Election Act to provide for legislation on that very point and I think that I will probably bring this bill in again this year. I have given notice of it and I have every intention to proceed with it. I think that this is probably the most important subject in the whole field of electoral reform. Our present situation of some parties spending hundreds of thousands and even millions of dollars in election campaigns is making a mockery of the democratic process.

The objective no longer appears to be to present programmes to the public for their consideration, but to create something that is now described as a public image. One does that through various manipulative devices which have been perfected, or at any rate in which people at a street called Madison Avenue in New York, have developed a certain expertise. We are handing over our election campaigns to a bunch of advertising men, to manipulators of public opinion, to sellers of soap. This, I think, is a most serious matter and something should be done to bring parties back to a more realistic appreciation of their responsibility to present programmes to the people so that people can make reasonable choices on the basis of reasonable propositions put before them.

The hon. Prime Minister indicated a little earlier that he is always looking for an opportunity to throw these two parties over here together. Well, I might mention to him that when these two parties vote together—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I did not say that.

Mr. Bryden: Well, that he wanted to see—whatever his motive is, if he wants to quibble about my words, I do not care, but the import, I take it, is the same. But I would remind him that when the two parties here vote together they represent more voters, as far as the last election is concerned, than his party. Therefore, they are speaking for a formidable body of opinion. I think that the hon. Prime Minister should give serious consideration to that opinion.

I may say that in this matter of election expenditures, sir, the opinion extends even into areas where he would normally look for support. Recently several newspapers have commented on the question of electoral expenses; one of them, the Toronto Daily Star—I am not suggesting that that is normally an area of support for the hon. Prime Minister, although it was in the last election—had an editorial on September 28, 1963, entitled: In the Wake of the Bagman.

A bagman, I may say, is a phrase that was somewhat unfamiliar to me because we do not have this particular dignitary in our party or anything resembling him, but I know that after I saw the description of the gentleman in the editorial, he is a functionary with which the Conservative Party is very familiar. I do not know if they call him a bagman or not, but I know they have some fellows going around who certainly have to carry very big bags with them and are undoubtedly aiming at getting them well filled up.

However, I will not go into the Toronto Daily Star's editorial in detail, I will refer instead to a newspaper which has a more consistent record of support of the Conservative Party and that is the Toronto Globe and Mail. On September 30 of 1963—also during the election campaign—the Toronto Globe and Mail had an editorial headed: Election Expenditures. It made, I think, some sensible observations in that editorial. It said, for example:

The whole matter of election expenses remains a serious question. In an ideal democracy all candidates should have an equal opportunity to put their ideas before the electorate. And this obviously does not happen when one candidate or party can afford to pay for wide publicity while another cannot. In present circumstances, established major parties have financial resources that are roughly equal but new parties have difficulty in making themselves heard.

Mr. Singer: It is awfully rough.

Mr. Bryden: With regard to some of the comments from the hon. gentleman to my right, I hear them complaining greatly on the question of the availability of the material that the bagman collects at the provincial level, but I have heard them say very little about it at the federal level. It may have something to do with the success of the bagman at two different levels. To carry on with the Globe and Mail editorial:

It is true also that the existing major parties draw most of their financial backing from a relatively small section of the community, the business interests, and may become consciously or unconsciously the servants of those interests. This is a particularly doubtful arrangement when so much of our business life is controlled from abroad.

Premier Jean Lesage is attempting to solve the problem in Quebec with legislation severely restricting the amount that candidates and parties can spend and then offering to pay a proportion of this expenditure out of government funds for candidates obtaining a minimum of 20 per cent of the votes cast.

This is an experiment which Ottawa and the other provinces should watch with interest. But there may be simpler ways of tackling the problem. One popular suggestion is that the party should be required to make full disclosure of all monies received. And this might have the effect of cutting off lavish or undesirable subsidies. Another proposal is that corporate contributions should be forbidden and the parties made to rely on individuals for support. This might have the desirable result of compelling the parties to keep their constituency organizations alive and contributing funds between elections. Any scheme offering hope of making elections fairer by forcing politicians away from the Madison Avenue style of campaigning—with which our government leader opposite is so familiar—that is my interjection, Mr. Speaker, not in the Globe and Mail editorial:

—with the Madison Avenue style of campaigning and back to personal confrontation with the voters is worth careful consideration. It is time perhaps for an impartial inquiry into election spending to see if any of the suggested reforms are practical.

Mr. Speaker, I read that editorial at some length because I think it has a lot to contribute to the particular subject under discussion at this time and because it comes from an organ which certainly represents a Conservative viewpoint in this community. And even if I, or the hon. member for Dovercourt, Mr. Speaker, cannot persuade the government opposite, perhaps the Toronto Globe and Mail could persuade them that this is an urgent subject, that they can no longer adopt the smug attitude they have adopted in the past of spending mountains of money in elections and flatly refusing to do any accounting to the public at all. I think that the Conservative Party, as indeed all parties in this Legislature, should be prepared to state to the public through audited statements exactly where they got their money and what they did with it.

Our party has always been prepared to do that and we are prepared to do it now even in the absence of legislation. I had hoped that the Liberals, in order to give some real substance to the campaign that we are now engaged in on this matter, would have been prepared to do the same with regard to their contributions and expenditures in the last election campaign, that is, the contributions received by and expenditures made by their central party organization. I judge that they are not prepared to do it. But I think all parties should be prepared to do it and I certainly think that as far as future elections are concerned, they should be required to do it by law.

I also think, as I have proposed in bills before this House before, that there should be a reasonable limitation on election expenditures. I do not personally attach overwhelming importance to the amount of money spent on elections. In the last election campaign in my constituency about $3,500 was spent on my behalf and, in the case of my opponent, the sum spent on his behalf has been varyingly estimated as somewhat more than $30,000 up to $50,000. I take the $30,000 figure as the dead minimum because that is what one of his own representatives said in answer to a question by the Toronto Telegram. He said that you could put it down for $30,000 anyway. I have heard that it is substantially more than $30,000. So that I do not—

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Give or take a few thousand.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, give or take a few thousand. I do not say that large expenditures necessarily result in the election of a candidate, but certainly they frequently put other candidates at a very severe disadvantage.

Now then, there is also in this resolution reference to the proposition or the possibility of the government or the public purse paying some or all of the election expenses of candidates; and I take it, possibly also of parties in an election campaign. I would like to say on behalf of this group here that we are opposed to that sort of proposal. It seems that it is being advanced in the main in various parts of Canada by spokesmen for the Liberal Party. The only conclusion that I can arrive at is that the Liberal Party day by day feels more and more guilty about the undisclosed sources of its campaign funds, feels more and more apprehensive that some day it might have to reveal the sources of those funds and it is not too anxious to do so.

Instead of getting out and scratching for the money in areas where they would be quite happy to have the public know all about it, they apparently would rather raid the public treasury. I think this is a bad principle, I think it is important that parties should have to disclose the sources of their funds and that there should be limits on their expenditures. Within those limitations I think it is important in a democracy that they should have to go to the people and ask for their money and not rely on the public treasury to finance everything. I think it keeps them more closely in touch with the people and much more responsive to their needs and wishes.

Also I would particularly take objection to the specific proposals that Liberals in other jurisdictions have made on this point. In the province of Quebec, for example, it is now provided by law, I believe, that the public treasury will contribute to the campaign expenditures of all candidates who get at least 20 per cent of the votes—I do not know if it is of the total vote or of the votes of the winning candidate in the election, but I do not care which it is. I think a similar proposal is now being put forward by the Liberals in Ottawa.

It surely is most unfair that the public should be asked to contribute to the campaign costs of some candidates but not all of them. If a candidate comes forward and is nominated by his fellow citizens and runs for election and does not get the requisite 20 per cent, he will be placed in the unfair position that he will be contributing to the campaigns of his opponents through his taxes but will have to foot the entire bill of his own campaign out of his own pocket. That, I think, is unfair and should not be countenanced by any legislative assembly.

But there is a much more serious objection to that limitation that I would like to put forward and that is it would tend to perpetuate in office, or in operation, parties that may have lost contact with the people. It protects them from challenges from new candidates and new parties. I think that one of the best ways of keeping any human being, or any group of human beings, on their toes is the knowledge that they can always be challenged by the other people who have perhaps more up-to-date ideas than they have.

As a matter of fact, in the province of British Columbia in the last election, if this 20 per cent limitation had been applied, the Liberal Party would not have qualified for a handout from the public treasury to finance its election campaign. I do not think that if such a law had been in effect the Liberal Party should have been discriminated against, as compared with other parties. I do not think, if there is to be such a law, that there should be any limitation at all, but I would repeat my original proposition, Mr. Speaker, that political parties should not look to the public treasury at all as a means of financing their election campaigns.

An hon. member: What did Mr. David Lewis say in Ottawa?

Mr. Bryden: They should be voluntary organizations responsible to and responsive to their own supporters. I think we should in our legislation do everything possible to encourage that sort of democratic party structure and there is nothing better than making them go to the rank-and-file voter to ask for a few dollars to help keep the party alive. Nothing is better to keep them in touch with the people, and I speak from experience, I have done a great deal of this in my lifetime. I have gone to many, many people asking them for $5 for a membership fee in our party, giving them full voting rights within the party, equal to everyone else, so that the party could stay in business. As a result of that method of financing I could tell hon. members that we have raised very much less money than other parties but at least I believe that we have kept in touch with the people who support us and vote for us and the programme that we put forward in this House or in election campaigns is a programme that they, through their delegates to conventions, have drawn up and which they support and which they are prepared to finance with whatever amount of money they can afford.

We are proud to have those people financing our party, but I must say that some of them get discouraged. I am a little harder to discourage, I suppose, because I have been through the wars so many times. They get discouraged sometimes when they see the mountains of money that the Tory Party can pour into an election campaign for the purpose of befuddling the issues, of creating confusion, of creating what is so euphemistically described as a desirable public image, whether or not it has any relation to reality. That is the sort of thing that destroys democracy, that makes people feel that it is hopeless to participate in the democratic process because how can they stand up against these great avalanches of wealth?

I think it is time the Tory Party came out from its hiding place and openly declared where it got its money from; I do not care whether it came from corporations, trade unions, rich individuals or poor individuals. I think all of them have a perfect right to contribute to political parties of their choice, but I think a party that receives money should be prepared to state openly who it got the money from and how much it got from each contributor, at any rate from any contributor who makes a contribution of more than a few dollars. To itemize all the very small ones might not be practicable, but certainly contributions of more than $50 or $100 ought to be itemized. Then the public can decide whether the party is unduly influenced by the contributors. Let the public know where the money comes from and then let it make its decision as to whether or not there is undue influence on the party accepting the contribution.

I believe that the idea of a review of our entire election machinery and election law is in order, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that the question of expenses is particularly important and one that we could very well proceed with even at this session while inquiries are being made into other phases of The Election Act.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, in joining in the debate on this resolution I want to commend both my hon. colleague, the hon. member for Dovercourt, for his comments in connection with the motion which he brought forward, and the hon. member for Woodbine in the remarks he has made. I think there is abundant common sense in what they have both said and I think the things that both these hon. gentlemen have been talking about are matters that cry for government action—the sooner the better.

I did want to set the hon. member for Woodbine straight just on one point which he made. I have before me a copy of Hansard of the House of Commons, dated November 26, 1962, and it would seem that a gentleman there named Mr. David Lewis, who was then a federal member, does not quite share all of the views of the hon. member for Woodbine.

Mr. Bryden: That is often the case.

Mr. Singer: The hon. member for Woodbine was stating that in his opinion government contributions to party expenses should not be made. The resolution moved by Mr. David Lewis on that particular day as reported in Hansard states:

That in the opinion of this House that consideration be given to the advisability of introducing a measure providing (a) that specified expenditures in respect of television, radio, travel within his constituency, printing, mailing of some of the literature about himself and his or his party's programme incurred by or on behalf of the candidate representing a federal party in a federal election be paid out of the general revenues of Canada.

Now that would indicate to me that Mr. Lewis and the hon. member for Woodbine should get together in their thinking and perhaps express the same view.

Mr. Bryden: I thought the hon. member often said that this party has no difference of opinion.

Mr. Speaker, if I may make one point.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the member has the floor.

Mr. Singer: I thought it would be of interest to the House, Mr. Speaker, that we set the record straight. It was just for the record. That was the only purpose I had in quoting that section from the federal Hansard.

Now, Mr. Speaker, insofar as this resolution of ours is concerned, I think that we must recognize, as the other hon. gentleman has said, that there is an awful lot of sham and fakery surrounding the present provisions in our election statutes. I do not know who the gentleman was who drafted the original section in the statute concerning election expense returns for the province of Ontario, but I am certain that he must have enjoyed drafting the section that is as vague as it could possibly be. It really means nothing very much to anybody and can be lived up to without really disclosing anything at all.

I suggest that if the government is at all serious about having proper disclosures made of expenditures, that it could take a look at the provisions in the federal election Act, which are much more strictly worded. The federal election Act provides forms that must be filled out, it sets out details and that sort of thing. If there is any real desire on the government's part to make sure that expenditures are clearly and openly revealed, this is the sort of legislation that could and should be enacted.

I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, in this day and age when we have articles such as the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) was complaining about the other day in so far as personal reference was made to him, that when these articles are written, they certainly indicate that in the minds of certain publishers and certain writers there is some odium attached to politics and politicians.

The heading of that article and the whole tenor of the article and the research apparently undertaken by the writers who wrote it indicate that politics and politicians and people involved in these pursuits are something less than nice people and that many people in this province seem to believe that. I think one of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, that this is apparently true is that we do so many things in a roundabout way. We seem less than eager and less than anxious to make full and open disclosures about so many important factors. Surely there is some real importance in allowing the public to know how much is spent on election campaigns and where the money comes from and how people paid, and that sort of thing.

My hon. friend from Dovercourt and the hon. member for Woodbine have spoken about this and I do not think really there is anything more need be said on this subject. If the government is concerned about this at all it will take the steps indicated in this resolution, or better still as was said, will bring in a bill doing this thing and doing it properly.

Other jurisdictions, Mr. Speaker, have embarked upon inquiries. Quebec has been mentioned. The changes in the election laws there were inspired by the Liberal Party in Quebec. Resolutions that were adopted at their annual congress in 1961 led to the sort of inquiry that produced elaborate reports from such people as Harold M. Angell of McGill University, who went into this whole subject in a most thorough manner, prepared a most exhaustive 100-page report, analyzing what other jurisdictions had done, making suggestions as to what Quebec could and should do.

Surely we have, I know we have Mr. Speaker, equal intelligence in the province of Ontario. This sort of study could and should be done by this Legislature, by a select committee, so that we will be able to present to the people of Ontario reasonable, logical, fair and equitable election laws.

Not only must justice be done but it must appear to be done. It does not appear to be done under the present state of our election laws. I do not think there is any doubt about this at all.

Now, Mr. Angell in his report—Professor Angell, I suppose he is—said among other things, there should be a limit on expenditure over a certain maximum amount. Candidate's total maximum amount should include any sum for valuable service spent or performed on his behalf. I think this is important too.

One of the parties in this province, as you know, Mr. Speaker, receives, as they have a right to—certainly it is their privilege—the benefit of research of certain trade unions. They receive as a benefit, the services unpaid by them, in any event, of union organizers. These are benefits that enable this party to get additional workers and I do not complain about this at all, but this is a part of somebody's expenditure in an election campaign. The law should be all, or sufficiently all-embracing to indicate that all of those things are election expenses. We should be prepared to say that they are and we should be proud to say that they are.

Total permissible expenditures and limitations on propaganda—I think it would require no great feat of imagination to say that only so much lineage can be published by any political party in any one campaign.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister, I noticed during some of the remarks earlier this afternoon, said he knows nothing about it. The reference was to bagmen, I think, or how much was spent. But it was reasonably obvious, Mr. Speaker, to any casual observer, such as yourself, that somebody in the last election campaign, the one that concluded on September 25, had a lot of money available to spend on advertising in our daily newspapers, such as that which appeared under the headings of nineteen reasons why, or twenty-one more points why, or ninety-one more reasons why, the Progressive-Conservative government should be re-elected. Frankly, this might have had some substantial effect because that is in fact what happened.

An hon. member: It worked.

Mr. Singer: It worked, yes it worked, I agree.

But I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, I think it is of very substantial importance that the people of Ontario should be in a position to know how much all that cost. I think it makes some reasonably good sense to say that the expenditure by a party on newspaper advertising be limited to X dollars, so that there could be some equity in these matters. It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that the party in power is likely to attract—quite honestly—more money in an election campaign than those that are trying to upset it. And it goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that the party in power, as was observed on September 25, is able to spend thousands, many thousands of dollars, on newspaper advertising.

It was too effective, Mr. Speaker, from my point of view and the point of view of my hon. colleagues. These sources are not available, these methods are not available to parties in opposition and I think that we should study this very carefully because, if we all believe in the democracy we talk about so often here, we should try to set a fair standard, a fair set of rules for conducting our elections.

The same thing could be done with radio time, limits be put on the amount of minutes or hours that are given, or bought by parties on radio. Or perhaps there should be no buying of radio or television time, but that the government should buy it for parties and allocate it on a fixed basis. This is the sort of thinking and studying, Mr. Speaker, that I think has to be done.

Then Professor Angell, in another section of his report, talks about a registry of electoral finance with some government supervision so that total party expenditures can be examined, accounts be audited and so on by impartial persons appointed by the government. He talks in another section of his report about the possibility of arranging for income tax exemption for donations to parties. I think this could well form a topic of discussion between the government here and the government at Ottawa, because I think efforts should be made to encourage private contributions to political parties. Efforts should be made to bring these contributions, the history of these contributions, out into the open.

There are more firms, more firms every day, which are saying yes, we give to party A or party B or party C, and we give by cheque and it is in our books and anybody who wants to come and look at our books can do so. But, Mr. Speaker, this is only the beginning of this sort of change and this change is not really going to be too effective unless the government is prepared to take some real action in connection with matters of this sort.

And there are other issues here, Mr. Speaker, that are mentioned in the resolution. The question of establishing a system of permanent registration of voters. I am sure it cannot have escaped the notice of the hon. members of this House that in Ottawa bills have been introduced—one has been passed and the other is scheduled to be dealt with after they go back in February—instructing Mr. Castonguay to embark upon a study of a system of permanent registration for voters.

ations for federal elections, for provincial elections, for liquor votes and the lists apparently are no good once the enumeration has been done. The enumeration is done so hurriedly, as one of the hon. members mentioned earlier usually with untrained people, and very often under the supervision of a returning officer who has had no previous experience. Surely there is a method for co-operation between the three levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal, to establish permanent systems of voters' lists. Surely this would make much more sense and there would not be the usual cry coming two or three weeks before the election, and repeated at such great length on election day: "How can it be possible that my name has been left off the voters' list, I have lived in this country for 50 years, paid my income taxes, and so on, and somebody left my name off the list."

Mr. Speaker, this is not fair; many hundreds of people are disenfranchised in this way. It is time that we began to show a little imagination in our approach to these subjects. This is one method whereby the government could indicate its sincerity, if it wanted to, in making the process of elections more democratic.

The modernization of the electoral machinery: We in the Opposition talked in this House—in the previous session of the Legislature—about the unfairness of appointing returning officers, and the difficulty of having by-elections unless the government was moved to appoint a returning officer. There is no point in re-rashing the complications of the two statutes by which this is set up. The fact is that if one seat in this House becomes vacant there is no method of filling it required by law; the method is determined by the government. Now surely if any seat in this House becomes vacant, in the name of democracy there should be a positive system inscribed on our statute books which will within a limited period provide that there has to be a by-election. The time should have long passed in Ontario when this sort of happenstance can delay and frustrate all of the processes of democracy.

The method of marking ballots: a very simple reform, Mr. Speaker. Surely it should be obvious to anyone who has had anything to do with elections that voters very often get confused and they put tick marks or circles or something beside a name, rather than an X. As long as a voter has given some clear indication of how he intends to mark his ballot and which candidate he intends to support, surely this should be enough. But no, this is not the way we do it, because we have done it with an X for hundreds of years—no longer does it have to be an X in lead pencil in this jurisdiction in any event—but it has to be an X and as a result in many ridings there are hundreds of spoiled ballots and people are disenfranchised because our laws are just not up to date.

The insertion of a party name, Mr. Speaker, on the ballot, would, I think, be a very important reform. I think this should be done. Certainly it should be obvious again as a result of the elections in 1957 and 1958, the federal elections in 1962 and 1963, and in our own provincial election of last September, that there were many, many people who wanted to vote for a particular party and they had difficulty in many cases in finding out who the candidate of that party was.

In this complicated age in which we live, Mr. Speaker, and particularly in urban ridings, it is almost impossible for an individual candidate or member to communicate properly with the voters that he represents or wants to represent. As the hon. member for Dovercourt said, the days of the Greek forum have gone, unfortunately people do not meet in public places to listen to and discuss with and argue with their public representatives. There is a very serious difficulty and an inability of people, of elected people, or people minded to seek election, to communicate with their electorate. One reasonable method, I think, would be to work out a system whereby the party name is included on the ballot.

The voting age: I notice that the hon. Prime Minister is quoted in the paper, the Telegram as a matter of fact, of November 19, 1963, as having said that he favours voting at the age of 18. I think there is substantial merit in this suggestion. But if he favours voting at the age of 18, I anticipate that he could have something to say about bringing in a bill which will change the laws in the province of Ontario to effect this change. But we have not heard of it.

And I do not think it is going to be enough just to nibble at one little tiny bit of electoral reform. To do this properly, Mr. Speaker, it is my suggestion that a select committee of this House should be appointed and should be instructed to sit immediately the House rises—within a very short period of time, perhaps in the period between this session and the next one to bring in a report. A hard-working select committee could bring in a comprehensive report which would result in real electoral reform needed in the province of Ontario in time for the next provincial election.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in the last few months we have all come through the electoral mill—I am sorry I cannot refer to it as the refining fire—and many of us have also taken an active part in two federal elections. With the election machinery, both provincial and federal, much in our minds, as well as the methods of financing the activities of the election, this is undoubtedly a very opportune time for the government to take some action on the principle of the resolution moved by my hon. friend from the riding of Dovercourt.

One thing that is not mentioned in the resolution itself but was mentioned briefly by the hon. member for Woodbine, Mr. Speaker, was the fact that the government which has a large preponderance of support in this House—well over 70 per cent—was elected by less than half the votes cast in the election. Even though this is so, there is no call in the motion for any consideration of some other form of voting, such as a distributive ballot, which might in fact make the membership of this House align itself more closely with the wishes of the electorate.

Most people having anything to do with the democratic process as we know it are convinced of the advantage of having stability following these elections. We have noticed what happens in jurisdictions where the distributive ballot is in use, and I believe it is for this reason that such a consideration was omitted from the wording of the resolution.

Certainly it is not our job here to consider all of the things that a committee of this nature would consider, but since it is not evident whether we will have a committee of this type or not, I hope that you will allow me in speaking for the people of Brant, to bring to your attention some things in our present electoral procedures which in my opinion should be reformed and improved.

It has already been mentioned that the personnel associated with the elections should have a more permanent type of appointment. Without referring to the returning officer himself, we might talk about some of the other people working on election day. I would think particularly that if the returning officer does receive a permanent appointment he could keep in mind the changes of the boundaries of the various polls in his jurisdiction and would be ready to act in the event of a vacancy as the law requires. But when the time comes for the appointment of the deputies and the clerk, in the various polls, it would be a great consideration indeed if these appointments were made by the returning officer under the advice of the major candidates in the field.

I understand when this was discussed in the committee at Ottawa it was suggested that the government party might make the appointment of the deputy and the Opposition party, either the chief Opposition party in the country or in that riding, might make the appointment of the clerk, and in this way do away with the large number of scrutineers that sometimes collect around polls to assure that a fair vote is taken.

When a third party of significance has to be dealt with, the Act already allows for the appointment of a constable, but Douglas Fisher, whom I am told was sitting on that committee, said that as long as the two national parties were represented at the poll he would know that nothing untoward would occur and he, of course, could extend his energy bringing in the support from outside.

An hon. member: Very well put.

Mr. Nixon: So there is an opportunity here for some concrete reform. It has been suggested that the government take on responsibility of paying for part of the election costs rather than assigning a definite number of cents per elector. I am sure that some part, some important part of the expenses that a candidate must face could be taken up through a procedure such as this.

An overall saving would surely be achieved if we were able to develop a means whereby a permanent voters' list could be maintained. Surely this could be based on the municipality itself—the township or the corporation in the case of a town—which is already required to keep a reasonably complete roll of those subject to assessment, and this could with some very small additional effort, be made a complete roll of the electors. Co-operation then from the municipal to the provincial and to the federal level would provide a complete voters' list that would be ready at all times. No doubt a court of revision could be set up for handling any difficulties that might arise from this development.

It would be much simpler if there were agreement at all levels as to what the franchise should be and it appears that there will be some considerable disagreement in the next series of elections as they come up in the next four or five years. I personally would very much favour the extension of the franchise to 18-year-olds in this province and in the jurisdictions right across the country. As a teacher I have had much to do with this age group and in my considered opinion they take as much interest in public affairs and are as ready to make a judgment on them as any other age group. I hope that they will be included in the franchise in this province before the next election.

As a matter of fact, if hon. members were to go over the discussions that centred about the extension of the franchise in the past history of our country, I believe it is true to say that every time the franchise has been extended there has been an argument from some circles that giving the vote to this or that group will surely ruin the country, and this has certainly not been the case in the past.

There has been considerable said about the role of corporations and wealthy individuals in the support of the political structure, the party structure, in this country and in this province. I want to say something about this. If what we are to read in the papers is taken as true, and there is every reason to believe that in this regard it is true, corporations do have a considerable part to play in the financing of the political activities of the country. They also have assumed considerable responsibility in the financing of many other public activities.

All one has to do is look at where the support for our expanding universities comes from, the support for welfare across the province in the Red Feather and Community Chest campaigns to see that without the large corporations these very important public enterprises would not be successful. It is also true that these corporations have a very serious interest in the affairs of the country and, as we say, if it is true that they do take a serious and a large part in the financing of politics it is because of their interest in politics in Canada and in Ontario.

Let us look at what has been the results of their interest. We look at the level of morality in our public affairs, and we look at the development of democracy in our province and in our country and when we compare it with other countries of a like nature, we do not feel that we stand second to any. On the other hand, our method of financing is not good enough if these contributions are made without a complete and audited account of their source.

So surely, if these donations are taking place, I do not feel that it would be correct to prohibit the donations, but surely it would be advisable to pass legislation that would require their disclosure under audit.

In other words, there are three ways in which this House can approach the problem of electoral reform along the lines of finance. We require rigid limitations and disclosure accompanied by audit of the expenses at all party levels. Certainly if this is going to be the case the government must participate in the basic expenses of the big campaigns. This might be done in ways that I have suggested in providing a distribution of the responsibilities in the polls to make available blocks of time on radio and television, and facilities enabling the individual candidate to express his opinions and policies for the electorate to consider.

In this way we can be very sure that the present inequalities of opportunity to campaign are removed. I do not know whether the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Davison) would want some considerations of inequality of age to be introduced here or not, but he may want to present a private bill requiring candidates under 40 to carry a couple of bags of sand around with them or some such method. But more than that, we must encourage a broad basis of support for political activity and political parties from all individuals in the province. It is only in this way, by involvement and interest, that we are going to maintain our democratic principles and institution.

For these reasons, the fact that electoral reform is much in our minds and that we have a number of years for the committee to contemplate its decisions and for the government to bring in legislation before another election, I heartily urge the adoption of the resolution.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Certainly, sir, as far as I am concerned, the hon. member for Woodbine has put before the House the position of this party with regard to the motion. He has outlined our support for the content of the motion and set some of the reasons for not supporting some of the particulars placed in the resolution. I think that the contribution that any hon. member can make in regard to this resolution can be helpful, because certainly it is the general consensus of opinion by the people across the province who are interested in the body politic and our democracy that there should be some changes made.

I would like to add my contribution to it in two points. First, I want to make clear on one point that was presented by the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Dovercourt, I do not want any inference created in his fears of contributions by large corporations, about the trade union movement in this regard. He admitted that a candidate or a political party could have some fear of contributions from large corporations or the trade union movement in fear of the fact that they may become beholden or obliged to that particular organization.

I, in my position in the New Democratic Party, and I know it is the case with the party, have no fear of that. If we accept a donation from the trade union movement or from corporations, and we have provision to accept donations from business, limited donations from business—no doubt some of our candidates have had donations from some business and company to help in their campaign—I assure the House that we have no fear of being beholden or obliged to that particular donor. Because of the structure of our organization, the structure and method of election of officers, the democratic procedure in adopting policies and programmes and the method of control by the people who belong to our party, this removes the fear from our party in accepting donations. We certainly agree that financial statements should be made public and audited so that everyone knows just where the party funds come from. So I did not want any inference created that we have that fear of undue influence if we get donations from any group.

Now to make my point in regard to my own feeling on the election machinery: in my first election in 1955, as a new candidate—having not run in the provincial field before—I had a lot to do, as did other candidates. But a lot of my time was taken up in trying to see that The Election Act was adhered to. I feel that if I had not had a sharp, intelligent official agent, the whole election would have ended up in a turmoil in my particular riding.

We found that the election officer, the returning officer, was one who was aged, who was not physically fit to carry out his duties and his wife carried them out for him. To help out with the election, we said that was fine. But we finally found that she knew nothing at all about The Election Act.

When it came to enumerating we found the machinery of the Conservative Party working in a manner that we thought was most disgraceful because none of them had experience before in the sense that the one representative would come from one area, such as Stoney Creek, and he would come in and he had a box and he would pile all the enumerators' books into them to cover the whole area. We had one from the Beach come in with a box and had them all packed up ready to move out to the headquarters and we had to stop them and get the electoral officer down from the court house to tell them just exactly what had to be done, that this was an important function and that a person had to be sworn in and all this sort of thing. I am sure—in fact we had papers ready—if I had been unsuccessful in that election we would have made application to declare the election void.

So these are the sort of things that have to be cleared up. This should not be allowed. We should have the kind of machinery that does not make it necessary for one group to help out in running an election.

In the last election we had a different situation. The returning officer did some studying, he knew the Act and he asked for co-operation and he got it, although he found a lot of problems with his own Conservative members in trying to carry out the Act.

But the one point that makes it most unfair is the establishment—of course, we have the right to appoint enumerators, because this is a very important function, so they give the second candidate the right to appoint one and they go in pairs and they take the oath that they will carry out the job to the best of their ability in accordance with the Act. But then when it comes to the clerk and the constable and the premises where they have the election and the DRO, it is a different situation. They are strictly appointed by the organization in a particular riding. If you have 150 polls in this riding, of course there are already 750 workers for that particular candidate in that riding. And as was established by the machinery in the last particular riding, they were obliged to the best of their ability to provide 10 votes, each one of them. So this gives the candidate on the government side 7,500 votes, if they come through, right off the bat.

So you see what kind of a chance the second man has. And then try to see what kind of a chance a third candidate has; he is really behind the eight-ball regardless of how able he is or what kind of a person he is in presenting a programme.

These are some of the reasons why I would like to see the whole election machinery looked at.

I am not convinced that a select committee is the proper group to look into this sort of thing. I would think it might be better to have a Royal commission or some kind of a commission, independent and dedicated, to come up with real election machinery. I sat on select committees, and I, of course, know it is the right of the government to put the majority on the committee to protect their rights, but I can just imagine a select committee made up of majority members of one particular party, particularly a party that has been in power for so long, trying to spoil the soup that has been so good for so long a time and coming up with a proper type of election machinery. So I would support the motion as the hon. member for Woodbine has said, but there might be a need to look at just what kind of a group would do the studying.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I have been very interested in the comments that have been made here. I note that a great many of them are miles away from the subject in the resolution, which is, that a select committee be appointed to carry out certain tasks and refer it to preconceived ideas of what the committee should find.

Now this is perfectly all right, but it seems to me that what has been said here in large part would flow from the committee—if we were to accept the resolution—after it had held its hearings and done its investigations. It is obvious to me there are quite a few preconceived ideas as to what this committee would find if it were to be established.

I am aware, of course, as is every hon. member of this House and everyone who has run in an election, that there are changes necessary in our Election Act. I do not necessarily agree with everything that has been said here this afternoon, but nonetheless I feel free to say that we too think that there are some changes which should be made in this Act. Whether this is precisely the proper way to go about finding out what they are, I would not say at the moment. There are some specific things in this resolution that do not appeal to me, but in any event I am happy to have heard these comments and certainly, as a government, we are looking at the election machinery of the province.

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, tomorrow we will continue with the Throne debate and there are four bills printed which are on the order books now. We will be ready for second reading of those four bills as of tomorrow.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before the House is adjourned, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister would clarify news accounts that were heard, at least in some quarters yesterday, sir, to the effect that the Budget will be coming down in the first or second week of February? If so, is it the intention of the hon. Prime Minister that we shall conclude this Throne debate before the Budget comes down?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Frankly, I do not know when the Budget will come down. I was asked about it by some members of the press and I said it would be an early budget. In other words it probably will be earlier than in previous years. But as hon. members notice, the whole programme of the Legislature is earlier this year. We opened earlier. I could not tell the hon. member whether this debate will conclude before the Budget or not. It all depends upon how many people wish to speak and how we proceed.

In previous years we have run the Throne debate and the Budget debate at the same time. This is not the procedure, Mr. Speaker, that particularly appeals to me. It seems to me that we should be able to conclude one debate between now and the time the Budget is brought down. I intend to allot time for the Throne debate and I think we should be able to complete it before the Budget comes down, but I will not necessarily say that is so, if there are hon. members who still want to speak and the Budget is ready to be brought in.

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.35 o'clock p.m.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the West Gallery, students from York Memorial Collegiate, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Of Assumption University of Windsor praying that an Act may pass varying the provisions of its Act of incorporation.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. J. F. Edwards from the select committee on standing orders on printing presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following petitions and finds the notices as published in each case sufficient:

Of the corporation of the town of Cochrane praying that an Act may pass granting the corporation authority by by-law to fix the assessment of the property of Cochrane Industries Limited.

Of the corporation of the city of Owen Sound praying that an Act may pass validating a by-law to extend the time for the return of the assessment roll.

Of the board of education of the city of London praying that an Act may pass vesting certain lands in the board in fee simple.

Of the corporation of the township of Pittsburgh praying that an Act may pass annexing part of the city of Kingston to the township.

Of the corporation of Huron College praying that an Act may pass revising the administration of the college.

Of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto praying that an Act may pass establishing the board of governors of Riverdale Hospital.

For the incorporation of Brock University.

Of Westminster College praying that an Act may pass authorizing exemption from taxes.

Of the corporation of the town of Thorold praying that an Act may pass enabling it to acquire, to hold and dispose of Sullivan Park, and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the city of Toronto praying that an Act may pass permitting extension of Maple Leaf Gardens over Carlton and Woods Streets and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the Ross Memorial Hospital praying that an Act may pass changing the composition of the board of governors.

For the incorporation of the Masonic Foundation of Ontario.

To reactivate the W. F. Thomas Foundation.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE FEMALE REFUGES ACT

Hon. A. Crossman (Minister of Reform Institutions) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to repeal The Female Refuges Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. Crossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, the reason for the repeal is that the Act is obsolete and no longer of any use. There are no female refuges left in Ontario, within the meaning of this Act.

THE COUNTY JUDGES ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment of the Act to provide for two additional judges on the county bench. In the county of York there are presently 14 judges; this would increase the number to 16 and is necessitated by the very heavy workload in the county courts of the county of York, which includes Metropolitan Toronto.

THE MENTAL INCOMPETENCY ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mental Incompetency Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I can do no better than read the general explanatory notes which will be appended to the bill when printed. The purposes of this bill are twofold: (1) to expedite proceedings under the Act and (2) to reduce the cost of such proceedings.

To accomplish these purposes the bill proposes to transfer jurisdiction and proceedings under the Act from the Supreme Court to the county and district courts, except for (1) the confirmation of committees and the schemes of management and (2) collateral matters.

In further explanation I might say that this particular matter has arisen out of a report, made on the administration of justice and the courts in the province by Mr. Eric Silk, Q.C., the then assistant deputy Attorney-General. This pointed out that a great deal of delay and a very considerable amount of costs were incurred because every application initially had to be made to the Supreme Court either in Toronto or in weekly court at Ottawa and London. In any event, thereafter the matters were referred back to the local master in the local county town to propound a scheme and to deal with these matters.

It is now being changed under the provisions of this Act, so that the original application will be made in county towns; and only the appointment of a committee and confirmation of the scheme of management will be subject to confirmation by the Supreme Court.

THE DAY NURSERIES ACT

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare) moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend The Day Nurseries Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): The amendments in this bill increase the cases where provincial contributions can be made to municipal day nurseries, to nurseries for children seven, eight or nine years of age where the mother is employed outside the home, instead of just being under the age of seven, as before.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) when the announced expansion of the facilities at the Ontario School for the Blind will take place.

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the hon. member for Brant that plans are ready for that dormitory and I would hope that construction will start this spring.

Mr. Nixon: And a question for the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis): What action does The Department of Education contemplate in answer to the repeated requests for the establishment of a trade school in the Brantford area?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for notice of the question.

The department of course realizes a need for vocational centres and careful thought is being given to locations which will best serve the entire province. I have received delegations and requests for vocational centres from a number of municipalities, and Brantford has of course approached us in this regard.

At the present time we have three institutes of trades in operation in Toronto and you will be interested to know that new ones will open in London and Ottawa this year and in Sault St. Marie in September of 1965. Plans are well under way for similar vocational centres in Hamilton and in the Niagara peninsula.

On January 9, 1964, the superintendent of the technological and trades training branch of the department went to the fair city of Brantford. He visited a number of the industries and met with a committee of persons interested in the location of a vocational centre in that community. At the present time no decision has been made as to the location of the next new vocational centre.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. Minister for that full answer.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) a question, which was duly prepared in advance.

Does The Department of Agriculture intend to request the federal government to amend The Marketing Act for the inclusion of fresh water fish in order that the Fish Marketing Board will have control of fish to be exported?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for the advance notice of this question. This whole situation was discussed with the fishermen by the Farm Products Marketing Board.

It is the opinion of our solicitors, that is the solicitors in The Department of Agriculture, that, although the Ottawa legislation is not completely clear, Ottawa would likely be of the opinion that they require an amendment to the federal legislation before they can grant an extension of marketing power for inter-provincial and export trade to a fish marketing plan in Ontario.

Officials of The Ontario Department of Agriculture do not know whether the fishermen have discussed this situation with the Ottawa officials or not. It would appear, however, that the primary request for any amendment to the Ottawa legislation should come from the fishermen as a direct request to Ottawa. However, The Ontario Department of Agriculture will hold itself available to have any discussions, for the purposes of clarification of the request, with the Ottawa officials.

In other words, we would continue the close working relationship which has always existed on these matters between the Ontario and the federal Departments of Agriculture.

Mr. Paterson: I thank the hon. Minister.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce to the House that tenders will be called within a few days for four new service areas on Highway 401 in western Ontario.

The new centres will be built in pairs approximately opposite each other on 401. Two will be located mid-way between Dutton and West Lorne, 30 miles west of London, and the other pair will be 47 miles west of this, just east of Tilbury.

The contracts will require that the facilities for both the service station and restaurant must be in complete operation by April 1, 1965. Adjacent to each of the service centres provisions are made for the development of picnic areas which will be adequately supplied with tables and other facilities necessary for this type of convenience to the motoring public.

I hope, before this session of the Legislature ends, to be able to make a similar announcement in reference to additional stations on Highway 401 in eastern Ontario. The adopting of a policy of providing this type of service on Highway 401 has been completely justified by our experiences in connection with the eight existing areas.

From the number of letters of appreciation from the motorists, and the patronage extended to these stations, it is quite obvious that this policy has met with the wholehearted approval of the travelling public.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this debate, I want first of all to comply with the custom that has grown up over the years of congratulating the Speaker. This custom is a good one and I rush to comply with it at this time. I believe that in the choice of a Speaker for this Legislature we have done well, and I am sure that as the deliberations of the House proceed we will find new evidence every day of the wisdom of our choice.

I want also to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. A new feature developed this year in these two speeches in that they were both quite brief. I do not know that I would want this to be a pattern for years to come, but certainly these two speeches from time back have contained in the main commendations of the government; so, from this side of the House, brevity and not respect is not only to be condoned but to be pushed after, helped along.

I want especially to congratulate the seconder, the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard). I think it as a good thing for this House to have a lady member; one who is versed, I am sure, in many aspects of governmental work, more particularly in some of them than the men. It will be a pleasure, I am sure, to hear the participation in the debates of this new lady member.

It is customary, of course, on occasions such as this, to say a few words about the Cabinet changes. I am going to beg off from this ordeal at this time because it seems to me, regarding these Cabinet members, these new ones who have been changed or newly appointed, that we will have an opportunity to judge their ability for office as we move on in this session. I can say, however, in a broad way that I wish them well, having the interests of the province at heart.

The other day when we were discussing a resolution moved by the NDP, my friend the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) suggested that he was glad that he knew at last where the Liberal party stood in respect to the subject matter that was being debated. I do not intend to elaborate particularly on this matter, except to say this, and to say it deliberately and emphatically: If there was doubt as to the position of this party in relation to any particular subject, then that doubt will be removed. If there was an area in which there was a lack of clarity, then clarity will be restored and maintained so far as this party is concerned. And I would say this, too:

Consistency will become a jewel of great worth as we proceed in our deliberations—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Oliver: That is a position I am dedicated to preserve and expand as we move forward in the deliberations of this House and the Liberal Party. If it has strayed from its rightful position as a reform party, then we on this side of the House will see to it that the stage is set and the foundation laid for it to return to its rightful position as a reform party of this province.

I wanted to make mention, Mr. Speaker, of a Cabinet Minister who is not with us today, a man who used to be a Cabinet Minister of this administration, the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay). All of us, I think, Mr. Speaker, have a very high estimation of the qualities that this gentleman possesses; and I think all of us, regardless of party, were sorry to see him leave the benches of the government and to be infrequently in the House.

The hon. member for Riverdale has a special quality that endeared him to me and I am sure to all hon. members on this side of the House, at least; he had a quality that has not been exhibited by this government in the person of any other hon. member. He had a vision for the future that I am sure, if he was allowed to carry it out to its fulfilment, would have meant better days for this province.

He had an idea, however great the shortcomings of that idea may have been. He had an idea that the resources of this province and its ability to produce were not being tapped to the maximum. He felt—and I think with a great deal of justification—that the potential of which this province was capable, was not being reached, or even reached for with any degree of certainty, by the government benches.

The plans he evolved, in response to his belief, had, as I said, some shortcomings; they were restricted in their application, they were parochial in respect to the area involved and the salesmanship qualities that were enmeshed with the scheme reminds us of what might be expected in a carnival. These things are not said to justify the scheme; but I say, in spite of the shortcomings of what my friend the hon. member for Riverdale had in mind, it was the first sign in two decades that a Tory government intended to move to tap the full potential of this province.

And it was an indication, however singular that indication may have been, on the part of the hon. member, it was his judgment that we had to move to tap that full potential before we could increase the provincial product to a place that we could reasonably expect to get more revenue and improve the services of the province.

Now I am coming back to the idea the hon. member for Riverdale had in a few moments.

We have the Speech from the Throne before us; there are several interesting paragraphs in that speech. One or two of them deal with the heavy burden that this province has in a financial sense in meeting its commitments for the extension of services throughout the province. I took those paragraphs to mean that this was a softening up process for the tax bite that is presumed to be coming in the next few weeks.

I am assuming that taxes are going to be increased, indeed they have already been increased in some areas and I think that area will be extended. I just want to point out to the House that the atmosphere in which this government proposes to increase revenue is a rather unreal one.

Where other jurisdictions to the south of us, and even in our own country, are seeking to cut back expenditures and to cut taxes, we appear to be heading in the opposite direction, the direction of imposing more taxes on our people. It seems to me that in this sense we are running against the stream and personally, and speaking for the party, we will have great hesitation and extreme reluctance in voting for increased taxation in this province at this time until at least certain things are done and certain moves are made by this present administration. I will come to those moves in a very few moments.

I want first of all to talk about economy in our own house. You know, economy is almost a lost word and a lost practice even among our people and certainly among our governments. Before this government has any justification at all for moving for increased taxation, they must be able to demonstrate to the people of this province that in their own government they have practised economy, they have cut bills, that they have done away with duplication and that they have made every possible move to effect whatever economies can be made in the governmental service of this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no hope, in view of what was said by the hon. Prime Minister the other day, that they are intending to do this at all. Speaking the other day in the debate having to do with the setting up of the public accounts committee, I took it from my hon. friend that he said that there was not any great need of great outside examination of these matters because he said we are constantly checking ourselves.

Well, to me, that is a cosy arrangement, to say the least. Here we have a government which has been in power for 20 long years in this province, for 20 years, and we have the hon. Prime Minister saying after these 20 years we are watching ourselves, we are minding our fences, we are taking care of undue expenditure, we are wiping those out, we are practising economy.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I believe that before a government which sits in this province today has any justification in asking the people of this province for increased taxes, it should appoint a committee, similar to the Glassco commission at Ottawa, to examine the administration of government in this province and the expenditures attached thereto. I believe that in this, Mr. Speaker, that after 20 years of government, no matter what party was in power, I am sure that there has grown up useless expenditures and services that we could perhaps well do without. I think it is time, high time, for an independent, impartial examination of this government's administration and the expenditures attached thereto and I am confident that if such an examination were carried out that we would save many millions of dollars that could go toward paying for some of the things for which we need money so badly.

Certainly it would have done one thing, Mr. Speaker, it would have shown to the people of this province that the government takes the lead in mending their own fences and in seeing to it that proper methods are followed in government and that expenditures are limited and that the taxpayers' money is being well looked after. Because there is certainly abroad throughout the province a feeling that economies could be effected in government services. There is the feeling that there is duplication of services, there is a feeling that we should streamline our government for the great challenge it faces in the days that lie ahead.

Many of the things are carried on in government today as they were carried on decades ago. I think we should try to fashion our administration to be in harmony with the needs of the times and the challenge that confronts us.

I want to speak for a moment or two in regard to federal-provincial relations. This is a subject that has been discussed many times in this House and perhaps will come in for much discussion in the days that are just ahead. I think it is time, speaking quite frankly, that we be realistic about our position in federal-provincial relations.

It can be said frankly that every time we have a federal-provincial conference we come home with less money than we anticipated and far less than we needed to meet the services required in this province. Every time the bag is opened in Ottawa, the part that we get out of it, the money that we get out of it, seems to becoming less and less in comparison with the great challenge which we have for expenditure in Ontario. This is true or false no matter what government is in power in Ottawa, there is not any question about that.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Oliver: The hon. member does not need to get so smart about this. I remember Mr. Drew quite well. He was going down a few years ago to get $150 million, he said, from Ottawa; he came back, as I remember, with $22,000,000.

An hon. member: It was Hon. Mr. Frost, I believe.

Mr. Oliver: And now the government is going down and they say we need $100 million, and they come back with—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I did not say that.

Mr. Oliver: Well then it is suggested that we need $100 million.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is not suggested.

An hon. member: How much did the hon. Prime Minister get?

Mr. Oliver: Anyway, he did not get as much as he needs, did he?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, that is quite wrong; I said leave the arrangements the way they are. Now that is what I said.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Who has the floor?

Mr. Oliver: The hon. Prime Minister is all right. At least I think he is; I am not so sure.

There is of course something that should be said at this time. Usually we took our beating at the end of the five-year term when the new arrangements were made; now it seems that we are going to take it in between times as well.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. leader of the Opposition told Mr. Pearson this?

Mr. Oliver: I do not care, I can tell Mr. Pearson the same as I am telling the hon. Prime Minister.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Oliver: I would suggest to the hon. member that in this we are opening the parcel before Christmas, and every time we open them the amount that comes to us by way of toys and money gets less and less. So far as federal-provincial relations are concerned, I think we might as well just come to an understanding that this province is not getting its rightful share out of these arrangements.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): That is right.

Mr. Oliver: And now the hon. Prime Minister says in the interests of unity we accepted this proposition. Well I am for unity too and so are we all—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): He is afraid of duty.

Mr. Oliver: But surely there is a place, Mr. Speaker, where unity and justice meet. Surely there is a place where justice will prevail.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Persuade Mr. Pearson!

Mr. Oliver: I can persuade Mr. Pearson if we can try to, I am looking at it from an Ontarian point of view, but I am saying to the hon. Prime Minister that these arrangements that we have with Ottawa, no matter whether it is under a Liberal government or the old ones we had under a Tory government, are not doing justice to the people of this province; and moreover we might as well realize that they are not going to do justice to the people of this province no matter what government is in power in Ottawa.

One of the troubles with hon. members over there is this; they have lived in the hope rather than in the expectation that they were going to get something really handsome from Ottawa by way of a division of taxes.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The Ontario government gives to the government of Canada 52 per cent of all money they have to spend. Surely we should expect some consideration, even from a Liberal government!

Mr. Oliver: And they have built up their case as Hon. Mr. Frost and Mr. Drew built it up before them to have the people believe that this money was coming from Ottawa. We have got to the place in Ontario now where it is not coming and we have to husband our resources accordingly. We have to make preparations on the basis of the understanding that the tax agreements with Ottawa are not going to get better so far as Ontario is concerned.

On the broad point, to me at least, this method of division of taxes is outmoded. I do not believe that it can serve a useful purpose after the termination of this five-year agreement and I would like to see the province of Ontario move to evolve a new system of arrangements between the federal and provincial governments, something along the line of dividing the fields of responsibility of the province; giving back to the federal government some fields that we have that really belong to the federal administration and they, in turn, giving to us certain fields that are peculiarly provincial in character.

Mr. Sopha: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oliver: I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that we are ever going to get justice out of this particular arrangement and I have not thought so for a long time.

The hon. Prime Minister says he never asked for $100 million of new taxes. I do not know where the figure is, but certainly we need new taxes. That is quite apparent to those who run the departments; they can read it, it is so plain. We need new taxes and I presume that we are going to get them when the Budget is brought down.

I would say in that regard, Mr. Speaker, that we are now back on our own resources insofar as additional taxation is concerned. We have to make up our minds, at least the government has, as to what are the best fields to invade to get the additional needed revenue.

Now in the past this government has not had a good record in the financial field. I would say this: I have been in the House long enough to know that the present dilemma in which they find themselves is really of their own creation. They are, in other words, the author of their own dilemma, of the dilemma that exists at the present time.

We have, for instance, the budget methods that have been carried on by this government over the last number of years. I do not think there is a jurisdiction anywhere on the North American continent that carries on its financial set up, its bookkeeping setup, the way this government does in the province of Ontario. Certainly a women's institute meeting back in the country would not think of applying to their own particular work the kind of bookkeeping arrangements that we have been stuck with for two decades.

In this province, sir, the government has powers insofar as budgeting is concerned that should not be given to any government. They have clung tenaciously to these powers through the years and I hope to see the day in Ontario when we will know when a budget is presented whether or not there is a surplus. We have the practice in this province of moving around from capital account to ordinary account at will and you can, with an hour's notice, make a small surplus or you can make a large surplus. You can have a $20 million surplus if you want to, or you can have a $5,000 surplus if you want to.

I suggest to hon. members opposite that any government that has carried on under those conditions for 20 years is deserving of the situation that it finds itself in at the moment.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oliver: Moreover, Mr. Speaker, another reason we are in trouble financially is because we have a debt of $1.3 billion, a tremendous debt on the people of this province. I believe that the government has at last awakened to the fact that they cannot go on year by year adding to this debt without having to assume the consequences. I think they now appreciate that they cannot do any longer as they have done for 20 years, have a surplus if they desire it and put the rest of it into debt. That, I assume, is one of the basic reasons why the government is moving into a position of putting more taxes on the people of Ontario. They are going to have some trouble putting taxes on the people of Ontario. I think the people of Ontario are quite tax conscious at the present time; I think they will resist additional taxation unless there is evidence, that we have not yet seen, of the government's intention first to clean their own house and put it in order and, second, to evolve plans that will tap, as the hon. member for Riverdale tried to do in his miniature way, that will tap the full potential of this province.

Now then, one can talk about finances, and

I really believe myself, Mr. Speaker, and this is going a long way, that the people would not have been so anxious to return this government to power had they known something of the financial position of the province and the possibility, or probability, that new taxes would be levied.

It is pretty difficult to talk to people in the country about finances, as every hon. member who has tried to do it knows. When you talk about figures the meeting sort of lapses into semi-consciousness and they are not interested in them. The only time that people are generally interested in figures is when those figures contain a tax imposition on the part of the government. If the government intends at this time to move in the direction of increased taxes, they can expect, and should expect, resistance from the people of this province.

They should expect it for another reason. I do not believe—as I believe the hon. member for Riverdale held the view—I do not believe that this government has done all it could or should have done in the last 20 years to tap the potential of this province and to increase the gross provincial product to the place where additional taxes would have accrued to the provincial Treasury. I think they have been lazy and inept in dealing with this whole situation.

There is, of course, the idea that we should have taxes in this province that relate to services. That, of course, is an excellent phrase, but it does not mean exactly that when the government gets hold of it. There is, I would say, this obligation on the government, before they can expect people to pay taxes, I think the government has to exhibit a determination to move forward with plans that will eventually tap the full potential of this province towards the building of the economic order of the province and the increasing of the gross provincial product.

Now the sum of these, of course, will be long term in their tenure. That cannot be avoided. They are long term now, because the government should have started them 15 or 20 years ago. They are no less valid because they are long term. They become even more valid when we have failed in the past to take advantage of the opportunities that existed.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, and I believe it sincerely, that in this province we have been living by clipping coupons from the greatness of the achievements of the past. I think we have thought of ourselves as inheriting great legacies of wealth from our natural resources and that these, without any effort on our part, would continue to provide us with coupons to clip. Well, this coupon-clipping business is getting a bit slack because some of these developments, some of these great undertakings of the past, are wearing out so far as coupons are concerned. They have not been revived, they have not been expanded the way they could or should have been during the life of this government.

One only has to look at this province to get the picture in this connection. We have in Ontario, it seems to me, a land that is next thing to paradise, or could be, in industrial expansion beyond compare. There was a day in which the farm areas of the province were dominant. That picture has now changed; industry has taken over the dominant role in this province.

We have excellent land in all parts of the province. We have water halfway around our province, almost. We do not have to fight, as Israel may have to fight to get water out of the Jordan. We do not have to do that. All we have to do is employ the ingenuity that God gave us to get, for the people of Ontario, water that they need; and I suggest to you that in this one instance, and there will be others, the government has been lax. They have not moved to the challenge that was presented and they have not done what they should have done in this regard.

We have power in Ontario, all kinds of power, for industrial and for farm use. We have minerals—I think we have—although you would never know it by the record of this government in relation to the mining industry.

We have forests, in this province, of great magnitude and great value.

Of course, the trouble is that we have not exploited—exploited is hardly the word—we have not used these resources to their full capacity. That, of course, is evident in the Speech from the Throne itself. The government is now going to set up a committee to study the mining industry, all phases of the mining industry.

Mr. Singer: And the hon. Minister, too.

Mr. Oliver: We used to be so proud of our mining industry in this province. Who is there to say that the mineral wealth of this province has been exhausted? Who says we have dug it all from the bowels of the earth? That, of course, is not true.

The record of this government, in their leadership of the mining industry of this province, would indicate that mining is in the doldrums in Ontario, that it is not running at one-quarter the capacity of which it is capable if it had been given the leadership that should have been given to it over the years.

Now, after 20 years in power, this government says, in relation to that great natural resource of mining: We do not know what is the matter with mining, so we are going to set up a committee, 20 years after we were first elected—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The government has been two years—

Mr. Oliver: —we are going to set up a committee to try to determine what are the ills of the mining industry and to restore it to a state of health in this province.

I would just say to the hon. Prime Minister that there has been a gross dereliction of duty in this regard. He has failed miserably in giving leadership to the mining industry, among other natural resource industries.

Mining is only one of them. If mining had been promoted, as you now seek to find ways of promoting it through this committee, if it had been promoted by your government down through the years, we would have been able to have a mining industry in Ontario today that would be reaching towards its potential; that, because of its ability to reach towards its potential, would have been increasing the provincial gross product and giving more taxes to the provincial government as a consequence. But this government has failed in giving leadership to the mining industry, just as it has failed in giving leadership to every other resource industry in the province of Ontario, Mr. Speaker.

This government has neglected—and I do not know what other word to use except neglect—it has neglected the natural resources of this province. It has depended, down through the years, upon the achievements and the developments that took place at the turn of the century. And it has been lulled into a position of insecurity by the greatness of those developments that took place at the turn of the century. As a consequence, it has done little or nothing to promote on its own what could become the greatest mining area of the world, in northern Ontario.

The same can be said for the water resources of the province. The same can be said. We have a statement in the Speech from the Throne which indicates the government's anxiety about the low water level in the province and it pledges the government to do something about it. They are going to find out what the trouble is and effect the remedies, no matter how severe or far reaching.

Well, that is a noble statement, but like many of these other actions it comes at least ten years too late. We had in this province, Mr. Speaker, a conservation committee, ten years ago, that told this government in no uncertain words that unless they made adequate provision for an ample supply of water immediately it was going to run into very grave difficulties. For ten years the government sat across there and did nothing at all.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. leader of the Opposition is wrong.

Mr. Oliver: It did nothing at all in respect to getting water for western Ontario, not a thing—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: What about the pipeline in Essex?

Mr. Oliver: Yes. The hon. Prime Minister should try a pipeline to London to save his own particular community.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is so easy to say nothing. Look at the record.

Mr. Oliver: Well, when the hon. Prime Minister gets into a flamboyant mood it is not good for himself or those who sit around him.

We are going to move now, Mr. Speaker, to do something about the water situation in western Ontario, particularly where that acute situation exists. I say to you that if this had been done ten years ago, not only would there have been water for those areas which needed it in western Ontario, but the fact that there was water available would have been one of the great contributing factors to the decentralization of industry in this province.

The lack of water in small communities in my riding, and throughout that whole area, is holding back the development of those particular areas. Down they go into the earth deeper and deeper every year, to try to get enough water to set aside for their own municipal needs. There is not any reason for that in a province such as this, with abundant water at our very doors, you might say.

All that has been lacking through the years has been the appreciation of the problem on the part of the government and a lack of determination to solve the problem until this very present time, when they say in the Speech from the Throne that something has to be done. This is when this government moves, when it is faced with a crisis.

Mr. Speaker, it is not able to see, as the hon. member for Riverdale could catch a glimpse of at least, that there is such a thing as preparing for an emergency, and avoiding that emergency, and building for the future, so that there will be no emergency and no crisis. That never enters into the thinking of the government at all.

What is true with respect to water and mines is true also of other departments of government. I am thinking at the moment of the tourist industry. I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the government, if there ever was an ineffective, non-active department of government it has been The Department of Travel and Publicity in this province. We have, in Ontario, a regular paradise for tourists. If it were given the leadership and support of this government, it could draw hundreds of thousands or even millions of people from the United States. But, just like the government does in everything else, it has been playing, through the years, the status quo: Just let things slide along, do not prepare to build up the potential of the province.

I do not know what the new hon. Minister (Mr. Auld) will do in that particular department. I see that the name is to be changed. I am not so sure that the mere changing of a name is going to guarantee that there will be more action in the future than there has been in the past. But certainly there is a place in this province for a tourist industry of great magnitude. And if you build up the tourist industry in this province to the capacity which is there for it, then you will have added unquestionably to the gross provincial product and you will have made available to the province of Ontario much greater revenues than you get at the present time.

And then there is The Department of Highways. I would just like to say this about that department: I believe, seriously, and I think the hon. Minister (Mr. MacNaughton) knows this, that The Department of Highways has been too great a slave to the traffic count down through the years. They have not been pioneers at all.

We had a development Act, I think it was at Ottawa, that was called "Roads to Resources". The time has come in Ontario, if indeed it is not past, when we should have "Roads for Development"—roads which will help to decentralize industry in this province and make for a balanced economy in Ontario.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think it is a healthy position for this province to have our industry congested in the "Golden Horseshoe", for instance. I think it would be far better if industry was distributed throughout the province of Ontario. That would make for a balanced development and a balanced economy.

My hon. friend nods his head. Two of the greatest ingredients that the government can use to have that come to fruition are good roads and water. If there were good roads—and I do not mean the narrow two-lane type, but good four-lane highways—into some of these areas of this province, one would be amazed in a very short time how industry would follow that road and this would help to decentralize industry in this province.

We have the situation just outside of Toronto here where we built a four-lane highway and before we knew it the city just grew out over the top of it; so we go back a little farther, and a little farther, and so on. It seems to me that it would be far better for this government to take seriously the advisability of decentralizing industry in this province. Two of the first and most important steps that could be evolved would be an abundance of water and roads which will lead out to those industrial sites. Because if there is a four-lane highway, as my hon. friend knows, then industry does not need to be congested in a small area.

The transportation costs are not such that would prohibit them from moving out to the outlying areas. That is true in respect to the decentralization of industry and we seem to be doing nothing about it.

I know, I am frank to admit to the House, that the government is in no position to say that industry shall go here and that one shall go there, but surely we can do much more than we have done to create the climate in which industries will go of their own accord. And this government, I suggest, has failed miserably and lamentably in that particular field.

That is true in respect to all the departments of government. I think they have sworn adherence to the status quo; they are afraid to look ahead. If they are going to do anything in this province today they have to look ahead and plan for the future. There was a time, years ago, when we lived day by day and things did not move so quickly; but now, if we are going to catch up with the economy and be ahead of it we have to move with greater speed than any indication has shown that this government is prepared to move.

So I would say, Mr. Speaker, as a consequence, that the government of Ontario has shown very poor leadership in respect to the whole financial situation. In the first place, their deals with Ottawa have not been fruitful and I do not labour that.

But in the second place, they have not tried to clean up their own house here in Toronto with our expenditures up now hundreds of millions and almost a billion dollars. They have not tried to clean that up and demonstrate that no more money can be saved there before they start asking the people for taxes.

Beyond that, and more important, they have not sought to tax the potential of this province as it should be taxed; I do not mean taxed in the money sense, but I mean they have not tried to develop it as it should be developed. If there was a proper development of these resource industries and of the economic climate generally, then we would have the taxes flowing in and we would not have to be continually asking the people for new impositions of taxes.

It is because I believe that the government has very little intention of moving in a dramatic fashion in these particular fields that I have to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I have to move a motion here which might be construed to be one of no confidence in the administration.

Here I move to the prepared text.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Reaume, that the motion for an Address in Reply to the speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor, now before the House, be amended by adding thereto the following words:

This House regrets that Her Majesty's government has failed to proclaim a programme designed to meet the challenges of the sixties.

How true that is!

And this House regrets that the government has chosen to use empty and hollow phrases as a substitute for action, rather than, as it should, seize the opportunity to chart an imaginative and comprehensive programme designed to encourage the social, economic and educational development of the province of Ontario.

And this House further regrets that the Speech from the Throne indicates that the government dissipates the confidence of the people who returned it to office in that it now shows a lack of awareness and a refusal to act upon important problems of immediate concern to the people of Ontario, such as automation and job security, a comprehensive programme of medical care using the experience gained in other jurisdictions, a fair and equitable pension plan, a code of laws designed to recognize and advance the rights and interests of the working man, a programme of protection for the consumer, a method whereby farmers can be afforded a fair and adequate return for their efforts, a recognition of the potential of and a plan for the development of northern Ontario, and an acceptance by the government of responsibility for equipping every boy and girl in Ontario with sufficient education and training to enable him or her to bear a responsible, useful and satisfying role in meeting the challenge of the sixties.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if I have missed anything of consequence, it is an omission on my part.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to enter this debate I want at the outset to express my appreciation to you for the dignity and the competence with which you are handling your difficult job. We shall have our differences, they have not really arisen as yet as far as I know, but undoubtedly they will some time. In spite of those, I think there is real promise that with your guidance we are going to restore some of the highest traditions of this Legislature from which, I think, all of us would concede privately we fell to some degree in recent years.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I want to extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the reply to the Speech from the Throne. It is an honour to be chosen for this traditional role and I must say that one of the advantages of these two hon. members becoming involved, is that at least they were rescued from the anonymity of these 37 new faces in the House.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that one of the challenging things in this House is to get to know, as we would all like to get to know, hon. members of the House on a personal basis. But in spite of my being in politics for some time, I find it a little difficult to get all the names and the faces put together correctly when there are suddenly 37 or 38 new ones. I think the 38th one is our hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. Villeneuve), who sat on my left, if that does not shock him unduly, a few years ago, so his is not a new face.

However, there was no particular difficulty, of course, in getting at least one hon. member of the House well spotted, the hon. lady from one of the Hamilton ridings (Mrs. Pritchard). I suppose one can say that there is a great difference in her instance and quote the French phrase that "vive la difference". Long may it last, and may we have more of her sex in this House because I am certain it is going to help to lift the level of our debates and the seriousness of our efforts, even though it may inhibit some of us to some degree.

Now in turning to the Speech from the Throne itself, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am a little puzzled as to exactly what should be said about it. In the course of the Medicare debate on Monday, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) made a comment that what he had heard was just a rehash of last year. Now if the hon. Prime Minister will forgive me in borrowing his phrase, I can think of nothing that would be more appropriate to describe the Speech from the Throne than that it was a rehash—not only from last year, but from many years back. In fact, it was a dish of cold porridge. Items that we have had down through the years, items that were hurled across the hustings during the recent election campaign and which were carried in all the mass communication media and yet they are brought back, they are warmed up a little, not even too much, and they are presented to us once again as the government programme.

That being the case, Mr. Speaker, it seemed to me that the authors had reached heights of real literary fantasy when they introduced this rehash of 40 items with a phrase that describes it as "bold new programmes and measures".

Well, it is not bold and it certainly is not new. In fact, as I am going to indicate in a moment, I do not propose to deal in detail with matters from the Speech from the Throne. There will be opportunities later for the government to give us a little more detail with regard to specific items included and when they have given us that detail then I think it will be more useful and fruitful for us to debate them.

I just want to touch on two or three items of what might be categorized as trivia in the Throne Speech that rather intrigued me. I was intrigued, Mr. Speaker, at the fact that the Throne Speech, at this particular time, should have been presented to the Legislature without a single mention of Medicare. Now during the election campaign—and I suppose the hon. Prime Minister is going to take a long time before he will live this down, notwithstanding his rationalizations of it—he went across the province by way of TV and he had this set of achievements on the blackboard that he was trying to present to the people and enticing their votes and he was ticking them off: Done! Done! And heading this was Medicare.

Well of course, we knew it was not done, and even with the explanation of the hon. Prime Minister that it was done as far as he was concerned, he had merely introduced it and sent it off to a committee, that is about as pathetic a “done” as I could think of.

But even with this, Mr. Speaker, now we come back and we find that the hon. Prime Minister says that we are not going to have Medicare even according to the schedule that he had presented. We are not going to have it, he says, because the committee is not going to be able to report.

Now this is really a little unworthy of the hon. Prime Minister—to fix the blame on the committee. After all, the hon. Prime Minister announced this committee last spring. It took him a full seven months to be able to announce the names of the people. They got working inside of a couple of months, which is not bad by way of organizing a whole new committee. So the blame rests right with the hon. Prime Minister. According to my information, it is likely that by the end of January or early February they will have heard most if not all, of the briefs.

So I ask the question, sir: Why must the government delay unless it really is their intention to delay? As I suspect is the case. So that is the little item of Medicare.

Another point that intrigued me in the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, was the reference to the fact that the government is expecting a final report from the municipal affairs committee.

This intrigued me because I had the opportunity, just a few days before that, to talk with our member on this committee, who reported to me that at their last meeting, almost a week prior to the opening of this House, the committee had decided that they would ask for leave to sit again because the job was not finished. I just wonder how completely have communications broken down within a government that cannot learn within a week that the committee had asked for leave to sit again because, presumably, it feels it has not been able to complete its job.

But, in the nature of trivia, and the most teasing of all, Mr. Speaker, as I was reading the Throne Speech on page 3, there was this wonderful sentence:

Of major interest today is the encompassing participation of our younger people in public life and political life.

Obviously the authors of this document had been somewhat overwhelmed by the fact that we have so many young men with us, new hon. members to this House. I can share their enthusiasm. Anybody who listened to the youngest of them, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis), the other day, cannot help but be persuaded that the level of debates and activity in this House is going to be lifted by this youth and its new ideas. But this phrase—“the encompassing participation of our younger people”.

Mr. Speaker, you used to be a school teacher. Canada is a land of ex-school teachers. We have all, at one time or another, been in this profession; I invite you to ponder for a moment. What does “encompassing participation” mean?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I can explain it.

Mr. MacDonald: What?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I had something to do with writing that.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, did the hon. Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In our various political organizations, we all have young people working for us; and here we have these young people, Mr. Speaker, taking the all-encompassing participation by entering this Chamber and taking part in the legislative function, as well as sitting back and assisting somebody else, to take part in that legislative function. I think that is encompassing, and I think it is participation, and that is what we meant.

Mr. MacDonald: Very good. I would suggest that the next time we have our Throne Speech we have footnotes to explain the meaning of words such as these so that we might have at least some idea. I tell you—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not consider this trivial. I thought you said it was long.

Mr. MacDonald: I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, I had begun to suspect, as I pondered exactly what this means, that the only place where it might aptly be applied was to the rather "leatherly" lunge and playful interjections of the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Letherby). It seemed to me that "encompassing participation of youth" — that rather vague phrase — rather neatly summed up his interventions. However, I describe this as being in the nature of trivia and I want to get on to somewhat more serious matters.

Mr. Speaker, I said a moment ago I do not intend to deal with these 40 points in our Throne Speech, not even to deal with department after department in the fashion that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) has done, because there will be opportunities later in the House to do this. What I want to do this afternoon is to deal in some detail with two areas of major concern. But before I do that, Mr. Speaker, I want to revert for a moment to a debate that we had in this House just a day or so ago on the question of election expenses.

I want to return to that debate because I think this is a very important issue. It is not a new issue, it is part of the whole under-world of politics. We have discussed it many times in this House.

A growing number of people, including even some members on the government side of the House, pay lip service to the need for reform, disclosure, removal of the behind-the-scenes influences which negate so much of the democratic process. But I could not help but notice, Mr. Speaker, as I sat in my seat here during the debate that week, the attitude of many of those on the Cabinet benches.

There was a sort of lighthearted cynicism about the whole matter; their attitude was a combination of smugness and mild-mannered defiance. In effect, they were saying to us on this side: We are on the top of the heap; it is obvious that we had all the money we needed for the election but what can you in the Opposition do about it other than complain? Well, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): That is their attitude.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not know what we can do about it—if the government is determined to sit tight and do nothing about it. But there is a crying need for providing the public with a clear indication of what actually does go on in the field of election funds.

Without such detailed information it is apparent that there is not even a willingness to face up to the issue and I want therefore this afternoon to give to the House and the public just one glimpse.

I am going to read, into the record of the House, a statement of claim. This is a public document, on file at Osgoode Hall for anyone who wants to go and read it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: It is missing, as a matter of fact.

Mr. MacDonald: Of course, very few people will have an opportunity to read it. They may not even know that it is there for their perusal, so I think it deserves wider circulation so that the public can ponder its significance. But before I go any further, Mr. Speaker, may I just emphasize this so that there can be no misunderstanding on the part of anyone not fully familiar with legal procedure.

A statement of claim merely represents a set of allegations advanced by a plaintiff, who feels that he has been dealt with unjustly. They are, as yet, not even evidence; it will be the responsibility of the court to hear the evidence and ultimately render judgment on its validity. But the statement of claim is the basis upon which legal action is initiated; and I repeat that what I am about to read is a public document available to anybody at Osgoode Hall, file number 5483.

I shall read this statement of claim without any explanatory comments, because it speaks for itself. I shall omit the names of the Cabinet Minister and the top party officials who were involved because we are not interested in the persons but rather the principles and the practice involved and what is alleged to have happened here.

Mr. Sopha: We have found it.

Mr. MacDonald: In case there is any doubt about it, this is not the one that disappeared from Osgoode Hall. I happen to have had this in my files since the time it was filed, as I shall indicate in a moment, back last November. The missing one disappeared last week, as I understand it. There it is, and I repeat I am now going to read it merely with the substitution of "Cabinet Minister" and "top party official" for the names of the political figures involved.

Mr. Sopha: John Doe and Richard Row.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO BETWEEN

JAMES NEAL McDOWELL plaintiff and

MELCHERS DISTILLERIES LIMITED and SARTO MARCHAND and JULES THIBAudeau
defendants

STATEMENT OF CLAIM

(writ issued the 6th day of September,
A.D. 1963.)

1. The plaintiff is Ontario sales manager for the defendant, Melchers Distilleries Limited and by contract with the defendant corporation receives an annual salary payable bi-monthly.

2. The defendant, Melchers Distilleries Limited is a limited company engaged in the manufacture and sale of spirits throughout the Dominion of Canada and elsewhere and has its head office situate at the city of Montreal, in the province of Quebec.

3. The defendant, Sarto Marchand is president of the defendant Melchers Distilleries Limited and the defendant Jules Thibaudeau is a vice-president of the defendant Melchers Distilleries Limited and is in charge of marketing throughout the Dominion of Canada.

4. On or about the 12th day of January, 1962, the defendant Sarto Marchand gave in cash a large sum of money to one, Mr. X, a top party official, known as an influential member of the Progressive-Conservative Party of Ontario, to secure his influence in government circles and with one, Mr. Y, a Cabinet Minister, and a Progressive-Conservative member of the Provincial Legislature, to advance the interest of the defendant, Melchers Distilleries Limited.

Mr. Sopha: No wonder they want it stricken out. It is scandalous.

Mr. MacDonald: To continue—

5. The circumstances surrounding the passing of the monies mentioned in paragraph four herein and the reasons therefore were explained to the plaintiff by the defendants Sarto Marchand and Jules Thibaudeau with instructions to him to secure such advantages on behalf of the defendant, Melchers Distilleries Limited as he was able to do through the intervention of the aforementioned top party official.

6. On or about the 9th day of August, 1963, the defendant, Jules Thibaudeau, informed the plaintiff that the aforementioned top party official had demanded of the defendants, Jules Thibaudeau and Sarto Marchand, the sum of $12,000, as a donation to the Progressive-Conservative Party to assist the party in the then impending provincial election. At this time the defendant, Jules Thibaudeau informed the plaintiff that the defendants, Jules Thibaudeau and Sarto Marchand, had decided to instruct the plaintiff to give to the top party official the sum of $12,000 in cash, on behalf of themselves and the defendant corporation to secure advantages for the defendant corporation.

7. The plaintiff refused to give any monies whatsoever—

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I would ask your ruling, sir—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member state his point of order?

Mr. Sopha: I would ask your ruling, sir, whether this offends the rules of this House. The hon. member is reading from a document which is part of the court records in regard to a case that is now before the courts and, as such, might be sub judice. I rise because I know that the hon. member in reading these, does not take the responsibility for the truth of these allegations. He merely asserts them. As such, sir, I submit to you that he offends the rules and in fact the dignity of the House.

Mr. Speaker: This is a very difficult ruling to make at this time. The hon. member has mentioned the point, of course, which is in order, that anything before the courts must be decided by the courts before it can be brought before the House and therefore should not be mentioned in the House. I would reserve any further remarks on the subject, however, until I become acquainted with the subject matter. I would ask the hon. member to proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe I had finished paragraph four.

5. The circumstances surrounding the passing of the monies mentioned in paragraph four herein and the reasons therefore were explained to the plaintiff by the defendants Sarto Marchand and Jules Thibaudeau with instructions to him to secure such advantages on behalf of the defendant, Melchers Distilleries Limited as he was able to do through the intervention of the aforementioned top party official.

6. On or about the 9th day of August, 1963, the defendant, Jules Thibaudeau, informed the plaintiff that the aforementioned top party official had demanded of the defendants, Jules Thibaudeau and Sarto Marchand, the sum of $12,000, as a donation to the Progressive-Conservative Party to assist the party in the then impending provincial election.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid because of the interruption I find I am now repeating. Perhaps we can correct it, or it can remain as it is if you so desire, the correct sequence. I shall continue, as I was here, Mr. Speaker, so that you can eliminate if you desire the sequence in the record.

At this time the defendant, Jules Thibaudeau, informed the plaintiff that the defendants Jules Thibaudeau and Sarto Marchand had decided to instruct the plaintiff to give to the top party official the sum of $12,000 in cash on behalf of themselves and the defendant corporation to secure advantages for the defendant corporation.

7. The plaintiff refused to give any monies whatsoever to the said top party official on behalf of the defendant corporation.

8. As a result of the plaintiff's refusal to engage in political pay-off on behalf of the defendant corporation, he was discharged and ordered to report to the head office of the defendant corporation.

9. The defendants brought to Toronto one Lieutenant-Colonel William W. G. Darling, an employee of the defendant corporation in the western provinces of Canada, as the plaintiff's new superior in charge of the Ontario operations of the defendant corporation.

10. The aforementioned Lieutenant-Colonel William W. G. Darling and the defendant Sarto Marchand met the said top party official at the city of Toronto and gave to the said top party official the sum of $12,000 in cash on behalf of the defendants herein as demanded by the said top party official.

11. On or about August 15, 1963, when the plaintiff reported to the defendants at the head office of the defendant corporation, he was told that his contract of employment with the defendant corporation was varied to reduce his salary 25 per cent and that the aforementioned Lieutenant-Colonel William W. G. Darling was in charge of the Ontario operations and would relieve the plaintiff of any dealings with the top party official.

12. The plaintiff states, and the fact is that the defendants conspired together, the one with the other and with others unknown, to maliciously, vindictively, wantonly and wilfully reduce the plaintiff's salary with the defendant corporation.

13. Relative to the plaintiff's claim for punitive or exemplary damages, the plaintiff states that the remuneration of his contract of employment was reduced by a malicious, vindictive and evil conspiracy of the defendants to punish him for his refusal to participate in the defendant's conspiracy to effect an unlawful purpose, to wit: to conspire together the one with the other to give money to a person having or pretending to have influence with the government or with a Minister of the government or an official of the government to secure from persons co-operation, assistance, or exercise of influence on behalf of the defendants herein.

14. The plaintiff therefore claims: (a) general damages in the amount of $50,000; (b) punitive damages in the amount of $200,000; (c) his cost of this action; (d) such further and other relief as to this Honourable Court may appear just.

The plaintiff proposes that this action be tried at the city of Toronto, in the county of York, in the province of Ontario.

Delivered at Toronto, this 9th day of September A.D. 1963, by Messrs. Humphrey, Locke and Marzec, 3 Sultan Street, Toronto 5, Ontario, solicitors for the plaintiff herein.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the end of my reading the document. I have reason to believe that there is further evidence beyond what is included in this statement to substantiate the allegations contained therein. But I shall not attempt to deal with it on the basis of hearsay.

There are a few other details that the House should have. The writ in this case was issued on September 6, 1963. It was delivered to the defendants or their lawyers on September 9. A motion was filed on September 30 by the defendants' lawyers alleging that paragraphs four, five, eight and ten were scandalous and that they therefore should be stricken from the statement of claim because they would tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay a fair trial. For some reason or other, though that motion was filed on September 30, it has not been dealt with. The record indicates that consideration of it has been postponed sine die.

Furthermore though the writ was issued on September 6 and the statement of claim was delivered on September 9, it was not filed in Osgoode Hall, where it would become a public document, until November 29, 1963. Again the reasons for this considerable delay are a matter of conjecture.

Finally, in spite of the serious nature of the allegations contained in the statement of claim, allegations that would seem to merit a prompt answer, no counterclaim had been filed when I checked with Osgoode Hall a couple of days ago. There are rumours that pressure is being brought to bear to have the matter settled out of court.

In the public interest, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this will not happen. For too long we have been in need of authoritative information on this important question of election funds, where they come from and for what purpose they are given. Here, if the courts are given an opportunity to hear these charges, may be useful information for our guidance in this Legislature as we debate the need for legislation with regard to election funds.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I assume that the hon. member is now about to go on to another subject and I did not rise before this because I did not want a finger pointed at me or at any hon. member on this side of the House that there was to be any attempt to stifle discussion of any subject, but I think in view of the bitterness that could arise out of the court document that has just been read by the hon. member for York South, that I should draw your attention, at least, to clause B of rule 1 of the rules of this House, where it is provided that the Speaker in making his ruling shall have reference to the rules, usages and forms of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom, presently in force.

You, sir, I believe, have indicated that you are taking the question of whether the hon. member for York South was in order, brought to your attention by the hon. member for Sudbury, under consideration until tomorrow before making a decision.

May I draw your attention to page 457 of the 16th edition of Sir Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice. This is a quotation, sir, that has come before this House many times in the past, a quotation that is well known, I am sure, to the hon. member for York South and which should show that what he has just done is not only quite out of order but I would submit to you, quite despicable under the circumstances. And I quote at page 457:

Matters awaiting the adjudication of a court of law should not be brought forward in debate.

This rule in English parliamentary practice has been honoured long before the time of Sir Robert Peel, and enforced many times in England, in Westminster, as well as in our own House of Commons at Ottawa, and many times before in this House.

Sir, may I submit to you that you should delay your judgment no longer but you should immediately rule that the matter that has been referred to by the hon. member should not have been stated by him. I certainly believe he knew this at the time, but it is not a matter for delay any longer.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would urge you to investigate this rather carefully, because I can assure you that I did not decide to read this record to the House without having carefully sought legal advice. My legal advice was that it could be read into the record of the House—it is a public document available to anybody who wants to view it down at Osgoode Hall. It has been referred to at considerable length in newspapers. It was referred to at considerable length—last night I happened to see it myself—in television news commentary over channel 11 from Hamilton.

This document is a public document and I think it is in the interests of this House to know what they and any citizen could go down and read. I have clearly indicated the nature of the document—the fact that it is not even evidence as yet. But this is the kind of document that I think this House should be aware of and hon. members could have gone down and read it themselves. Any citizen of this province can go down and read it himself.

I would suggest that to advance the kind of argument that the hon. member for St. George has done is in effect an effort to keep this information from the public. That is his intent.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the point of order?

The point of the hon. member for St. George is extremely well taken. I do not elaborate that, Mr. Speaker. But the rule, sir, has its foundation based on the fact that the courts, as a separate and independent arm of government, have the right to adjudicate upon matters before them and come in their judicial discretion to a decision before any comment is made about the matter in the other arm of government, which we are.

The hon. member for York South misses the point, Mr. Speaker. The point is simply this, and even the most obtuse can understand it. Any person may go to Osgoode Hall and file a statement of claim making the most scandalous allegations in it. There is no truth in those allegations until a court has said so. These have not been tried and until they are, then who is to say that the things said in that statement of claim have any grain of probity or verity in them? Therefore, sir, in coming here and reading them and not taking the responsibility for their truth—which he never does—he offends against our dignity and the dignity of Parliament.

I would ask you, sir, to tell him this, so that in the next four years he might desist in the conduct to which we became accustomed from him in the last four years, and before that.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank the members for their observations on this point of order. My original intention was not to stop the member from going ahead with his speech. I thought that I would look over some of the publications that deal with points of order which I do not have at my disposal at the desk, and if I find that the member was out of order, I may have the remarks stricken from the record.

I now rule that the member desist from pursuing this subject further until I do make a ruling in the morning. In the meantime I shall become acquainted with the evidence before the courts. If all the evidence has been heard and a decision made in the courts, then of course the member would be in order. But I shall look over the matter tonight and become more acquainted with the subject and give my ruling in the morning.

In the meantime, I would ask the member to proceed with other portions of his address.

Mr. MacDonald: Well Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of discussing this matter any further.

The first major area that I wanted to discuss, Mr. Speaker, ultimately comes to bear on issues that are before this House, but in reality it is an overriding discussion in the public life of this country, this province and this country at the present time. It might be put under the heading of the whole nature and purpose of political parties in Canada.

We have been hearing a great deal about all political parties having their difficulties of one kind or another, perhaps more than is normally the case. I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, at the outset, that the old two-party system in Canada has obviously broken down. If one goes, for example, to the three western provinces we find that there they have forsaken, virtually forsaken, the old two-party system. In the province of Saskatchewan, in the province of Alberta, in the province of British Columbia, the Conservative Party has virtually no seats, or no seats at all, and in many instances have not had any for years.

In Quebec, provincial parties always exert varying degrees of independence from federal parties. The federal Liberals, even with all the advantages they enjoyed in the last election—advantages of a monopoly of press support, for example, in the metropolitan area, or the virtual disintegration, following the Cabinet revolt of the Conservative Party in the February prior to the election itself—in spite of all of those advantages they could not come back with a majority.

As for the federal Conservatives, at the moment they are on the eve of an annual meeting to be held in Ottawa in which the most intriguing thing about it is that they finally have become victims of their own undemocratic procedures. The main problem is that there is obviously a considerable body of opinion within the party that does not want Mr. Diefenbaker as the leader. But in an old party, the Liberals as well as Conservatives, a party is the leader until he decides he wants to leave. In the phraseology of Mr. Diefenbaker: "There is no leadership convention, I haven't resigned". It is as simple as that.

This is reminiscent of those years from 1946 to 1949 or so when there were growing rumblings in the Liberal Party with regard to Mr. Mackenzie King hanging on. But until Mr. Mackenzie King decided that there was going to be a leadership convention, there was no leadership convention.

Well it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that here is evidence all across the country, in one form or another, in varying degrees, varying emphasis from province to province, of a decline of the old two-party system. Now there is a popular conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there is a popular conclusion drawn from this that the blame for the political instability and the minority government situation that tends to emerge should be fixed on the so-called splinter parties, the new parties.

Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to you that the blame does not rest with the new parties, the so-called splinter parties. It rests with the old parties. No new party can emerge with any seats if it is not getting a response from the people in a democracy, and the simple fact of the matter is in the last election that the parties that were not of the old two-party system gathered votes in the nature of about one and three-quarter millions in this country. So clearly there is a great and growing feeling among the people in this country that they are increasingly dissatisfied and disillusioned with the old two-party system.

Now the usual suggestion that emerges when you are discussing this kind of thing, Mr. Speaker, is that this situation can be remedied by a rather simple expedient, the expedient of patching up the old parties, of merging the new parties with the old parties. It usually takes the form, Mr. Speaker, that the New Democratic Party should get together with the Liberals and the Social Credit Party should get together with the Conservatives.

Well, if one pauses for just a moment, I think one can imagine the reaction of Davie Fulton in B.C. at the thought that the Conservatives and the Social Credit should get together. Again I would suggest that without any great stretching of imagination, one can figure the sleepless nights that Ross Thatcher would quite rightly suffer in the province of Saskatchewan if this kind of an idea were advocated.

Because the historic fact, Mr. Speaker, is this, that in the variety of parties that have emerged in Canada, whenever there was a tendency for them to get together, almost without exception that tendency was manifested in a coalition, if not a merger, of the Liberal and the Conservative parties. There is so much evidence to this, that one cannot deny it or dispute it.

In British Columbia in the year 1941, when the CCF emerged as the largest single party in terms of popular votes, what happened? The Liberals and the Conservatives had no difficulty in getting together in a coalition, a sort of a marriage out of wedlock. And as so often happens under circumstances like this, after they have lived in the condition for some 10 years, they ruined both of their reputations and others moved in, so that they are virtually out.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Any offspring?

Mr. MacDonald: Not that I am aware of—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No family allowances?

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact, I suspect that maybe the appropriate comment for the hon. Minister of Health's interjection is that the offspring of that alliance was the Social Credit Party in B.C., and if so I think the word usually designated for such an offspring would be highly appropriate.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, Manitoba. In 1941, the CCF party emerged as the largest single party in Manitoba. What happens? The Liberals and Conservatives got together in a coalition. In the province of Saskatchewan at the present time, the leader of the Liberal Party is doing his level best—I understand from news accounts with some little difficulty—to achieve, if not a merger, at least some sort of an election alliance with the Conservative Party across the province of Saskatchewan.

If we come back to our own province of Ontario, we, as we have often reminded this House in the past, can recall occasions, such as the ridings of Timiskaming and South Cochrane in the election of 1955, when it became the objective, the over-riding objective, of mining and other local interests in that community to defeat the CCF members who had sat there for many years. There was no difficulty for the Liberals and the Conservatives to get together, with the Liberals staying out of the picture so that the Conservatives won.

If you think, Mr. Speaker, that this kind of thing has come to an end, I was very interested to learn from one of my colleagues that in the last two or three months he happened to be in a discussion with the mayor of Timmins who was the Liberal candidate in the federal election last April. And, quite frankly and openly and unabashedly, the mayor of Timmins said that in the provincial election six months later he supported the Conservative candidate in that area because he wanted to defeat the New Democrat. So this kind of thing—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, what is wrong with that? What is wrong with that?

Mr. MacDonald: I am only pointing to the historic facts that when we have alliances in Canada, the alliance has usually been between the Liberal and Conservative parties. Indeed, maybe the most interesting one of all in this country—this is one that I hope one of our historians some time will really dig into—was in the province of Nova Scotia, years ago, where the Conservative Party had actually disappeared completely. The House was made up of so many Liberals, all except two seats in the Opposition, with the two CCF members from Cape Breton. It was interesting to watch Liberal Cabinet ministers get up and plead for the good old Conservative Party to revive itself to establish the old two-party system.

My hon. friend, the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young), was familiar with Nova Scotia at that time and could give hon. members the intimate details.

And do you know what they did, Mr. Speaker? This is the bit of research I would like somebody to dig into. They had a redistribution and, in order to fulfill the pleadings of Liberal Cabinet ministers that the Conservative Party should revive themselves, when they redistributed the seats they carved out five or six safe Conservative seats and when the next election was held, as some people in the know indicated in advance, they came back as Conservative seats created by the Liberal government.

The irony of it is that having been given a beachhead, the Conservatives have now gone on to be the government and the Liberals are in just as sad a plight now in Nova Scotia as the Conservatives were back at that date, or almost as badly.

But the essential point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that history underlines that when parties seek alliances and mergers in this country, the consistent pattern—there are exceptions here and there—has been a coalition and merging of the Liberal and Conservative parties.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Does the hon. member think we should change that?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, these suggestions of getting the new parties to get together with one of the old parties to try to deal with the inadequacies of the old party system and the consequent disillusion that is growing up in the electorate, I want to suggest to you is a patching-up process. It is not coming to grips with the fundamental problem and it will not correct the basic situation which created the new parties in the first instance.

And why, Mr. Speaker? I hope it is not considered by hon. members of the House to be an unwarranted digression, but I want to take hon. members back in history, in the hope that we can get a clear picture, at least as I see it—I do not ask them to agree with me, but I think this is a topic that we should consider—I want to take them back to take a look at how political parties developed in this country.

Political parties in this country, Mr. Speaker, are the product of Confederation.

They were the creation of that architect of Confederation, Sir John A. Macdonald. Prior to Confederation, political parties, as we understand them today, did not exist. You had loose collections of individuals that kept shuffling into varying coalitions. Many of them were very little more than personal followings of great men of the day, like Cartier and Galt and George Brown. When Confederation was established, Sir John A. Macdonald recognized that if this nation was going to survive he would have to build a political party which would underpin the government—which could give to the nation the kind of political stability that it did not have in the years prior to 1867.

So he sought to build this kind of political party, not on the basis of principle—and this is the point we have got to emphasize—not on any basis of principle, but by getting together as broad a collection of groups and individuals and interests as might provide a base for a political party in this country. And one would have to agree that that political master did a pretty good job. He was able to bring into the same political fold, the Loyal Orange Lodge and the Catholic Church, and that was something of an achievement. He was able to bring into the same political fold, labour and management. That maybe was not as great an achievement back in those days, because there was not as much political consciousness on the part of labour. And being a fairly adept politician he did not need very many more assists than he got from George Brown, because when George Brown had a strike in the Globe, down on King Street, and he locked out his men for a considerable time, it did not take Sir John A. long to recognize that politically it was a smart thing for him to espouse the cause of the striking worker. He did this and he got a reputation of being a friend of the working man, a reputation which he consolidated later in his great national policy the purposes of which he said were to meet both the needs of management and workers in the nation as a whole.

In fact, it was not until the year 1878, Mr. Speaker—and this is a very interesting point that is not realized today many times—that when the votes were counted on election night it was possible to clearly designate into which party each man who had been elected would go. It was only then that parties had achieved the kind of discipline, or political cohesion, as we understand it today in political parties.

Prior to that, when elections were finished you always were uncertain as to what were the political affiliations, or the possible political affiliations, of a considerable group of independents. In fact, as one reads the history of the day, you will find that Sir John A. had some rather critical names for them; he referred to them on one occasion, for example, as being "slippery fellows". On another occasion, he said that the problem was not in buying them, the problem was in keeping them bought, as the leaders attempted to get enough of these individuals together to form a party that could underpin a government.

I repeat: Sir John A. Macdonald, as the architect of Confederation, built this kind of a party, a party built in the North American tradition of parties, not on principle but seeking to bring together in accordance with the lowest common denominator, as wide a collection of groups with their varying economic, religious, cultural and other interests. As long as he was in the picture, and there was no effort to duplicate the kind of thing he had done, the Conservative Party was virtually supreme.

Oh, I know back in 1872 they had a scandal. Back in those days, when a government was involved in a scandal the people tossed them out.

The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) was shocked the other day at the heading that was put on that article in Maclean's Magazine but, without going into the detail of all that, there is a considerable amount of evidence to suggest today that people are not disturbed by scandals even when they are solidly documented at election time. Back in those days they did.

Sir John A. went out, despite his stature in the nation, because of the Pacific scandal but he came back because the Liberal Party was not organized, did not have a policy, did not have the kind of base Sir John A. had built.

But Sir Wilfrid Laurier knew that if he was going to build an effective party in this nation, he must duplicate what Sir John A. did. History records many occasions when Sir Wilfrid acknowledged his idol—his model perhaps is a more appropriate word—in seeking to build a political party, was Sir John A. Macdonald. He started to build that party, bringing together interests from the Maritimes, from Quebec, from Ontario, from western Canada and, by the close of the century, he had built it to the point of being elected.

So, at the end of the century, we had two parties in Canada, both of them claiming allegiance across the nation; neither of them with any great principle to which they were dedicated; whatever difference there may have been in their principles had already begun to disappear. Indeed, by the turn of the century, it had for practical purposes disappeared.

There were two parties built in the North American tradition of parties, parties without differences between them; and therefore, Mr. Speaker, the interesting thing is that the inevitable differences that emerged between groups in the country were ironed out, not between the parties but within each party, within their caucus.

For example, to illustrate my point, if the western farmer felt that his needs were not being met adequately, whether he was a Liberal or whether he was a Conservative, he raised the issue in the caucus of his party. And if he found, for example, that this issue was one that tended to encroach upon the interests of the dominant group in each party, namely the business interests in eastern Canada, then his needs were not met. He found that he had to accept the decision of the caucus without any public discussion of it.

The result is, Mr. Speaker, that you had minority interests continually being sacrificed within the structure of each of the old parties to the dominant interest, which was the same dominant interest in each instance, the business interests of eastern Canada.

At one time this meant nothing but, as we moved into the twentieth century with the development of the war and the post-war years, as farm communities became more politically conscious, because of what they felt were injustices; as labour developed in the industrialization of Canada in the first World War—here were two major minority groups who increasingly felt that their interests were not being met; rather that were being sacrificed to the dominant interests of both old parties. Therefore these minority groups became politically conscious.

The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that in the province of Ontario, at a very early stage in the year 1919, these two minority interests became so big that they actually formed the government, the first farmer-labour government in the country.

What I have just described here, Mr. Speaker—if I may get back to the current issue that is being discussed in this country about the merger of parties—is that, for reasons that I have outlined, a relentless succession of third parties have developed in this country. Some of them were farm parties, some of them were labour parties, some of them were farmer-labour parties, some of them were socialist parties, some of them like the progressive movement in the 1920s suddenly became the official Opposition in the federal House of Commons.

All of them rose, but all of them were relatively narrowly-based, within province or region at best, and they did not seek more broadly for political allies. Having risen and popularized some issue then one of the old parties considered it politically smart to latch on to the issue so the party tended to disappear. When the depression struck in 1929, there were on the Canadian scene remnants of literally dozens of political parties that had emerged — from the miners of Cape Breton to the coal miners and the socialist parties in the ferment of the west coast of Canada.

They came together in the CCF in 1932 and, for some 25 to 30 years, they were on the scene in this country. Then, in 1961, for reasons that I do not need to go into here, those who were involved in it, and others who were willing to come into the picture, decided that they would discard that particular organization and they would create a new party, the New Democratic Party.

I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker—in a very real way that cannot be disputed from history—that the New Democratic Party is the culmination in the 1960s of the progressive tradition in Canadian politics, whether it be in the farm, the labour, or the progressive movement.

Against that background, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to consider the proposition of the advisability of a party with those roots, with those objectives, merging with one of the older parties from which they had originally broken away. Obviously it is unthinkable. It is unthinkable because to do so would be to betray the sacrifice, the devotion, the dedication of countless hundreds of thousands of people across this country who have sought to build a party of the democratic left, free of the dominant interests in each of the old parties.

To do so would not solve the problem of the multiplicity of parties that we have got at the present time in Canada—a problem which seems to worry and preoccupy some people, because I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, as surely as the sun will rise tomorrow morning, that if the New Democratic Party were to merge with any other party, of the older parties, tomorrow morning a group involving a considerable portion of the membership of the New Democratic Party, and a considerable proportion of those who vote for the New Democratic Party, would set themselves to the task of building another one. They would do so because of the basic validity of having a party that is not constantly, when the chips are down, under the domination of the business interests that dominate both of the old parties.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: Sounds like a convention speech.

Mr. MacDonald: No, I never give this at a convention. When I am talking to the convention I am talking to people who understand this; that is why they are there. I would not need to carry coals to Newcastle. I do not think I can persuade the hon. member over there but I think this is important enough that I hope he will follow and ponder my remarks, even though he is not persuaded by them.

Mr. Sopha: If we merge, the hon. member will have to go to Baffin Island.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: What the hon. member for Sudbury is saying is that he does not want them, and we do not want them either.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, just let me pause to make another comment on political parties in general, because I think political parties in the North American tradition are not parties with any basic philosophy or principle, but rather a loosely-knit collection of groups and individuals—economic, political, ethnic, and so on. The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that political parties in the British tradition have not been built that way.

Political parties in the British tradition have always been built on the basic difference in principle. Back in the last century, it was the Whigs and the Tories. And when the differences between the Whigs and the Tories disappeared to the point that they were really identical—as for example, the Liberal and Conservative parties were in the early stages of this century—then what happened in Britain, with a really miraculous speed indicative of the flexibility and the sensitivity of the British political system, is that one of the parties passed from the scene. The Labour Party emerged to re-establish a difference between the parties.

So, at election time, the people are not choosing just between Tweedledum and Tweedledee; they are choosing between parties that have an essential difference.

Therefore the people have a real choice in policies and principles, and not just a choice of administrators, as to who is going to be exercising power on behalf of the same dominant group behind the scenes.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Pretty radical stuff.

Mr MacDonald: That is not very radical; this is the essence of political science, for anybody who has looked into it. Not radical in the slightest.

Can this kind of tradition be built in Canada, Mr. Speaker? Now those who are not members of the New Democratic Party will say the history of the efforts of these parties down through the years suggests no. All I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, is that those of us who are engaged in the New Democratic Party are convinced that it can, and that it is in the interests of the political life of Canada that we should continue to strive to achieve in Canada a rational realignment of political forces so that you do have a party of the democratic right on one hand and a party of the democratic left on the other.

And if there is to be a rational realignment of forces, it certainly means that there are people now in the Liberal Party—and I will talk about them and some of their views in a moment—who ideologically do belong within a party such as the New Democratic Party seeks to be. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I will say this: There are people in the Conservative party who ideologically speaking belong in a party such as the New Democratic Party seeks to be. There are progressives in the Conservative Party and there are liberals in the Liberal Party who, if we are going to achieve a rational realignment of political forces in Canada, as happened for example in Great Britain, will be on the democratic left.

The objective of these progressive forces down through the years, Mr. Speaker, has been twofold. All those who have been building these new parties, and are still determined to do so, pursue these two objectives. One, to achieve the social needs of the day; things which the parties in power, one or other of the old parties, was not willing to entertain. Inevitably they began by opposing, then ultimately they were persuaded to accept these needs. Every major piece of social legislation that has been put on the statute book in Canada in the last generation was first introduced in the House of Commons either by J. S. Woodsworth or by the CCF after it first came into being. In the first instance, this legislation was opposed by Liberal and Conservative parties. Ultimately the public education job was done to the point that they accepted it and they went out and they got votes on it, claiming it as their own.

Fine! The people of Canada benefited. Canada is a finer country to live in because these political pioneers were fighting for these things. Why should the efforts and the capacity to continue this fight be frustrated by losing, so to speak, the force of these political pioneers in one of the old parties where they too will become subject to the dominant force in the old party?

The second objective—and this maybe was not so much a conscious objective—would be, Mr. Speaker, that in maintaining a party of the democratic left, even if it is a party which has not yet succeeded in achieving its objectives, you have a nucleus around which form all those progressive forces that really want to build an effective party.

Now let me illustrate this, Mr. Speaker, just as I conclude this portion of my remarks, by dealing with a few issues. For example, this issue of Medicare. I am not going to go back over what we have discussed before in the debates in this House, but the government, Mr. Speaker, is obviously determined to dig its heels in on behalf of a Medicare programme with limited coverage, voluntary, that is not going to meet the needs of all of the people. This is their right.

In so doing, they are flying in the face of the experience in almost every country of the western world, they are choosing to turn a blind eye to the kind of experience that has already emerged in western Canada. This is their right, this is the kind of policy one would expect from a Tory party. At least they are being true to their principles.

But surely, Mr. Speaker, there is need in this country for a party that knows what the alternative is and is going to continue to fight without vacillating on the level of policy day in and day out; and that is what the New Democratic Party has done.

We welcomed the Liberal support of our motion on Monday. But I must say, and I do not want to say this provocatively, to my hon. friends of the Liberal Party, that it was just a little bit amusing to hear the speech of the hon. member for Parkdale, who three or four years ago—I think it was 1960 or 1961—introduced a resolution in this House calling for a province-wide prepaid kind of a plan for medical insurance. We could not discover exactly what kind of a plan it was going to be—worked out with the insurance companies or publicly operated, something in the nature of our hospital services commission. So we in the CCF of that day—it was back in 1960 because it was still the CCF—we moved an amendment, a simple little amendment of injecting the words “government-sponsored plan”.

And do hon. members remember what happened? The Liberals voted with the Tories against our amendment.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Against their own motion.

Mr. MacDonald: Against their own motion, to kill it.

Now what I want to say—and I say it in all kindness, but with firmness, to the hon. member for Parkdale—if he really believes in the policy that he stated yesterday, why did he permit his basic convictions and beliefs to be subjected, be prostituted to the dominant interests of the Liberal Party for four years? That is what he has done. Now I do not say it critically of him, except let us stop being naive—that is what will happen again.

It is all very well, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. member for Parkdale to accuse this government, for example, of not proceeding with its health plans. It is a little difficult not to be provocative on this point, because the Liberal Party mapped that plan out in 1919 and had not fulfilled it in 1957—why? Why? Because the dominant interests in the Liberal Party are opposed to health insurance, just as the dominant interests at the present time are making a pretty masterful job of emasculating the pension plan that the Hon. Judy La Marsh thought was going to be brought in.

This is what you have got to face up to. I say to the hon. member for Parkdale, I will say it to anybody: If you are really interested in building a party which is not going to be subjected to the influence of the slush funds of the central office, which he frankly admitted was the case in a speech a week or so ago, when are you going to follow the logic of your argument and face the fact that within the Liberal Party the best you will get is a fraction of what presumably you want?

Mr. Trotter: The hon. member is talking like a desperate man.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not talking like a desperate man. I am talking like a man who at least has a clear conscience. And here let me interject this, because one of the comments I will admit disturbs me when I hear it being made, because I think it is false, is the argument that when we in the New Democratic Party say that we believe in this and are going to fight it, somehow or other we have a holier-than-thou approach, we think we have the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Mr. Speaker, surely there is a difference between thinking through a problem and coming to a solution and having a conviction on it, than being so waffling on it that you have three policies in the same year. If it is holier-than-thou and dogmatic to think through a problem and say: This is where I stand and I intend to stick to it, then I concede that I am dogmatic and doctrinaire. But if the opposite is to have four policies such as the hon. member has had in the last four or five years on Medicare, then he is welcome to it, whether he thinks it is non-dogmatic, non-doctrinaire or what you will.

I will say to you, Mr. Speaker, that anyone who wants to examine the operations of the New Democratic Party will find that in the party we have annual conventions precisely because we are so open-minded that we want our members to have the opportunity to change policies at least once a year, if circumstances are such that they think there should be a change.

And every time we have a convention it is a leadership convention. You do not have the kind of frustration you find in the Tory ranks today, for example, with a man they do not want as a federal leader; but they cannot do anything about it, simply because he has not resigned.

An hon. member: Who said that?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, maybe the hon. member is happy but there are a lot in his party who do not share his view; it is obvious.

Indeed, as I have said, Mr. Speaker, once already in this decade we have shown that we are undocrinaire, that we were willing to discard one organizational form, the CCF, in favour of another one because it was our belief that a new one might be more effective in terms of meeting the needs of the people of Canada.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: If you want, Mr. Speaker, to achieve Medicare, the kind of Medicare which this country needs—if I may revert to that topic—I say to those in the Liberal Party or those in the Conservative Party, any group, any individual, that this is an issue that is worthy of your support—stand up and be counted. You are not going to get it through the Tory Party and you will not get it in the Liberal Party when those who ultimately control the Liberal Party call the tune once again. At the moment they are willing to let Liberal members have their run.

Mr. J. M. Gould (Bracondale): Address the remarks that way! Turn that way!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: He is trying to woo them.

Mr. MacDonald: Take another example, Mr. Speaker. Let us take the question of car insurance.

For 15 years in this House and across this nation we in the New Democratic Party have been subjected to all kinds of misrepresentation of our position—it was socialism, it was this, it was that—because we were arguing three things in car insurance: First, it was nonsense to operate on the basis that we have in the past; rather, that claims should be paid without regard to fault. Secondly, that it was inadequate to have a car insurance programme meeting only the traditional collision and public liability. There are many other consequences that flow from car accidents that should be met, such as, out of work benefits, funeral benefits, and so on. And thirdly, we have said if you are going to achieve this kind of a car insurance programme, that it must be a public car insurance programme provided at cost, sold along with the licence.

The years went by, those years of opposition, maligning and misrepresentation of our policy; but it was interesting to note that in the fullness of time we had a select committee in this House and the select committee has come back with the unanimous recommendation, including all hon. members of all three parties involved. What do they urge? They urge the payment of claims without regard to fault! So instead of being socialist and what-not all down through the years, now presumably we were right and it is recognized.

Secondly, instead of having car insurance policies that were narrowly based, it was recommended that they would be broadened to meet some of these other needs. Now we have a unanimous recommendation from the Liberal and Conservative representatives on the committee that this should be done. Presumably all through the years when they said we were wrong, they now concede we were right.

Significantly, the Liberals and Conservatives again drew the line at having the public car insurance programme. They are still going to leave it with the private insurance companies. But I venture the submission, sir, that in five or ten or fifteen years—I do not know how long it will take—you will find that they were wrong in that too. The costs of car insurance are going to drive them to it just as the costs drove this government to the public operation of hospital insurance.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, I do not know whether there are people in the Liberal Party or in the Conservative Party, who share our views on car insurance. I remember the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), when he was running for the leadership of the party back in 1957, was reported in the papers as saying that he was in favour of two things at that point. One was hospital insurance and the other was car insurance, just as they were in operation in Saskatchewan—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Oh no, no, Mr. Speaker!

On a point of order, that is a complete misstatement of fact. I said a compulsory car insurance programme and a hospital plan; I did not say anything about “just as they were operating in Saskatchewan”. I hope that the record will show that the hon. member for York South is wrong again.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether my files have got that little item in them but if I can find time in the next few days I will see if I can check on it, but I have a distinct recollection of it as happening at that time.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege; I have made a statement in this House and the hon. member is challenging my word.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, after six years the hon. member says that back in 1957 he did not say that. I accept his word.

Mr. Singer: I remember exactly what I said, I thought about it a long time before I said it. How is it the hon. member remembers it so well?

Mr. MacDonald: However, Mr. Speaker, there are other forces, for example, in the Liberal Party, such as, the Toronto Daily Star. I do not know whether the Liberals consider the Toronto Daily Star as a very solid supporter of the Liberal Party any more after the last election, but here is one significant voice in this field that for years has been saying that a public car insurance plan is the best approach. Here is an issue, therefore, where those who believe that this is the answer to the people's needs can get together and we welcome co-operation on an issue like this from whatever source.

I will take another example to illustrate my point. This is the question of economic planning, a vague concept that was dismissed for years. The only party that stood for economic planning for years in this country was the CCF and the New Democratic Party. In the last two or three years, economic planning has become fashionable; everybody is in favour of it, their own particular version of economic planning. But, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to you that in the years that lie ahead, in the 1960s and 70s, if we do not have genuine economic planning to cope with the problems produced in a technological age, then we are going to have a growing hard core of unemployment, we are going to have problems greater than we ever thought we had back in the 1930s. Indeed if we do not have economic planning, Mr. Speaker, you will find that regimentation inherent in the mechanization of an automated society will threaten to create in our midst that spectre of 1984 that George Orwell raised. The only way that you can counter that kind of a development is through genuine democratic economic planning that involves as many people as possible.

As long as people go around paying lip service to the god of free enterprise, and failing to recognize that private enterprise has its role but within a planned economy, then you are not going to be able to meet the problems of the 1960s. Here once again is where there has got to be some re-thinking.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, just to sum it up: Where we have led on Medicare, the other parties have followed. Where we led on car insurance, the other parties are following at least to some degree. Where we led on economic planning, all parties are now at least paying lip service.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is as great a need today as there has been in the past for a party such as the New Democratic Party to do the political pioneering of issues of this nature, and the New Democratic Party is certainly intent on playing that role. But, in doing it, we do not do it in any closed-mindedness or a doctrinaire approach. We say clearly to any group or any individual, Mr. Speaker, wherever they may be, that if they think that Canadian politics is going to be made more effective by a realignment of the political forces in Canada, we welcome their co-operation to build that kind of realignment so that we can give the electors on election day a genuine choice of a democratic party—the democratic right, on the one hand and a party of the democratic left on the other.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Why cannot you get people to your meetings?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to turn—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: The second major topic which I would like to discuss, Mr. Speaker, is one that rises above partisanship. It is the question of Canadian Confederation, Ontario's place in it, the critical issue of relationships with French Canada, indeed all the problems of re-confederation which made up the agenda of the federal-provincial conference in November and others that are scheduled for the future.

One hundred years ago, British North American colonies were so beset with problems that their independent survival was the dominant question in the minds of the leaders of the day. The armed might of the United States, occupied for the moment in bitter civil war, might soon be free to move northward. The domestic politics of the British colonies, notably in Upper and Lower Canada, had reached an impasse that saw four administrations within two years between 1862 and 1864. Politics was paralyzed with what Mackenzie Bowell, writing in the Bellefleur Intelligencer on October 14, 1864, referred to—and I quote: "the petty strife and contentions which formed the staple product of our political warfare".

And then men like Macdonald and Brown, Galt and Cartier, buried their differences in the period of 1864-67 and led the way in delicate negotiations which shaped this nation. As a result, they have had an honoured place in our history as the fathers of Confederation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, today we are faced with the critical problems of re-confederation. In November, a federal-provincial conference was held in Ottawa to begin grappling with these problems. If Canada, as we have known it, is to survive as a nation, this conference will have inaugurated a series of negotiations which may extend from 1964 to 1967. They will be as delicate as those of one hundred years ago. They will require just as great statesmanship; and if they do not succeed, then our centenary in 1967 will turn out to be a wake instead of a celebration.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, before the November conference, there were grave signs that Confederation was doomed. The Toronto Globe and Mail on November 26, the day the conference opened, accurately summed up the growing feeling with a headline which read: "Pearson, Provincial Premiers Meet Head-On in 'Last Chance' Conference".

As so often happened in the critical years prior to Confederation, we seemed hell-bent for disaster. At least one provincial premier was issuing ultimatums, when obviously complex negotiations such as these cannot be solved by ultimatums. Others were making statements that could only divide rather than unite the nation. But when the conference was over, the tensions had eased. Few, if any, of the specific problems were solved in that November conference, but the greatest need of all was met—the creation of an atmosphere within which the problems can now be pursued.

The hon. Prime Minister of Ontario expressed it as the conclusion of the conference, before he headed west for the Grey Cup game, that modern sports symbol of our national unity: "Tough old Canada is going to survive".

If our hon. Prime Minister is correct, and I am confident that it will be the fervent hope of every hon. member that he is, then once again it is time that we Canadians took a good look at ourselves. As a people, we have always tended to lack self-confidence, to be afflicted with an inferiority complex, to downgrade our achievements, when in fact those achievements are memorable even when viewed in terms of world history.

We too often forget, for example, that we have achieved modern nationhood without the necessity of resorting to the violence of civil war, as did the United States, France or even Britain in its earlier history. Oh, I know we have had our rebellions, in 1837, and then the Red River, and out in the Northwest; but relatively speaking, they were minor skirmishes which we have tended to exaggerate in our efforts to keep up with the Joneses in writing our history.

In the same way we have tended to be obsessed with continuing frictions in the relationships between English and French Canada, failing to remember that friction is fairly normal in the pattern of human relationships. We have forgotten to view these continuing problems in the full perspective of the historic achievement which our English-French partnership represents. Most of the world had to wait until the twentieth century, Mr. Speaker, before it recognized what we accepted in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, namely that peoples of divergent religions, cultural and historic backgrounds can and often must work out their own destiny within a single nation.

From the very outset, Confederation was a unique achievement. It was the first time that colonies worked out nationhood among themselves without civil strife and without nationhood being thrust upon them by the mother country. Through that achievement we created a relationship between colony and mother country that ultimately made it possible to transform an empire into a commonwealth.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the remarkable thing is that the fathers of Confederation recognized this, some with an astounding clarity. Sir John A. Macdonald was par excellence the architect of Confederation, once the dies had been cast. But the man who captured the vision of it in words, whose inspiration survives the test of 100 years was not Sir John A. Macdonald, but George Brown.

Writing from Quebec City, where the political leaders of the British colonies were sweating through the 72 resolutions which formed the basis of Confederation, George Brown wrote home to his new wife, Anne, and this is what he said:

It will be a tremendous thing if we can accomplish it. I do not believe any of us appreciate its true importance, the immensity of the work we are engaged in. Perhaps [he mused], some twenty years hence, people will talk of us as they talked of Lord Sydenham, or Lord Durham and the other originators of our old constitutional system. But there is one peculiar thing about our position. There is no other instance on record of a colony peacefully remodelling its constitution.

Such things have always been the work of the parent state, not the colonists themselves. Canada is rightly setting the example of a new and a better state of things.

A few months earlier, in the historic Confederation debates of February and March, 1864, George Brown had lifted the Parliament of the united Canadas to inspirational heights.

Let me give you an example from that speech of his:

One hundred years have passed since these provinces became, by conquest, part of the British Empire. I speak in no boastful spirit—I desire not for a moment to excite a painful thought—what was then the fortune of war of the brave French nation might have been ours in that well-fought field. I recall those olden times merely to mark the fact that here sit today the descendants of the victors and the vanquished in the fight of 1759, with all the differences of language, religion, civil law, and social habit, nearly as distinctly marked as they were a century ago. Here we sit today seeking amicably to find a remedy for constitutional evils and injustice complained of—by the vanquished? No, sir—but complained of by the conquerors!

And at that point there were cheers from the French-Canadian members of the House.

Here sit the representatives of the British population claiming justice—only justice; and here sit the representatives of the French population, discussing in the French tongue whether we shall have it.

One hundred years have passed away since the conquest of Quebec, but here sit the children of the victor and the vanquished, all avowing hearty attachment to the British Crown—all earnestly deliberating how we shall best extend the blessings of British institutions—how a great people may be established on this continent in close and hearty connection with Great Britain. Where, sir, in the pages of history, shall we find a parallel to this? Will it not stand as an imperishable monument to the generosity of British rule? And it is not in Canada alone that this scene is being witnessed.

Four other colonies are at this moment occupied as we are—declaring their hearty love for the parent state, and deliberating with us how they may best discharge the great duty entrusted to their hands and give their aid in developing the teeming resources of these vast possessions. And well, Mr. Speaker, may the work we have unitedly proposed rouse the ambition and energy of every true man in British America.

Look, sir, at the map of the continent of America, and mark that island (Newfoundland) commanding the mouth of the noble river that almost cuts our continent in twain. Well, sir, that island is equal in extent to the kingdom of Portugal. Cross the straits to the mainland, and you touch the hospitable shores of Nova Scotia, a country as large as the kingdom of Greece. Then mark the sister province of New Brunswick, equal in extent to Denmark and Switzerland combined. Pass up the river St. Lawrence to Lower Canada—a country as large as France. Pass on to Upper Canada—twenty thousand square miles larger than Great Britain and Ireland put together. Cross over the continent to the shores of the Pacific, and you are in British Columbia, the land of golden promises—equal in extent to the American Empire. I speak not now of vast Indian territories that lie between—greater in extent than the whole soil of Russia—and that will ere long, I trust, be opened to civilization under the auspices of the British American Confederation.

Well, sir, the bold scheme in your hands is nothing less than to gather all these countries into one—to organize them under one government, with the protection of the British flag, and in heartiest sympathy and affection with our fellow subjects in the land that gave us birth. Our scheme is to establish a government that will seek to turn the tide of European emigration into this northern half of the American continent—that will strive to develop its great natural resources—and that will endeavour to maintain liberty, and justice, and Christianity throughout the land.

That, Mr. Speaker, is an excerpt from the speech of George Broom.

That was the vision which helped our forefathers to shape a nation 100 years ago. They rose above the “petty strife and contentions” which plagued their politics. Ours is the challenge to do the same, to capture that vision once again and reshape it to meet the needs of our day.

Who will the fathers of Confederation be? These will be, with few if any exceptions in the provinces, those who lead the governments today. For most of those governments have mandates which carry through these critical years.

If we are to succeed, one of them must be the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario for Ontario has a vital role to play. If Ontario is to play its key role, then there are some basic problems to which we must face up. These problems should be a matter of public discussion, partly because our leaders cannot move without public support, and partly because there are serious misunderstandings that must be cleared away before we can ease the tensions that are threatening Confederation.

The most serious misunderstanding arises from the widespread opposition throughout Canada, including Ontario, to the proposition that Quebec should demand and have a special place in Canadian Confederation. But, Mr. Speaker, it always has. Without that special place, Canada would never have developed into an independent nation. To deny that special place is, in effect, to attempt at this late date to alter the whole course of history over the past 200 years.

Have we forgotten our history, Mr. Speaker? Consider for a moment. When The Quebec Act was passed in 1774, just 15 years after Wolfe defeated Montcalm on the Plains of Abraham, Britain made a basic decision. It was that she would treat the French Canadians not as a conquered people, but as equals in a new partnership. Within that partnership she granted French Canadians special rights and privileges. If that had not been done, Quebec might well have been caught up in the revolt of the American colonies, then underway, and the basis of an independent nation would have been eliminated at that early stage. In a very real sense, Canada remained British because it was French.

When The Constitutional Act was passed in 1791, creating Upper and Lower Canada, these special privileges were reaffirmed for Quebec. The French Canadians remained loyal to the British connection, and joined with Upper Canada in fighting off the American attacks in the War of 1812-14. For example, in the Niagara Peninsula, in fact just a mile away from the farm where I grew up in the Chateaugay Valley south of Montreal, stands a monument where the troops under Colonels de Salaberry and Macdonnell turned back an American attack headed for Montreal, the so-called Battle of Chateaugay in the War of 1812 to 1814.

When The Act of the Union in 1841 established legislative union between Upper and Lower Canada, once again the traditional rights and privileges regarding religion and language and law were maintained within the framework of the United Canadas.

It is not surprising, therefore, that when The British North America Act was passed in 1867, establishing Canada as we have known it, Quebec's special rights in that Confederation were acknowledged. In short, Mr. Speaker, a special place for Quebec in Canadian Confederation is not something new. It is part and parcel of our history.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, when English Canadians become somewhat exasperated with the separatist tendencies of the province of Quebec today, it is well for us to recall that the original act of separatism in Canada was the insistence of Upper Canada, with its United Empire Loyalist stock, predominantly Anglo-Saxon and Protestant, that it should be an entity separate from the majority of the then Canadian population in Quebec. And the objectives which motivated that separatism were identical with those which motivate Quebec separatist tendencies today, namely, the protection of cultural, language and religious rights. In that day, the new influx of United Empire Loyalists found themselves a minority amid the predominantly French-speaking and Catholic population of Canada.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members in this Legislature in the province of Ontario, will anyone deny that Canada is not a better place today because those basic minority rights were recognized and not crushed by imposing the different culture, language and religion of the French majority of that day?

Last June, Mr. Speaker, a few of us in this Legislature had the privilege of journeying with members of the press gallery to visit Quebec City as guests of the legislative press gallery there. For a weekend there was brought together, not only the men and women who report the news, but the leaders of the political parties of the two key central provinces.

The meeting was held at a time when Canada was disturbed about the future, even the survival of Confederation. It may well have been an historic event.

I am certain, Mr. Speaker, I am right in saying all of us from Ontario came back from Quebec City, not only warmed by the friendliness and the hospitality with which we were greeted but with a broader sense of Canadianism.

You cannot visit Quebec City without seeing and feeling how much French Canada is part of our history. You cannot stand on the ramparts of the Citadel and look out across the Plains of Abraham where the forces of Montcalm and Wolfe settled the destiny of this nation without being overwhelmed with a feeling that Quebec is so integral a part of our national story, that it is unthinkable that Confederation cannot be reshaped to accommodate the legitimate aspirations of French Canada.

In spite of this, anti-French Canadian sentiment throughout Canada is like a virus running through the bloodstream of the nation. I am frank to say, Mr. Speaker, that few things have disturbed me so deeply as this open antagonism—and when it is not open it is often close to the surface—of many of my fellow Canadians towards other fellow countrymen who just happen to be French. I have often felt my blood run cold as I heard fellow Canadians say to somebody who was speaking French: Why do you not talk white? A comment which incidentally has been made so often that I have heard it repeated on CBC programmes—despite the sotto voce protest of one of the hon. members over here.

Mr. Sopha: Reid Scott.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a comment that bespeaks all of the arrogance and air of superiority that we have come to associate with the southern white in his relations with the negroes. Most puzzling of all, it is an attitude often held by persons who otherwise are most vigorous in their denunciations of the racial antagonisms in the south and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, do you wish to adjourn?

Mr. Speaker: I was wondering if the member would inform the chair if he is just about finished?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I am afraid not, but this is as good a stopping place as any.

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest that we adjourn.

Mr. MacDonald: Shall I move adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Speaker: Mr. MacDonald moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning we will resume this debate and there are some bills on the order paper that are ready for second reading and then after that we may resume this debate again.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, JANUARY 24, 1964

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, I assume the first order of business this morning is your decision on the unfortunate and unsubstantiated—

Mr. Speaker: The chair will not entertain any questions this morning before the orders of the day. So I would ask the member for St. George to desist from pursuing any matter until I finish the routine proceedings and come to the orders of the day.

Presenting petitions.

The following petition was brought up, laid on the table, read and received:

Of the corporation of the city of Port Arthur praying that an Act may pass authorizing grants, not exceeding $5,000 in the aggregate, for activities which are, in the opinion of the council, for the general advantage of the inhabitants of the city.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, is it now in order to rise—

Mr. Speaker: I will have to ask the member for St. George to desist until I have made my ruling.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, is this your decision regarding the unfortunate occurrence of yesterday? I wonder if you would allow any discussion—

Mr. Speaker: This is my decision regarding the occurrence yesterday in the House and I would ask the member to desist from pursuing any questions.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: My appeal to you, sir, is merely to allow discussion in this House, or representations to be made to you, before you make that decision. I think this is a recognized practice in other jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker: I shall not entertain any such matter.

During the course of the speech of the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) on the Throne debate yesterday, points of order were raised by the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) and the member for St. George, alleging that a portion of the remarks of the member for York South was out of order as he referred to a matter before the courts and therefore sub judice at this time.

When the point of order was raised by the member for Sudbury, as it is so important, I thought that I should reserve my decision until I had time to consider the authorities. When the point of order was raised a second time by the member for St. George, I requested the member for York South to desist from further reference to the subject until I had given my ruling, which I promised for today.

I am now prepared to make that ruling as follows:

The sub judice rule is stated in May's Parliamentary Practice, 16th edition, at page 400, as follows:

A matter whilst under adjudication by a court of law, should not be brought before the House by a motion or otherwise.

And at page 457, as follows:

Matters awaiting the adjudication of a court of law should not be brought forward in debate.

This rule, so clearly stated, has been supported by decisions in the Parliament of the United Kingdom for almost a century and has always been held binding in this House, as stated in Lewis' Parliamentary Procedure in Ontario, page 29, where, among the matters listed as being out of order in debate, it is stated: "Matters awaiting a judicial decision."

I know the member for York South, having obtained advice in advance, believed that he was in order in reading the Statement of Claim which he read yesterday; otherwise he would not have done so. However, as he stated himself that this Statement of Claim has been filed—a writ has issued, but that the matter has not yet come to trial—I simply cannot see how the clear statement of the rule can be avoided. The matter is obviously under judicial consideration.

Moreover, after careful consideration of the submissions of the member for York South, the member for Sudbury and the member for St. George, I am forced to the conclusion that this is one of the most important applications of the sub judice rule that could be imagined. It is not only important that the courts should not be unhampered in their decisions by debate in this House, but it is of equal importance that allegations and accusations made by persons outside this House should not be repeated in this House, unless they have been substantiated by clear evidence, whether in a Statement of Claim or otherwise. It appears an abuse of privilege to lend weight to unsubstantiated accusations by repeating them in this Chamber.

Use of the word "evidence" influences me to suggest to the members that their use of this word should be more precise. Evidence is evidence. It means statements made under oath or otherwise proven. Allegations contained in such a document as the Statement of Claim are certainly not evidence.

Yesterday I suggested that if I found that portion of the member's speech under consideration to be out of order I would direct that it be stricken from the records. Investigation has satisfied me that the right to strike from the record after recording is debatable. I am, therefore, not making such an order, but I declare the reading of the Statement of Claim and all reference to it out of order and that it should not have been permitted.

I should like to inform the members that in order that such an occurrence will not be repeated, the sub judice rule will henceforth be strictly enforced, and the discussion of any matter pending before the courts will not be permitted.

Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, in resuming this debate, before I pick up with the portion of my remarks where I left off at six o'clock last night, if you will permit me, sir, I would like to comment on the ruling that you have just made. I want to say at the outset that I am accepting your ruling—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, just a moment. I must inform the member that I have made the ruling and it is not debatable. I shall not entertain any debate on the ruling I have just made.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if you had waited just 30 seconds, I think I could have allayed your fears in that connection. I have no intention of challenging the ruling. I am now persuaded that the rules of this House—indeed, strangely enough they go right back to Sir Robert Peel—are as you have now indicated them to the House.

The point I wanted to raise, Mr. Speaker, is this, that there is a very strange anomaly here which I invite the House, particularly with its considerable number of lawyers in it, to ponder. It is that for some 200 years, apparently, the rules of the House in parliamentary tradition have been more restrictive than what at least appears to be the case in the view of a considerable body of legal opinion as far as the courts are concerned outside the House—

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Certainly, and there is a reason for it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the point I want to make is simply this, that obviously to discuss the merits of a case that is before the courts is an affront to the courts. It is their responsibility to hear it and to adjudicate on both the information—

Mr. Lawrence: You are debating it here—

Mr. MacDonald: No, I am not debating it, Mr. Speaker, just let me make my point—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Oh, you certainly are.

Mr. MacDonald: The point I want to make is that there is a considerable body of opinion whose advice I accepted yesterday, and I think it was correct, that if you are not discussing the merits, if you are merely repeating the allegations, then you are not giving an affront to the courts.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the member to desist from making any further remarks about this occurrence whatsoever and to pursue the balance of his speech on another subject matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there is one other point that I wanted to raise as a result of yesterday's debate, not on this matter. In this morning's Toronto Globe and Mail, in the first edition of last night, there is a comment in an article entitled: "MacDonald Discounts NDP-Liberal Merger." The latter part of the paragraph is as follows:

The furthest Mr. MacDonald had been willing to come is to pledge co-operation on specific issues, a pledge that he amended yesterday with his implication of Liberal bad faith on medical insurance.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Is not that sub judice too?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): The hon. member probably would not like it discussed.

An hon. member: The more the hon. member discusses it, the better we like it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I raise this matter because involved in this news story is an editorial comment—the editorial comment being that I left the impression, at least in the mind of the writer yesterday, that I was imputing bad faith to the Liberal Party. Now, if perchance in the free-wheeling debate yesterday, I left this impression, let me correct it, because this was not my intention. What I stated, and this is an historical fact that cannot be disputed, is that the Liberal Party has had some four or five policies on Medicare in the last four or five years.

Indeed, the Toronto Globe and Mail editorially yesterday referred to this record as being comparable to an "inebriated pendulum", which is rather a colourful way to describe it.

What I said was that we welcomed, and I reiterate a welcome, to the hon. members of the Liberal Party supporting a public Medicare programme. I think this is the correct kind of programme. I think that if we do not have a united front on this kind of a programme in this Legislature, there is even less chance, than might otherwise be the case, of persuading the government that they should change what I think is their erroneous policy.

But what I did say, and I directed my remarks, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), was that it seems to me that people in the Liberal Party who have always believed in a public Medicare programme, such as the hon. member for Parkdale—

An hon. member: They are backtracking now.

Mr. MacDonald: I accept his comments now as being sincere comments, therefore people in the Liberal Party who have always believed in a public Medicare programme have to examine the situation in which they found themselves in the last three or four years when the dominant wing, the right wing of the party, forced them to variations in it, and even at some stages to an acceptance of a private Medicare programme to be operated through insurance companies. It was in this context, Mr. Speaker, that I said then, and I reiterate now, if there are people in the Liberal Party, or anywhere else, who agree with these policies, we invite their co-operation and support for them. We invite them as members within the Liberal Party to examine the prospects of ever being able to realize these policies they firmly believe in as long as they have to live with the right wing of their party. Because the fact of the matter is that they have lived with it for virtually two generations and they have not achieved what they now say is their policy, because it has been frustrated every time the chips are down.

I even venture the suggestion, which is not a reflection on the integrity of these hon. gentlemen, that when the right wing of their party—which I am led to believe at the moment is not represented in this group, at least it was not vocal in this group—does assert itself again; when the chips are down, that once again the right wing of the Liberal Party will come out in favour of a private Medicare programme. The challenge will then be to them to make up their minds, whether they accept this kind of frustrated existence within a party which cannot achieve what they want, or whether they want to consider realignment of political parties in this country.

I hope this clarifies the situation, because I have no intention of casting reflections on the good faith of the hon. members of the Liberal Party in this House. I will let their future actions prove whether or not what they are saying today is being said in good faith, and for the moment I accept it in good faith.

Mr. Singer: Will the hon. member explain the explanation now?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, when I concluded my remarks yesterday at 6 o'clock, I was in the process of discussing the very vital problem of French-English relationships in Canada as we face the need for a re-shaping of the Canadian constitution between now and the centenary year of 1967. I was just going to draw to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, the interesting historical parallel that the two great nations of the North American continent are both today suffering the pangs of national rebirth.

Just a century ago, for example, the United States fought a civil war in order that that nation shall not be half slave and half free. The war was won and the slaves were free, but the fruits of that victory withered on the vine. For though the slaves were freed, they were denied the rights of full citizenship. It is interesting to see that today, 100 years later, the descendants of these slaves have had to take up the battle again, aided by many of the white race throughout the North American continent, and there is growing promise that the full victory is finally going to be won. But it is not going to be won without a struggle that is stirring the conscience of the whole nation.

Now just a century ago, in parallel, Mr. Speaker, the Fathers of Confederation determined that there was room for a second experiment in democracy on the northern half of this continent. Men like Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir George Etienne Cartier symbolized the partnership of a new nation that was to be bilingual and bicultural. But many of the fruits of Confederation have also withered on the vine.

Notwithstanding the many achievements of Confederation, which should not be overlooked, and certainly should not be minimized, we have not built a nation that is truly bilingual and bicultural. This is the complaint of our French-Canadian compatriots. While these complaints have been acknowledged through the establishment of a Royal commission, it cannot be said that the conscience of our nation has been stirred by this issue, as for example the conscience of the American nation has been stirred by the issue of racial relationships on the American side. In fact, the contrary is true in Canada.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we realize how far we have strayed from the thinking of those who did most to shape Confederation in the first place?

On a cold January night in 1856, for example, when Sir John A. Macdonald had just passed his 41st birthday, he was sitting in his rented quarters on Wellington Place, here in the city of Toronto, writing a letter to a journalist friend in Montreal. This is what he wrote on that occasion:

The truth is that you British Lower Canadians can never forget that you were once supreme, that Jean Baptiste was once your hewer of wood and drawer of water. You struggle not for equality, but for ascendancy. Treat them—that is, the French—as a nation and they will act as a free people do, generously. Call them a faction, and they will become factious.

“Treat them as a nation,” said Sir John A. Macdonald. How interesting, Mr. Speaker, because more than 100 years later this is precisely what our French-Canadian compatriots have suggested, and yet the two-nation concept is regarded by many people in Canada as an incomprehensible thing. People who are living in a commonwealth that is so flexible as to encompass republics within an association of nations headed by a monarch, these same people find a two-nation concept impossible! Is it not rather interesting? Perhaps we need a few more Sir John A. Macdonalds, or at least—

Several hon. members: Hear! Hear!

Mr. MacDonald: I welcome the intervention of the hon. gentlemen, but about five minutes hence perhaps they will have something to ponder.

As I was saying, perhaps we need a few more Sir John A. Macdonalds, or at least the attitude which he maintained all throughout his life.

For in 1890, just a couple of years before his death, when Dalton MacCarthy introduced a bill to abolish the status of the French language in the Northwest Territories, this was the ringing declaration of Sir John A. Macdonald in the House of Commons:

I have no accord with the desire expressed in some quarters that by any mode whatever there should be an attempt made to oppress the one language or to render it inferior to the other; I believe that would be impossible if it were tried, and it would be foolish and wicked if it were possible. The statement that has been made so often that this is a conquered country is “apropos de rien”. Whether it was conquered or ceded, we have a constitution now under which all British subjects are in a position of absolute equality, having equal rights of every kind—of language, of religion, of property and of person. There is no paramount race in this country; there is no conquered race in this country; we are all British subjects on that account. Why—said Sir John A. Macdonald back in 1890:

—if there is one act of oppression more than another which would come home to a man's breast, it is that he should be deprived of the consolation of hearing and speaking and reading the language that his mother taught him.

I leave off with the quotation at that point.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is an admirable prescription for both the attitude and the action of English Canada towards their French-Canadian compatriots as they seek to recapture the dream of a bilingual and a bicultural nation, the dream that has dimmed over the years.

But in this connection, I am glad to be able to give warm commendation where I think it is due. It would appear, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of his representation of Ontario so far, that our hon. Prime Minister understands and accepts this concept, this approach. There is no doubt that he has played a key role in creating the new atmosphere which was the most important achievement of the November conference.

Here, Mr. Speaker, I suggest partisanship has no place, for this is the common ground of all Canadian parties, and I have no hesitation in saying that as a citizen of this province and as a member of this Legislature, I was proud of the role that the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario played at Quebec. My hope would be that he can withstand the forces in his own party and continue to play that role.

I say that because, Mr. Speaker, in taking the stand that he did, the hon. Prime Minister was breaking with a quite different tradition that has become identified with the Conservative Party since the days of Sir John A. Macdonald. It is one of the supreme ironies of Canadian history that no party has forsaken the traditions of Sir John A. Macdonald, particularly in his attitude toward French Canada, more than the Conservative Party that he created. And if any hon. member in this House thinks, for example, that I am saying something that has not some validity, I was interested this morning, when I got my Globe and Mail, to find the Weekend Magazine with an article which says at the bottom:

A Quebec Conservative questions whether his party has forgotten its founder's vision of a united Canada.

I invite hon. members to read it, in addition to listening to some reflections that I would like to put before them at the moment.

I read with interest a week or so ago the many articles in our newspapers on the occasion of the 149th anniversary of Sir John A. Macdonald's birthday, emphasizing how little we had done as a people to commemorate the birthday of our chief national founder. It seems incredible that it was left to the present Liberal regime at Ottawa, at this late date in our history, to consider such an obvious thing as purchasing of the old Macdonald home in the Kingston area and turning it into a national shrine.

Why have even the Conservatives failed to give their greatest leader the place he deserves in Canadian history? The concluding paragraphs of the Throne Speech, which we are now debating, Mr. Speaker, read like a self-conscious effort to belatedly fill the gap. Imagine a Conservative government in the year 1964 feeling it necessary to emphasize the place of Sir John A. Macdonald in Canadian history!

But to return to this question of relations with French Canada; as this nation now appears to be rediscovering one of its greatest national heroes, I wonder if the Tory party, more than anyone else, will not find Sir John A. Macdonald too hot to handle.

I direct that comment to those who applauded a moment ago, in a sort of instinctive way. For the simple fact is that in this century the Conservative Party has never understood Quebec. They have constantly flirted with the idea of writing off Quebec and openly sought a majority outside that province, even if it meant splitting this nation down the middle. And that is the essence of this article in the Toronto Globe and Mail magazine by an English Canadian in the province of Quebec. Even on the two occasions when they have won a significant number of seats in French Canada, they have never developed leaders of any stature and their strength has held for just a fleeting moment of history.

Now the reason for this is no mystery. The federal Conservative Party tends to hold towards French Canada those very attitudes which Sir John A. Macdonald deplored. When J. S. Roy, Conservative member for Gaspé left the party in 1941, he stated that a French Canadian in the Conservative Party is:

At best a tolerated stranger, accepted from necessity and looked upon with a certain degree of curiosity. In the opinion of the Conservative members, he is, and always will be, a poor relation.

When Bona Arsenault, MP for Bonaventure and former president of the Quebec Conservative Association, left the party in 1945, he expressed similar views in the House of Commons.

Now Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Prime Minister can break with this twentieth-century tradition of his party and continue to manifest an understanding of French Canada's aspirations and grievances in the manner that he has to date, then he is going to do a real service, not only to Ontario but to Canada in these critical years between now and 1967. He will have an honoured place among the fathers of reconfederation.

I have dwelt, Mr. Speaker, at some length on this vital issue of English French relations in Canada. I have done so because this is a highly emotional issue which makes it more difficult to work out a rational solution of other basic problems that Canada faces in reshaping Confederation. Those other basic problems lie in the fiscal relationships between the provinces and the federal government and perhaps the need for reassessing the constitutional responsibilities of the provinces and the federal government in light of twentieth-century needs and conditions—a point, incidentally, Mr. Speaker, on which the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) laid his chief emphasis when he was commenting on the conference.

One important point was clarified by the November conference. The basic difference revealed in that conference lay not in the relationships between Quebec and the rest of Canada, but between all ten provinces and the federal government. On fiscal policies, strong demands were advanced by all provinces, including Ontario, with as great insistence as advanced by Quebec.

I think the Toronto Globe and Mail summed up the situation neatly in an editorial of November 28, 1963, an editorial which was entitled "Chorus of Ten." It concluded it with this paragraph:

When all the submissions were analyzed it became apparent that while Quebec is seeking a strong, indeed an extreme and sometimes unsupportable position at the Dominion-provincial conference, it is not taking an isolated one. Mr. Lesage is by no means at loggerheads with the other nine premiers. His dispute is with Ottawa, so is theirs; and the claims that he makes on Ottawa run remarkably parallel with their own. What they sing in English, he is singing, rather loudly, in French. The much-heralded confrontation and division on purely racial lines has not occurred and that, if little else, bodes well for the conference and for Canada.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, now is not the time to go into the details of these new kind of relationships, all of these problems of reconfederation that are going to have to be worked out in this period from 1964 to 1967, a parallel for the days of the federation debates before Confederation came into being.

Because those negotiations have just begun. Perhaps before this session is over sufficient information will become available so as to permit useful and meaningful debate. At this point, I think it is more important to lay down the necessary guide lines, and I want to suggest a few of them.

Firstly, constitutions should not be permitted to degenerate into strait-jackets which frustrate rather than assist in meeting the needs of our people. The Canada of the 1960's is vastly different from the Canada of the 1860's. It follows therefore that those changed conditions make advisable changes in our constitution to meet the new problems that have developed over the past century. Our approach should be one of open-mindedness. It may well be that the common needs of the people of Canada can be more effectively met by a reapportioning of some of the responsibilities as between the federal and the provincial governments. This is the point made by the hon. leader of the Opposition and in this I would agree with him. I would just add this, incidentally, Mr. Speaker, that there is little suggestion up until now from the public reports of the November conference that there is any intention of tackling this fundamental question of reapportioning responsibilities. I would hope that if this is the case, that the hon. Prime Minister at some point when he is speaking in the House would direct his remarks to this. I hope we can persuade him that there is a need for this kind of thing and that if it has not been on up until now, when the conference resumes a few weeks hence, that he will press this point.

Secondly, whether or not any reapportioning of responsibilities is made there will inevitably remain an extensive range of responsibilities that must be shared jointly by the two senior levels of government. Here I submit, Mr. Speaker, the principle of co-operative federalism should be our guide. At first glance, co-operative federalism may sound like such an obvious thing, almost a platitude, and that the complexities of its implementation are often underestimated. The New Democratic Party laid down this principle in its national founding convention, in 1961. It was the first party to do so. Significantly, two years later the Liberal Party picked up at least the words, when they appeared in the Pearson government's first Throne Speech last April.

But within an incredibly short time, Mr. Speaker, the federal government indicated clearly that while it had picked up the words it failed to understand their meaning. Without prior consultation it proposed a municipal loan fund as one area of joint action. When the situation blew up the government had to call a hasty conference to permit discussions with the provinces that obviously should have taken place earlier. Without prior consultation it proposed a federal pension plan in terms so vague and confusing that it created a national storm, which may well have done irreparable damage to this important piece of social legislation. Co-operative federalism must be regarded not just as a fine-sounding slogan, but as a way of life in the federal state—a way of life in the day-to-day workings of federal-provincial relations.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, there may occasionally be proposals such as pensions, on which, for reasons inherent in her special place of interest, Quebec may wish to opt out. I would hasten to add that it is obviously desirable that there be as few of these as possible, but Ontario's stand should be one of giving leadership when this kind of situation happens, in a sympathetic understanding of the complex factors which underly Quebec's position, and even more important, in giving leadership to the other provinces in pursuing co-operative action with the federal government in working out a viable national plan for the whole of the country.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we must take a new look at the vital problem of economic planning and the necessary integration of federal and provincial government action in this field. It has generally been assumed in the past that economic planning was primarily a federal responsibility because of the important role of fiscal and monetary policies which lie within its jurisdiction. Certainly the federal government has ultimate responsibility to ensure economic growth and full employment. But in my view, Mr. Speaker, this should not preclude the provinces from being able to make basic decisions regarding the pattern of economic growth required to meet their individual needs, to take action to implement those decisions and then full co-ordination of these plans with the federal policies. Here, perhaps more than anywhere else, the principle of co-operative federalism must be implemented. Provinces have every right to insist that Ottawa will consult in respect of their plans and seek to co-ordinate the federal government's plans with those which the provinces initiated.

Mr. Speaker, in these principles that I have been outlying here as guide lines for our discussions, in the re-negotiation of Confederation, once again I submit that if we follow them, we will be giving twentieth-century implementation to a basic principle which underlay Sir John A. Macdonald's approach to the original shaping of Confederation. Speaking in the Confederation debates in 1864 he stated this:

I am strong in the belief that we have hit upon the happy medium, that we have formed a scheme of government which unites the advantages of both, giving us the strength of a legislative union and the sectional freedom of a federal union, with protection to local interests.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I think we can come back to some other factors of this in this field of federal-provincial relationships, when we have more substance to debate them because of some representations from the House.

I turn finally, Mr. Speaker, to the amendment that has been made to the Throne Speech and its expression of non-confidence in the government. I want to indicate to the House our views with regard to this amendment. Generally speaking, one could not fail but to go along with it. It is reciting inadequacies in government policies, which I think are obviously true. My misgivings with regard to it lead me to what might be described as a partial endorsement of it.

It seemed to me, Mr. Speaker, that both the government's record and the amendment of the official Opposition have failed to realize the incredibly revolutionary days into which we have moved. In the year 1964 we have moved into a period when we are already face to face with some of the consequences of a scientific revolution—a scientific revolution that is going to transform our economy, that is going to transform our society, that is going to create new problems that will supersede the old problems, in terms of their magnitude to such an extent that it is almost impossible to speculate on the proportions. My complaint with this government and the government in Ottawa, as a matter of fact, is that they really have not come to grips with this problem. I am not going to go into the details to indicate why I think they have not come to grips with it. I am just trying to give to you very briefly the documentation for my reaction.

Last September, for example, this government sponsored a conference on automation and social change. The papers presented to that conference have been published in a book which I presume all hon. members have got. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think this is an admirable volume. I have read many comparable volumes, symposiums of essays of people viewing the problems of automation from many angles, and I would say that this is as good a statement of the variety of problems as you can find in any other comparable kind of volume.

But what disturbs me, Mr. Speaker, is to be found in an introductory speech that was given by the then Minister of Economics and Planning, the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay). I want to quote to the House one paragraph from his speech. It is to be found on page 12 of the printed volume:

I do not believe that the solution to automation lies in legislation, nor do I believe that governments can or should accept the responsibility for finding the solution. The solution will only be found through the sound, mature co-operation of every segment of our economy, but particularly in the fields of the labour movement and of industrial management.

Mr. Speaker, the incredible thing about that comment—which I assume, since it was made by one of the senior Ministers of the Cabinet at that time, is a reflection of the government's attitude and approach—is that this government in 1964, in the second half of the twentieth century, is still pursuing a basically laissez-faire approach to all of the problems created by this scientific revolution. The hon. member for Riverdale stated that the solution will be found through the sound, mature co-operation of every segment of our economy, particularly labour and management. Obviously, this is true—there must be co-operation in this field. But he prefaced it by insisting that he thinks there is no responsibility on the government to bring in legislation or even to attempt to seek the solution.

In our view, Mr. Speaker, that is a complete—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): May I point out to the hon. member and the House that in conjunction with the opening remarks made by the hon. member for Riverdale on the occasion of that conference, should be read the concluding statement from the government at the end of the conference. It tells exactly what the government is going to do and the leadership that this government is providing with respect to this matter.

Mr. MacDonald: I am quite willing to allow the hon. Minister of Labour to intervene, Mr. Speaker. What he is referring to, of course, is this automation foundation that is being set up. It is made up primarily of people who are deputy Ministers and Ministers and people who are otherwise very busy. It is another one—I say without any reflection on the individuals involved—of our sort of cocktail planning bodies. I have seen no evidence—I look forward with pleasure to hearing from this government as to exactly what this organization is doing and what has happened in the five months that have elapsed to get it going on these urgent problems.

I repeat that, notwithstanding this development, I think I can legitimately accept this paragraph of the hon. member for Riverdale as an indication of the government's approach—that it does not think that legislation is the answer. Even if the government should attempt to seek the answer, it remains the responsibility, in a vague mystical fashion, of various segments of society, particularly labour and management. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I think this government's policy is dangerously deficient in terms of coming to grips with problems that it is now facing and is going to face in greater proportions. I think the motion of non-confidence, the amendment, that was introduced by the Liberal Party, in the same way fails to acknowledge the extraordinary revolutionary character of the day in which we are living. Therefore I want to make an amendment which tries to acknowledge the proportions of these problems and the nature of some of these problems, the far-ranging nature of them.

I move, sir, seconded by Mr. Freeman, that the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session be further amended by adding thereto the following:

This House regrets that the government has manifested no serious awareness of the challenges, opportunities and problems which will face this province in increasing measure in the years ahead, as a result of the profound scientific and technological revolution now taking place throughout the world, as is indicated, among other things, by the government's continued failure:

1. To undertake or even contemplate comprehensive social and economic planning, to take full advantage of the scientific revolution in terms of increased wealth and fair distribution of that wealth among all the people and to minimize the effects of the dislocations which will inevitably arise;

2. To expand educational facilities, particularly at the advanced level, and to provide retraining facilities on anything like the scale needed to provide our people with the knowledge and skills needed to take full advantage of the opportunities provided by the scientific revolution;

3. To accord to the trade union movement of the province that genuine and wholehearted recognition which can be the only sound basis for labour-management co-operation in meeting the challenges of the scientific revolution;

4. To give any consideration to the reform of our institutions of government, particularly at the municipal level, in the light of the requirements of the scientific revolution;

5. To plan for the enormous expansion of cultural and recreational facilities which will be needed if our people are to have full opportunities for the constructive use of the leisure time that will become increasingly available to them as the scientific revolution proceeds.

And this House further regrets that the government has shown no awareness of the continued existence of widespread poverty in the midst of what has been described as our "affluent society," and in particular, has disclosed no serious intention:

1. To undertake the large-scale housing programme needed to provide adequate housing for all our people;

2. To provide adequate minimum wages and other basic labour standards to ensure reasonable living conditions for working people throughout the province;

3. To enable the farmers of the province to obtain a fair return on their contribution to the wealth of the province;

4. To depart from the position the government has taken in its negotiations with the government of Canada relating to pensions, even though that government has indicated that it plans to reduce the already inadequate pension benefits contained in its original proposals;

5. To fill in the multitude of gaps in our present social security legislation.

My hon. colleagues will address themselves to many of the aspects of that amendment, Mr. Speaker, in the course of the debate as it proceeds in the weeks that lie ahead.

Mr. J. R. Knox (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, may I add my name to the growing list of those who have and will congratulate you on your appointment to the office of Speaker. What I have noted to date of your actions in carrying out your duties, is evidence enough for me to confirm the wisdom of those who recommended your appointment.

Being a new member to this House I have a very great deal to learn and I am eager to do so. Therefore, you can imagine that I was paying close attention to the remarks of the two previous speakers, particularly because they are the leaders of their parties. Therefore, I was pleased to hear the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) speak of the sweeping changes he is instigating for his party. I will look forward to this metamorphosis, which I am sure has not yet unfolded itself to our view, except in one instance perhaps. I refer to the occasion where his party supported a misguided resolution introduced by the New Democratic Party, and for the first time indicated its party platform on Medicare.

Being a learner, from this action I am led to assume that as my education to the affairs of this House proceeds, the sweeping changes for his party of which the hon. gentleman spoke, will become clearer to me as I listen to the proposals of the New Democratic Party and note which ones the hon. Liberal members support.

The hon. gentleman later referred to the bookkeeping methods of the government and made the profound statement that these methods would never be used by a women's institute. His remarks led me to feel that he might know very little about the bookkeeping methods employed by the government, but he did speak with considerable confidence and authority about the needs of women's institutes—

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Been here 38 years—

Mr. Knox: The hon. leader of the Opposition spoke of water needs, Mr. Speaker, but he gave us no indication that he had himself any ideas for the solution of a problem which all of us recognize. While he may not have known about it, I was told on good authority during the recent election that persons speaking for his party's candidate were promising my rural people a grid system of water pipelines that would put a waffle to shame when it comes to line coverage. However, since he preached economy with such vehemence yesterday, I presume he would not now prescribe to such a profligate programme. But perhaps I should not presume that.

I at least did learn from his speech the important things that I have mentioned.

Then the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) spoke and I got the impression that in his case he may have had the idea that this was his last opportunity and he was going to leave no stone unturned.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): They said that before the last election.

Mr. Knox: I appreciate his problem in getting to know, in getting acquainted with, 37 new faces because I have about 100 to get acquainted with. But what really appealed to me in all this, was, when speaking of the great number of new members, and looking towards the government benches, his voice became so wistful.

During the election in September I felt constrained to refer to so much of his party's programme as gobbledygook and as he continued to outline his party's beliefs, the term gobbledygook again came to my mind. The portion of his address to which he referred as the "essence of political science" was to me very interesting and educating. I thought he left us rather up in the air, though, at the end, because he did not tell us what reference books to read, nor whether his lecture would count for promotion on our report cards.

Then he very suddenly turned his remarks into a full recitation of the aims and objectives of his party and probably he did not miss a point. It struck me, and I could be wrong as I am but a neophyte here, but it struck me that his speech could be a Speech from the Throne which, in that dream world in which his party appears to float, he had written just in case. And having done so, he was darn well not going to miss a chance of giving it anyway.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Knox: Of the delivery and speaking ability of the two previous speakers, I have nothing but the greatest admiration. It is an undisputed quality that I know I will never attain. So that is just one more thing I have learned in my short time in the House.

Now you may well imagine, Mr. Speaker, that it is with some trepidation that I follow these hon. gentlemen with my own effort before the House, but one other strong conclusion after listening to both of them, sustains me in my effort, and it is this. Thank God my leader is the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts).

Mr. MacDonald: That was a sure way to get applause.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Knox: First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce myself through my riding.

The riding of Lambton West is bounded on the north by that great body of water, Lake Huron, pure and undefiled—I want to refer back to that later—and on the west by the beautiful River St. Clair, on the south by Kent county and on the east by East Lambton. Almost the whole riding is underlain by salt beds and in part by oil-bearing rock.

Starting at the south of the riding we have Walpole Island, an Indian reserve and great tourist attraction. Then Sombra township with its beautiful river front along Highway 40 and its fine rich farmlands stretching away to the east to merge with those of the riding of Lambton East. Corn, sugar beets, beef and dairy cattle, general farming and a fine summer resort business are basic to this township's economy. It contains such flourishing villages as Sombra, Port Lambton and Wilkesport.

Moore township comes next. It too has fine, rich farmlands and adds to its economy with several large oil and chemical industries, and gas and volatile gasoline underground storage areas. The ethyl in your gasoline is manufactured in Moore township. Corunna, Courtright and Bridgen are three wide-awake villages in this township.

Sarnia township is again a farming community, but to the west and along the borders of Sarnia city and Lake Huron it is heavily residential, east as far as Bright's Grove. It has many fine motels, four golf courses and tourist accommodation on a large scale to add to its economy.

The village of Point Edward, with its fine marinas, fronts on the St. Clair and is otherwise land-locked by the city of Sarnia. It is a thriving, industrial village. Here is the Canadian end of the Blue Water bridge—all paid for—over which close to 1,000,000 vehicles passed in 1962.

The city of Sarnia, with a population of 50,000, provides nearly two-thirds of the population of the riding. Sarnia, including parts of Moore township, depends for its basic economy upon the great primary petrochemical complex known as Canada's chemical valley. There are 3,000 acres of great modern refineries and chemical plants extending for miles down the St. Clair to make use of much-needed fresh water and salt beds, and interdependent one on another. It is the home of Canada's synthetic rubber industry. Cabot Carbon Company manufactures scientific soot, up to 100 million pounds annually, and about 4.5 pounds of it are in each of your automobile tires.

Hon. members will recognize the names Imperial Oil, Sun Oil, Dow Chemical, along with Shell and Dupont in Moore township, almost as household words. Huge pipelines connect the area to great oil fields in the United States and western Canada, and also the Toronto-Hamilton area where many of its finished products are now delivered by pipeline. The whole riding has a large labour force with a high percentage of skilled professional and technical personnel; and, oh yes, we possess one of the finest harbours on inland waters and hundreds of foreign vessels call every year. Hon. members may have already heard too that we have a brand-new harbour-master.

This petro-chemical complex is a whole story by itself and someday, any day, I would like to tell the House more about it. I might just add that we have an Indian reserve of Chippewas and Potawatomies within Sarnia's city borders. In all parts of the riding our principal asset is our people—capable, forward-looking, industrious.

This then, in a very brief way, is the riding which I, one of the least, have the honour to represent.

Beyond what I have said, the whole riding is a mecca for tourists with a potential only partially tapped. Highway 40 along the St. Clair is a drive, either by day or by night, scarcely to be equalled anywhere else and we have big plans for its development as a scenic attraction.

Now today I want to concentrate on only one feature and that feature is potable water—drinking water. I am handling one subject only, for brevity and clarity and to focus attention on it.

Only a few years ago, the whole of Lambton county, led by the city of Sarnia, with backing from at least one man seated here today who is not of our county, and from many outside municipalities and individuals on both sides of the St. Clair, including the cities of Port Huron, Detroit and Flint, Michigan, and supported strongly by the local press, rose in righteous wrath to protect the Lake Huron and St. Clair waters from any threat of pollution from drilling for oil and gas. And we stand ready to do so again, Mr. Speaker, at the drop of a hat if it becomes necessary.

Representations to both the governments of Ontario and Michigan eventually captured the sympathy and understanding of both governing bodies and the result is legislation in Michigan and Ontario which ensures for all time protection against pollution from these sources. There are many sitting here today to whom we in Lambton will remain eternally grateful for that legislation.

Some day, any day, I would like to tell hon. members the whole story of this fight to preserve these bodies of water, fresh and usable for drinking, for fishing, for recreation. I know a good deal about it for I played a very active part in it, and I know that many other members sitting here are now glad that we in Lambton preserved from further pollution a source of drinking water that they will be using in the next 10 to 20 years if they do not already do so.

And yet, in spite of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that no part of this riding of Lambton West is farther than 12 miles from such an abundant source of fresh water, the lake or the river, we have people who have a very difficult time to get water to drink. In many areas rock wells of any significance are practically non-existent. While we in Sarnia pay a residential rate of 35 cents per 1,000 gallons per month and downwards, we have areas in the riding supplied by water carrier businesses where people pay up to $7 per 1,000 gallons of water and the carriers are barely making a living.

The solution of this problem is complicated first by the fact that farms and small communities needing water—and I mean just water for household use, not irrigation, I am not talking about that at this point—are separated by very considerable distances; second, by limited ground water in diminishing supply; third, by problems which arise where pipelines must pass through another municipality or be supplied by another municipality, such as Point Edward and parts of Moore and Sarnia townships now are supplied by the city of Sarnia; and last, by the enormous capital costs involved in creating a water system, especially in the townships where only parts of each of them require potable water.

These municipalities are striving to solve their problems and I want to pause here to pay tribute to the Ontario Water Resources Commission, The Department of Municipal Affairs and the Ontario Municipal Board for the wonderful co-operation received from them in this work. Everywhere I go in my riding these departments are highly praised for the assistance so readily given. I believe one could ask no more of anyone than these fine people now provide, but I do believe their authority to act does not go far enough.

Capital costs appear to block every local effort in many cases. What rural municipality can afford a quarter of a million dollar debenture issue for pipelines alone to bring water to a village of 600, which village is now overburdened with debentures as a result of supplying water in the past? How can 30 or 40 farmers afford to pay an estimated $2,940 per $6,000 of assessment for a pipeline three or four miles long which will connect them with a main line now in use from the lake to Petrolia in the east? How can a township justify spreading any of this cost over areas of the township not requiring water, or over areas supplied with water from another source?

I would like to use one village as an example, extreme for our riding perhaps, but typical of many other villages throughout the province, I am sure. The village is Brigden in Moore township. It is nine miles from the St. Clair; 18 miles from Lake Huron through Sarnia township; it is 12 miles from Petrolia in East Lambton where a line to the lake exists and perhaps could be tapped. This village of Brigden has 600 people and a central elementary school of about 300 pupils. They have two wells in the village with a pumping capacity of 2.5 gallons each per minute. Another well three miles away pumps ten gallons per minute. But this well may be lost because the people in its area are very concerned by the shrinking water level in their wells surrounding it and none of the wells can be pumped continuously.

The village has a 60,000-gallon reservoir which was dry a good part of last summer. Tight water restrictions are in force all year long. Twice last summer all water usage was forbidden except for an hour at breakfast, lunch and dinner. No watering of lawns and gardens can be permitted most of the summer. They can lose a whole day's water supply by a break in the lines before knowing of it and locating it. The people of the village pay $4 for the first 2,000 gallons of water per month and $1 per 1,000 after that. The area is full of dry wells; eight out of nine drilled lately were dry. They have a $3,000 deficit in their current water accounts and three debentures against the water system now. They perhaps can get water from Petrolia if they can find $257,000 for a line, yet if the line were there a rate of about $1.85 per 1,000 gallons would carry and maintain it. If a pumping station were to be supplied at the River St. Clair they could have water at a cost of about $2.10 per 1,000, but first they must find $270,940 for a pipeline. These capital costs are just impossible for the community and present an insurmountable barrier.

These conditions exist now and are worsening. What will they be like ten years from now? It is time action was taken, for if it is taken now, ten years may elapse before water drips out of any main, in many cases. I have used our riding as an example to illustrate the need for a new look at the drinking-water problem throughout the province because surely no riding in the province can be more favourably situated with respect to the potential availability of potable water. I am sure that over the province the need is as great, or greater in many areas which may be situated not nearly so favourably and where the problem is much more aggravated than in Lambton West; and I have pinpointed only one of a dozen areas in our riding alone where the need is becoming more urgent all the time. I am sure many of you here have potable water problems in your riding which make these I outline seem puny by comparison.

I believe a study of the problem must be undertaken by this government at once. The need in some places is becoming desperate. Do we just desert such villages and farms? When I have asked that question of some, the answer has come back "yes". But I say "no". There are those who say we can have only those things we can pay for, and as a general statement I agree with this, but not when an essential to life itself is involved, such as potable water. We must, as a government body, provide the leadership and the professional and political assistance which will get water to those who need it.

If a committee is to study this, one should never tell the committee first what its answer should be. Nevertheless, when one sets a goal, and this one is very easy to delineate, namely, to make sure that people can receive potable water at a price within their reach, one must visualize at least one or more ways in which this might be accomplished, so let us look at one or more.

First, greater effort on our part might encourage more farmers to build ponds which could supply water other than for drinking by humans and thus cut down on expensive pipeline sizes.

Second, small pipelines extended to convenient areas and provided with metered faucets could make the procuring of drinking water for farm uses possible by the farmers themselves.

More reservoirs and the acquisition and protection of natural ponding areas, such as I believe was advocated by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), might be encouraged and/or provided, and protected with possible purifying arrangements to make the water potable.

The granting of authority to OWRC, for example, to survey, plan and finance selfliquidating main trunk water lines, could be undertaken. One advantage of this would be the flexibility by which it could arrange for large, long lines through a series of municipalities. An example would be a line from Lake Huron to Chatham, Windsor and Detroit, with a branch to London and St. Thomas, and grid lines branching off to all areas along the way which required water, making every possible use of highway and railroad rights-of-way to ease the cost burden.

In enterprises of such a size, I would personally prefer to see the planning and the clearances through local municipalities done by some department such as OWRC and ending up as a set of specifications for a piece of work to be undertaken. This work could then be put up for acceptance as a project to private enterprise. This method allows for the government to give the expected leadership, which is its role, and for private enterprise to engage in the execution of the business, which is its role.

With all reasonable safeguards for review at regular intervals of five or ten years, perhaps the price per 1,000 gallons of water at so many pounds pressure might be the bid item, or one of them, when private enterprise is tendering for the business.

Allowing for private enterprise to make a necessary profit, those in need of water, as I see it, would still get water at much less than they now pay. Private enterprise is interested—at least two companies in our riding are interested in operating through our riding, and have shown that.

Another advantage of this method would be that provincial and municipal capital borrowing potential would not be strangled because of having to provide these large sums of money on a long-term basis. Also, this method would get a needed service into operation that most smaller municipalities cannot by themselves afford.

In review, I believe this is an urgent matter. We must act now before we allow dust bowls and abandoned areas to spring up. I would ask the government to consider the setting up of a committee at once to study all facets of the problem of getting potable water to those who need it and cannot by themselves provide it. As is the way with committees, it would report to this body its findings and recommendations and we would then be in a position to take whatever action is necessary to resolve this problem, growing in its seriousness every day.

Mr. Speaker: The chair recognizes the member for Forest Hill.

Mr. E. A. Dunlop (Forest Hill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss a matter of importance to the residents of the constituency which I have the honour to represent, as well as many other constituencies in the province.

I am sure that hon. members are keenly aware that it is the rare and fortunate family which need not seek, perhaps several times in each generation, the services of a hospital for the mitigation of suffering, prevention of needless disability or untimely death. Yet there is a serious shortage of hospital accommodation in many communities and areas in the province. The root cause of this shortage is, I believe, a shortage of capital available for hospital construction. I wish to suggest one possible means of overcoming this problem.

Steady advances in medical science are creating increasing demands for hospital beds, demands which are usually expressed in ratios of hospital beds per 1,000 of population. The Ontario Hospital Services Commission estimates that five active treatment hospital beds per 1,000 of population will, if properly distributed, be sufficient to meet the needs of the province as a whole. Such ratios provide useful yardsticks, but they are not sufficiently precise to serve the needs of planning in a particular municipality.

Before discussing the situation in the province as a whole, I should like to refer to the situation in Metropolitan Toronto, for two reasons. First, because a very sophisticated study of hospital needs has been carried out by the Metro committee for the survey of hospital needs, and second, because the needs are more acute in Metro than elsewhere in the province.

The people of Metro are not less subject to disease or accident than people in other parts of the province. Yet in 1961, 116 of every 1,000 residents in Metro were admitted to active treatment hospitals, whereas the admission rate for the province as a whole was 148 per 1,000. The Metro hospitals must, of course, meet the needs not only of Metro's own residents, but also the people from beyond its boundaries. It is natural that complex and specialized diagnostic and therapeutic facilities should be concentrated in large metropolitan centres and particularly in hospitals associated with university medical schools. In 1961 the Toronto General Hospital, for example, devoted about one-third of its days of patient care to non-residents.

The survey committee has shown that there is a current deficit of 2,300 active treatment beds in Metro, and that to overcome the existing shortage and meet the estimated needs of the year 1970, a total of 3,800 new beds will have to be constructed. Capital has been accumulated for only 500 of these beds, leaving 3,300 still to be financed. At the generally accepted rate of $20,000 per active treatment bed, exclusive of the cost of land, this means a total cost of at least $66 million.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we are witnessing the passing of an era in the financing of hospital construction, an era once characterized by almost total reliance upon municipalities and private philanthropy. That era was drawing to its close in the mid-40's, but it was prolonged by the introduction of hospital construction grants by the federal and provincial governments some 15 years ago.

Although these grants are not calculated strictly on a bed-unit basis, the grants available from the federal and Ontario governments are about $2,500 and $5,700 per active treatment bed respectively. The municipality of Metropolitan Toronto is considering a grant of about $2,700 per bed, but the matter is not settled. If it is, then the grants available from these three levels of government will total $10,900, leaving $9,100 to be found from non-governmental sources, notably private philanthropy. If we apply that $9,100 per bed to the 3,300 beds still to be financed in Metro, we find that we will need $30 million over and above that which can be found from government grants at present levels.

Mr. Speaker, if the need is to be met by 1970, the construction of every last one of these beds must be started by 1968. Thus in the four effective years available it will be necessary to conduct hospital campaigns aggregating $7.5 million in each of those four years. The experience of recent hospital campaigns in Metro suggests this is an impossible task and I submit that its impossibility should be recognized, here and now.

We might, of course, look to other levels of government for increased grants. Hopefully we might look to the federal government to increase its grants. But I think this would be an unsound premise upon which to base future hospital planning, because the realization of that hope may be very long in coming.

We might look to the municipalities to increase their grants. This does not appeal to me as a sensible plan at a time when municipalities and their ratepayers are struggling under heavy burdens and when about 40 per cent of the expenditures of this government are designed to assist municipalities to meet their existing responsibilities.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that our hospitals are social assets comparable to highways and sewers. One way and another, we make it possible to borrow money to finance capital construction of highways and schools, but we do not make it possible for hospitals to borrow capital. In our educational grants to the local authorities, we seek to ensure a certain standard of excellence of facilities in every community. In calculating these grants, we make allowance for the service of debt. Surely we could do the same for hospitals.

I should like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, a plan under which hospitals could be enabled to borrow money for capital construction. For every class of hospital and every class of hospital facility, it is possible to establish what might be called a standard cost of construction. I believe that such standard costs of construction should be established at levels which this government regards, and the Ontario Hospital Services Commission regards, as being adequate to meet the construction costs of each class of hospital or facility. From this standard cost of construction could then be deducted whatever may be available from the federal and Ontario governments by way of hospital construction grants. And there should be a further deduction of an amount which the government deems to be a proper amount to be granted by municipal authorities. This latter deduction could be determined by some objective formula, having regard for the relative wealth of the communities and the extent to which the hospitals to be constructed would serve those communities.

From all this calculation, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we should exclude charitable donations, and that charitable donations, to the extent that they are potentially available, should be used for the enhancement of the amenities—professional, scientific or architectural—of the hospital and for the provision of hospital furnishings.

Now, let me illustrate how this would work in terms of a new 500-bed active treatment hospital in Metro Toronto. If the established standard costs of construction were, for example, $20,000 a bed, and we deducted grants from governments at the rates to which I have already referred, we would be left with about $4.5 million still to be financed. I suggest that the hospital should issue its own bonds to raise this money.

Now, sir, under present circumstances, I think we realize that hospitals can find no market for bonds because there is no means of repayment. I submit that this could be overcome by additional capital allowances from the province, amortized on a 20-year basis. At an interest rate of 5.5 per cent, the annual costs of repaying principal and interest for this 500-bed hospital would be $367,000 a year. Translate that in terms of per bed per day capital cost by dividing 367,000 by 500 and by 365 and we find that this would represent capital cost allowance of $2 per bed per day.

It is not uncommon to experience operating costs of $30 per bed per day in an active treatment hospital and an additional capital allowance of $2 per day provides a not unsatisfactory ratio of capital to operating charges. The additional allowances, Mr. Speaker, would be paid, I believe, by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, financed either through premiums or grants, not to the hospital itself, but to a trustee for the bond. If we apply this system to Metropolitan Toronto as a whole and with 3,300 beds still to be financed, for which we need $30 million over and above government grants at existing levels, we will find, on an amortized basis, that the annual cost would be about $2,425,000. With such capital allowances available, the issue of hospital bonds in Metro could proceed in an eminently satisfactory manner.

It is a little more difficult to estimate the situation for the province as a whole, because no statistical survey of the kind I have mentioned has been carried out so far as I know. I must rely on the ratio of five active treatment beds per 1,000 population. With a population in 1970 estimated at 7½ million, this ratio would suggest that by that time we will need to have 37,500 active treatment beds. Today, we have 31,000 active treatment beds in the province, suggesting that in the next three or four years it will be necessary to start the construction of 6,500 more active treatment beds in the province. Again, at a standard construction cost of $20,000 per bed, this would call for a total expenditure of $130 million, for which, from existing grants at the current levels, about $70 million would be available, and $60 million would still have to be found some other way. Here again, on an amortized basis, I have proposed, the cost would be about $4.75 million a year.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is a relatively small price to pay to put our hospital house in order. I would like to point out a few features of this plan which I think are beneficial to the public interest.

1. Hospitals facing the need to build additions, and communities facing the need to build hospitals, would be able to launch these enterprises quickly and in the secure knowledge that the required capital would be available when necessary.

2. Existing shortages could be quickly overcome. New construction could be started when needed, and coincidentally, new employment would be created.

3. Community interest in the control and operation of hospitals would be maintained. The hospital bonds could be sold to the general public as well as to institutional purchasers and one can visualize that members of the public would get something of the same satisfaction out of purchasing hospital bonds that they did out of purchasing wartime victory bonds. These bonds could be sold in a manner which would encourage additional gifts. The buyer of a $500 bond would be a very good prospect for a gift of $50.

4. The Ontario Hospital Services Commission could embark on an effective programme of regional planning freed from the need to contend with almost hopeless financial odds or excessive attachment to municipal apron-strings, or the need to build hospitals simply in the location where the funds can be raised.

5. The plan is capable of adjustment to any increases in hospital construction grants which may become available from the federal government.

6. It provides that taxpayers of the future will be able to participate in payment for the assets which they enjoy.

7. The long-run cost trends of this programme are downwards. In the first years we would have to pay heavily to overcome existing shortages, but once this was done, future hospital construction could be geared primarily to the increase in population.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that it costs money to borrow money, yet with such a plan as I have outlined, I believe that this irritating disadvantage could be greatly offset by making it possible to start construction when it is necessary, and thus obviate the increased expenditures which are inevitably associated with every year of delay in any building venture.

A balanced hospital system requires not only active treatment beds, but long-term units and facilities for the active and terminal care of the chronically ill, for the convalescent and for those in need of rehabilitation therapy, and nursing homes and domiciliary institutions for the care of the aged. I have not mentioned these, partly to conserve the time of the hon. members of the House, partly because the financial impact they make is less vast, and partly because the proposal I have outlined is of general application.

It would be folly to set the stage for an effective programme of rapid hospital construction if we were not able to provide the professional personnel necessary to run the hospitals. The same Metro survey which I referred to has shown that, provided we act with determination and dispatch, there will be sufficient personnel to meet the demands of increased hospital accommodation, although special attention will need to be paid to schools of nursing, to the hospitals affiliated with our medical colleges, and to medical education in general.

Research, including clinical research, is of extreme importance in the establishment and maintenance of the highest possible standards of medical care. And we will also need to pay special attention to the research facilities to be established at the largest general hospitals and in particular, at the teaching hospitals.

In large metropolitan areas, such as Toronto, it is also necessary to pay special attention to the needs of emergency departments, which are subject to ever-growing demands.

Mr. Speaker, I have sought to suggest that hospitals should be recognized as physical assets of prime social importance and that they should be capitalized and treated as capital assets. I have sought to outline a practical proposal for carrying such a principle into effect, and I hope that these thoughts may commend themselves to the hon. members of this House as subjects worthy of early and serious deliberation.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one or two very brief remarks. I am deeply honoured to be the first to represent the new electoral district of Forest Hill in this House. The constituency contains not only the village of Forest Hill, but the greater part of it lies in the ancient and distinguished township of York. I regret—and I am sure the people of Forest Hill also regret—that the constituency has not been given a name which would reflect the place which York township plays in the new constituency, and which it has played for so very long in the life of this great metropolitan area.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to subscribe most enthusiastically to the views expressed by the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler) and the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard) when they so ably moved and seconded the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Particularly, I should like to subscribe with enthusiasm to all they said by way of congratulation to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and to this government. I am one of many members in this House who recognizes that his presence here today is largely due to the confidence which the electorate reposed in the hon. Prime Minister, in his government and in its record of accomplishments and its promise for the future.

Finally, and most importantly, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate you upon your election and associate myself most warmly with all the sentiments of confidence and respect which have been expressed by other speakers.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton): Mr. Speaker, it is with a feeling of privilege and some pride that I am able, as a new member to speak for the first time in this assembly. One cannot be aware of the history of the Legislature, its role in the development of our province, without some feeling of pride coupled with the desire to copy the record of many of those great men and women who have sat in this House. I would therefore wish to thank the people in Halton county again for their support in the recent election and pledge to represent them all to the best of my ability.

Halton county, Mr. Speaker, as many hon. members know, is located between the ridings of Peel and Hamilton-Wentworth, having Lake Ontario as its southern boundary and the riding of Wellington-Dufferin as its northern boundary. My riding includes the urban centres of Acton, Burlington, Georgetown, Milton, and Oakville and the rural townships of Esquesing and Nassagaweya. I am proud to say that included among my constituents, at least on a part-time basis, is the hon. member for York North (Mr. Mackenzie). As a matter of fact, he is one of the most vocal, and if I do not get rid of the porcupines in Nassagaweya it is possible I may lose his support.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to my predecessor in office, Mr. Stanley Hall. Mr. Hall represented Halton from 1943 to 1962. During that period the population of my county increased from about 27,000 people to 125,000 people, changing mainly from a rural riding to essentially an urban riding. As our representative, Stan Hall assisted this growth and expansion as the province developed highways, built hospitals and schools, and assisted in the construction of courtroom facilities. The Halton manor for the aged at Milton and the school for the deaf were among Mr. Hall's prime projects. During his time as well, The Department of Municipal Affairs guided amalgamation proceedings whereby Burlington and Oakville became the two largest towns in Canada; experiments which for the most part have proved successful. Stan Hall was a man of great integrity, a good member, and served his riding well.

Those departments which most directly affect my riding are Education, Municipal Affairs, Economics and Development and Agriculture. As in most constituencies, education is the field posing the greatest challenge. I will not attempt to give you figures on the fantastic growth of our school population nor the number of schools constructed during the last five or ten years. As an example, however, I might say that where there was one high school in Burlington in 1956, there are now four. An extension has also been added to the original of these high schools.

The government has greatly assisted in all phases of education in our county. We have new technical and vocational high schools in Oakville and Burlington. Already they are filled.

It is hoped that a third such school can be constructed in the Milton area to serve the northern part of my riding.

A big problem, Mr. Speaker, is school board budgets and the continuous rise in the cost of education. It is common now that education costs total as much as 60 per cent of the total revenue of a municipality. Yet town councillors and The Department of Education have very little control over detailed costs. The estimated future construction costs of some school boards over a projected five-year period would make strong men weep. I am sure that the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) is ready to contend that he has the biggest and most complex department in the provincial government.

Most school boards are made up of intelligent and dedicated men and women. This is certainly the case in Halton. The same is true of administrative staffs. I feel, however, that councils and the department should be in a position to give more direction and co-operation to these boards. Councils should have more control over budgets, particularly capital budgets. The whole machinery of planning estimates should be a team effort between school boards, their administrative staffs, and councils and their administrative staffs, particularly treasury departments and finance committees.

There should, Mr. Speaker, be more direction from The Department of Education in respect to curricula, text books, and elementary school boundaries. Many school areas should be consolidated, particularly in our townships.

The Speech from the Throne indicated that the Ontario foundation tax plan will be implemented this year. This, Mr. Speaker, will help build a united Ontario community based upon the principles of equality of opportunity for all our people. I hope, however, that before final implementation of this plan that the classifications for grants in respect to municipalities will be reconsidered.

No doubt there was a day when the words "town", "rural municipality" and "city" had specific and definite connotations. At that time a system of grant tables could be based on such concepts. These terms now have little meaning. One would be hard pressed to show a difference in the problems faced, for example, by the South Peel board of education, the North York board of education and the Burlington board of education. Each is rapidly expanding educationally; each has large sections of farm land; all have areas of dense population and rapidly increasing debenture debts; each has almost identical transportation problems. Yet one is a township, one is a metropolitan community, and one is an urban municipality and hence each is on a separate table of grants. Unfortunately, in this case, Burlington is the urban municipality and receives smaller grants than the other two boards in this comparison. Representations have been made to the hon. Minister and I am sure that in order to make the foundation tax plan a success, adjustments will be made.

In agriculture, a Halton community was the first in the province to take advantage of The Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. This project, Mr. Speaker, is concerned mainly with the determination of economic use of farm land, particularly as this land is affected by the urban sprawl. This is essentially a research project including soil and water conservation and farm assessment.

It is my hope, sir, that representation will be made by our hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Cass) to the Minister of Justice in Ottawa recommending that sections in the criminal code be amended to allow churches, service clubs, and other groups to hold properly conducted fund-raising projects. The procedure whereby these functions can be closed by the provincial police on a complaint of breach of a federal statute is ridiculous. The main function of service clubs, for example, is to assist in community projects and the conventional way to finance this work is by holding draws or raffles which cannot be classified as criminal in any way.

Turning to trade and commerce, Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) has praised the efforts of The Department of Economics and Development in its trade crusade. The need for economic expansion is to provide a high level of employment and cannot be overemphasized; the continued success of this programme is necessary to provide jobs for an ever-increasing work force. Also, the municipalities in our province need the industrial assessment to help pay the cost of education, administration, recreation and other services. There must be a healthy ratio between industrial and residential assessment, otherwise the homeowner will be over-taxed, the municipality will be heavily in debt or essential projects will be cancelled or postponed.

It is important, therefore, that the industrial climate remain healthy, that a "dog eat dog" competition does not develop between the provinces.

Burlington is one of the municipalities in my bailiwick, Mr. Speaker, that requires more industrial assessment. About five years ago a large Hamilton industry purchased nearly 60 acres of land in Burlington with the idea of establishing its whole complex there. This was wonderful news for my home town and the result of efforts by the town fathers. The particular company employs about 600 people and would mean that Burlington would finally have a large major industry. Part of this company's operation is established in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, and for various economical reasons this also would be moved to Burlington.

Last year, when the company started to proceed with these plans, representatives of the Quebec government indicated that the company's products would be boycotted if the contemplated move to Burlington was carried out. It was pointed out that 36 per cent of the company's products were sold in Quebec and that this could be a costly move. It was also emphasized that labour rates were lower in that section of Quebec where the company was located as compared with the "golden horseshoe" area of Ontario. The Burlington agent acting for this industry has been instructed to sell the 60 acres of industrial land.

Mr. Speaker, I am not attempting to become involved in the dialogue of commissions and communications. I will leave that to the federal field. I will say that I am in accord with most of the things said by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) in respect to Confederation. However, I think it is important for the success of Confederation that each partner deal fairly with each other on a high moral plane. It has been said that thinking together is unity, and working together is success. In my opinion the province of Quebec has the greatest natural resources of any area in Canada, most of it relatively untapped. The present government there is on the right track and there is no necessity of economic pressure in this way to achieve its goals. One can imagine the economic rat-race that would develop if all provinces used such methods to build up their industrial communities. Businessmen, particularly those from foreign lands would say, "a plague on both your houses." I was born and raised in the province of Quebec and I know that the greatest years for that province still lie ahead. Its metropolis, Montreal, is bustling with businessmen from every corner of the globe wanting to invest, develop and build. All that is needed is what we have in Ontario—a climate of confidence.

A successful administration recognizes that business and government must work hand-in-hand with a programme which will beneficially affect the welfare of its people and provide reasonable return for investment and vision. It is essential for the success of this Canadian partnership that all governments be frank and honest with each other and that economic discrimination in all its forms be eliminated. Expansion and prosperity, Mr. Speaker, make a happy people.

Imagine what good would result if representatives of Ontario and Quebec's Departments of Trade and Industry visited each other from time to time exchanging ideas and methods, all for a common objective. This would be bonne entente on a positive basis. I think of the International Plowing Match held this year at Caledon with products and representatives from nearly every province in Canada as well as other nations. Representatives there displayed and operated their equipment, speaking different languages, proud of their products without a trace of mistrust or nationalism.

These are my personal opinions, Mr. Speaker. I therefore make a plea that circumstances will change so as to allow the industry to which I refer to carry out its plans to establish in Burlington. I sincerely believe that this will be to the mutual advantage of both provinces.

Finally, a plea for economy in government. Indications are that the province needs more revenue. There are certain departments, such as Education and Welfare, that must meet the expanding needs of our people. However, where estimated expenditures exceed revenue, possibly budgets could be planned over a two- or three-year period, setting up capital reserves to finance projects that are not imminent. Municipalities are required to do this when borrowing—why can't we? When we run out liquor and cigarettes, the pinch is going to hurt, Mr. Speaker.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to add my congratulations on your election as Speaker of the House. I am sure you will carry out your duties in a firm, fair, and impartial manner. Believe me, there are times when you have my sympathy.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, before commencing his remarks, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister could indicate whether he wants the debate to continue to 1 o'clock or whether I should move the adjournment now?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I would suggest you adjourn the debate because perhaps you would wish to speak for more than 15 minutes.

Mr. Singer moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

THE CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General) moves second reading of Bill No. 1, An Act to amend The Conveyancing and Law of Property Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE INDUSTRIAL SAFETY ACT, 1964

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour) moves second reading of Bill No. 3, The Industrial Safety Act, 1964.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us whether or not this is going to go to the standing committee. If it is and there will be ample time there, I would just as soon discuss it clause by clause and perhaps discuss some of the principles at the standing committee.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Some of the legislation which is being advanced by our department must be described as major legislation and it is our intention that it should go to the committee on labour law.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I take it the hon. Minister is not going to avail himself of an opportunity at this time to make any further comments on this bill beyond what he has said on first reading. Not being a member of the committee concerned, and in any case this being the place where principle of bills is best debated, I would like to make some comments on the bill.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would congratulate the hon. Minister on bringing forward some significant labour legislation in this session, legislation which, in my opinion, is long overdue. The bill now before us is a case in point. As the explanatory notes state, this legislation, or legislation on the same subject matter which had a different title, has not been thoroughly revised since 1932, and its structure is based on legislation that dates back to 1884 as far as this province is concerned, and even earlier than that as far as Great Britain is concerned. The old Factory, Shop and Office Building Act, I think we can all agree, was completely out of date. It was confusing, no doubt difficult to enforce in many areas, and it is desirable that it should be replaced by an up-to-date statute.

One of the difficulties in discussing legislation of this kind is that the real substance of the legislation is really left to be dealt with by regulation. I am not complaining about that procedure. I think it is the only practical way to handle the complicated matter of providing for adequate safety in factories and other establishments. By regulation it is possible to go into a great deal of detail that is not possible in the statute, and it is also possible to amend regulations quickly as circumstances require. So I am not complaining about the principle of leaving what is really the substance of the legislation to regulation. I merely call attention to the fact to indicate we really have no way of knowing whether this legislation will be of any great value until the regulations come down. We can hope that the department and the government will carry through with their intention of modernizing our safety legislation by putting forth modern, up-to-date, enforceable regulations. I hope those regulations will be brought forward at the earliest possible opportunity.

Another problem that arises in connection with discussion of a bill of this kind is that even with the best Act and the best regulations, we do not really achieve proper safety standards unless there is adequate enforcement. Inspection and enforcement is the key to the whole subject. And, of course, the Act itself discloses nothing as to the department's intentions in the matter of enforcement. No doubt when we come to the estimates of The Department of Labour we will be able to get a clearer idea than we have now of the government's intentions in this field.

But I would suggest to the hon. Minister that if it is intended to carry on with much the same staff as he has had in the past, then his efforts in bringing forward a new Act and new regulations will be greatly reduced in value.

I was a little concerned to read in one of the newspapers—I have forgotten which one, I would have brought the clipping here if I had realized this bill was coming up today—but I read in one of the newspapers a statement that was apparently attributed to the department and which may or may not be true, that the department in fact did intend to carry on very much with its existing staff, with the existing number of inspectors. If I am wrong in my interpretation of what I read in the paper, the hon. Minister no doubt will correct me.

But if that is so, I think it is regrettable and I think that much of what he is trying to do in this House will be negated.

As I understand it, from reading the most up-to-date reports of The Department of Labour—and I concede that the most up-to-date one is somewhat out of date, more than a year out of date—but using that report as a guide there are approximately 55 inspectors available for the enforcement of this legislation. It is also indicated in that report that those 55 inspectors during the fiscal year in question, which as I recall it was the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962, carried out something in the neighbourhood of 55,000 to 60,000 inspections in the course of one year, the majority of these were described as first inspections with a minority, I think something like 9,000 or 10,000, being second inspections.

I take it those second inspections were undertaken because violations were discovered on the first inspection and therefore the department considered it necessary to go back to find out if the violations had been corrected.

At any rate, there were about 1,000 inspections per inspector carried out in that fiscal year. Now that would mean that each inspector had to carry out an average of about three inspections per day to undertake the number of inspections indicated in the report, and as I understand it, the situation is much the same now as it was then.

Undoubtedly there are some small establishments, Mr. Speaker, where an inspector could adequately carry out an inspection in a third of a day, find time to travel to another establishment, carry out an inspection there, and find time to go to still another one and carry out an inspection. This is possible with some of the smaller establishments, but on an average I think it is preposterous to suggest that adequate inspections can be carried on when inspectors, all of them, are day in and day out throughout the year, carrying out an average of three inspections per day.

The report itself points out that there are some establishments where an inspection may require up to two weeks and even longer. I would think the plant of the Steel Company of Canada, to take an example, to be inspected adequately would require at least two weeks by one inspector and probably more.

So in the past the legislation we had, inadequate as it was, became even more inadequate because there was no real intent—I should rephrase that, Mr. Speaker: there was inadequate inspection. I have no doubt that the factory inspectors of The Department of Labour are qualified people who can do a job, but with the work load that each of them had it was obviously impossible to do a proper job.

I would like to draw what I consider to be a rather interesting analogy, Mr. Speaker, between The Department of Labour and The Department of Lands and Forests. In The Department of Lands and Forests, according to information I obtained some time ago, there are well over 200 conservation officers, whose duties I think fall within the area of what I would describe as fish and game inspectors, people whose job it is to make sure that the laws of this province relating to game and fish are observed.

Now I am not complaining about that number of conservation officers in The Department of Lands and Forests. I think it is very important that the laws concerned should be observed and that steps should be taken to ensure that people do observe them. And I realize that these officers have a very difficult job covering large sections of the province to make sure that the laws are observed.

But it seems to me a rather curious inversion of values to provide for over 200 officers to look after fish and game, and only 50 or 60 people to look after human safety and human lives.

And let it be said that the factory inspectors have difficult and complicated jobs. They may not have to cover as large a territory geographically as the conservation officers, but they have to cover real jungles when you consider the complexity of many of the establishments that they have to inspect in this province. I say to the hon. Minister that although his intentions are of the best, and no doubt he intends to do something about industrial safety in this province, his intentions will be frustrated if he cannot persuade the government to increase greatly the number of inspectors who are available to carry out inspections under this Act and its regulations and to ensure that the Act and its regulations are complied with.

We have become all too accustomed, in this House, to having legislation placed before us which looks very fine, which gets a very good press and no doubt contributes to a favourable image of the government, but which, when we come to the reality of seeing it in operation, turns out to be little better than useless.

It is not very long ago, I do not remember exactly how long ago, but I do not think more than two years ago, that we had before us in this House a bill which later became The Construction Safety Act. That bill looked very good and the Act looks very good. It was a tremendous improvement on the ancient, antiquated, almost forgotten statute that it replaced, which was called, I think, The Building Trades Protection Act. It looked, Mr. Speaker, like a real step forward as far as safety in this province was concerned. But the experience which we have had since then indicates it is of practically no effect at all on improving safety practices in building construction. I have not had an opportunity to get the exact figures, but I venture to suggest that the number of fatalities and accidents in building construction in this area and probably in the whole province has been at least as great since the Act came into force, and indeed has probably even been greater. The basic problem has been that the inspection provisions of that legislation were totally inadequate. Over the protests, I think, of the combined Opposition in this House, the government persisted in providing that inspection under the legislation should evolve upon the municipalities. Almost all authorities in the field, including the McAndrew commission, stated that that was a wrong approach, but the government stubbornly persisted in it with the result that legislation which in itself was good turned out to be much less satisfactory in practice.

I hope that the same will not be experienced with The Industrial Safety Act. I am afraid, however, that it will unless the hon. Minister can come forward in this debate or when his estimates are presented and advise us that he is planning at least to double the factory inspection staff in his department. I am not saying that he can do that overnight—I realize that you do not get trained and qualified factory inspectors overnight—but I do believe that the intention of the department should be to double its factory inspection staff as quickly as possible. I believe that this House should be prepared to make the funds available to it so that it can do that.

There is one last matter that I would like to raise, which the hon. Minister can refer to now or in committee or whenever the time appears appropriate, and that is the question of safety in foundries. This has been a real bone of contention over the years. I will confess to the hon. Minister that, not realizing this bill was coming up this morning, I did not have time to check into the present status of that very serious matter, but I think it is one on which this House and the public should have full information. There have been foundry regulations kicking around for a long time which did not get into force because of some deficiencies in the law which I did not fully understand. I trust that, if something has not already been done, it is intended that under this Act there will be full authority to make complete safety regulations for foundries. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the member is almost finished or is liable to finish. If not, I was going to suggest that he adjourn the debate.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I will try to finish with one sentence. We commend the hon. Minister for bringing forth this bill and we express the hope that he will take the administrative steps necessary to make the bill and the regulations fully effective.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Just before the House rises, I would think the committees will begin sitting next week, as work here is referred to them. In view of the fact that the private bills committee sits every Tuesday and Thursday mornings and it appears that it will have ample to engage it for some weeks, and since we sit here on Friday mornings, this leaves Mondays and Wednesdays. I realize that Monday morning is a very difficult morning for those who come in from out of town, so what I propose is, that if committees meet on Monday, the House will meet at 3 o'clock each Monday. Later on in the session we will start to sit at two in the afternoon. On Mondays we will always meet at three and possibly we will be able to have committee meetings on Mondays at one, so that we would have a two-hour period for committee meetings before the House sits on Mondays. In this way I would hope to avoid the overlapping of committee sittings. If we do not do it this way, it means really that we will have committees sitting at the same time—because we have only Wednesday on which the private bills committee is not sitting, and that, of course, is the most important committee of the House and one that most members want to attend. We will try this Monday morning routine and see if this will solve the problem.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister is in the position, with regard to the future business of the House, to indicate what is likely to be the pattern of night sessions? Is he in a position to indicate, for example, regular night sittings, so that we might plan our future programme knowing that say, Tuesday and Thursday nights are likely to be night sittings and the others will not be, or give some clarification at least?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in the last two years at least, we have followed a pretty firm position in night sittings. We have sat Tuesdays and Thursdays and I doubt that we will have any night sittings before the budget is brought in. Undoubtedly we will thereafter, on Tuesdays and Thursdays and then Mondays and Wednesdays if the need arises, but until the need arises, we will start with Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.05 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JANUARY 27, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

The following petition was brought up, laid on the table, read and received:

Of the corporation of the township of Toronto praying that an Act may pass exempting farm lands, in excess of 100 foot frontage, and when held in blocks of not less than five acres, from the special rate per foot frontage for waterworks.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): I beg to present to the House the 54th Annual Report of The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario for the year ended December 31, 1962.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question directed to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Simonett), to whom the commission of the Ontario Northland Railway reports.

The question is: is there any truth in the statement attributed to general manager E. A. Frith of the Ontario Northland Railway that the railway is bankrupt? If so, what measures does the hon. Minister contemplate taking to salvage the railway?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, the statement attributed to the general manager of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission took place at a meeting in Haileybury on Thursday, January 3, at which members of the municipal councils, local residents and commissioners and staff of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission were present. May I add that I was in attendance at this meeting.

The statement was made during a general question-and-answer period. A questioner with an apparent business and accounting background stated that the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission was financing its capital programme to a large extent out of current depreciation. The general manager in reply stated that in 1962 the operations of the commission had resulted in a net revenue of approximately $300,000. The amount of money required to finance new capital works for that year was approximately $3 million. The total investment in all works under the control of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission is in the neighbourhood of $80 million to $90 million. The general manager went on to say that considering this investment, the capital programme and the profit for the year, in terms of a normal business the commission is bankrupt.

May I say that the operation of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission is not to be considered as a normal business. The Ontario government has in the past, and is prepared in the future, to look upon the commission's operations as development in nature. Many returns have accrued to the people of Ontario over many years because of the development in the north through adequate transportation services.

May I further add that the commission, with the support of the government, is carrying through considerable changes in the kind and speed at which services will be performed in the north. Commencing in April, there will be a separation of LCL and freight and passenger services. A merchandising train service will be inaugurated to handle LCL and express. This will allow for much faster transportation of this type of shipment into northern Ontario and will separate freight and express from passenger service. Therefore passengers will be able to reach the north and return much faster than has heretofore been the case.

In addition, to provide extra services, new bus services are being inaugurated from Timmins and North Bay. For part of this service two of the most modern buses available today will be purchased and placed in service. On December 18 and 19, 1963, I visited, with the commissioners and staff of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission, several communities in northern Ontario to review the policies and programmes of the commission and to investigate certain requests being made by the residents. Last week, on Thursday and Friday, a similar trip was made to the north to make further plans concerning the speed-up of the service.

It is also my intention to return to North Bay to see first hand the operation of the commission and to work out our own plans for increased service with the residents of the north. These trips will be made on an irregular periodic basis.

May I say also to the House that it is my intention to have all matters concerning the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission referred to the House committee on commissions so that all matters can be discussed thoroughly.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

In connection with the change of service on April 1, will trains No. 46 and No. 47 carry mail also, as well as express? Does the hon. Minister know that?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, may I say at this point that one of our officials was in Ottawa last Friday trying to work out the mail delivery and I doubt if I could answer the question at this time, but I will give the hon. member the answer as soon as I get it.

Mr. Troy: Because there are a large number of employees involved. Another question—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The member had a question to ask the Minister and he has answered it. I have allowed a supplementary question and I think that is sufficient.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources.

The question is this: In view of the serious gas explosion which occurred in North York, in my riding, on Saturday, is the hon. Minister satisfied that sufficient safeguards are being maintained by the gas industry against the occurrence of such explosions?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, first may I thank the hon. member for giving me advance notice of this question.

I presume the question relates to the explosion which occurred at approximately 7.15 a.m. Saturday, January 25, at the corner of Wheatsheaf Crescent and Chequers Court in North York Township. Our inspectors were at the scene of the accident on Saturday morning shortly after it was reported and their investigations determined that all applicable regulations with regard to the gas installation had been followed. This explosion resulted from an unlikely set of conditions, and although accidents of this nature are not high in number, I sincerely hope that by making use of new developments, we will eliminate to a large extent such occurrences.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to make a brief announcement.

It is a pleasure to report to the House that the monumental task of mailing over 2.5 million application forms for the new Ontario driver's licence has now been completed.

I am told that this is the largest mailing operation of a personal nature ever undertaken in this province. Members of the staff of the department have been working round the clock on a three-shift basis to send out 60,000 application forms per day over a period of about eight weeks.

In a mailing operation of this magnitude it is inevitable, sir, that some motorists for various reasons will not have received their forms. To be sure that all drivers are able to renew their licences before the expiry date, motorists who have not received their applications may go to their nearest licence issuing office and complete the special form provided for this purpose. If it is not convenient to go to the local issuing office, they are asked to write direct to the department and to state the number of the 1963 driver's licence, whether it is an operator or chauffeur's licence, their full name, address and birth date.

I must emphasize that to obtain the new driver's licence, which will be valid for periods of up to three years, the new type of application form must be used, either the type received through the mails or the special form available through the local issuing offices.

The deadline for obtaining drivers' licences has been set at Friday, February 28, and it is the responsibility of the individual driver to get his licence by that date.

I should like to report to the House that while 1964 licence plates for passenger cars and motorcycles have been on sale since December 2, only about 30 per cent of the motorists in the province have purchased them as yet. In spite of the fact that the expiry date is February 28 and no extension beyond that date will be granted, over 1,000,000 automobiles are still travelling on the streets and highways of Ontario with their 1963 plates. Motorists are reminded that they should secure their 1964 plates and their driver's licence as soon as possible to avoid the inconvenience of last-minute line-ups.

Last year's plates for trucks, buses and trailers expire on March 31 and no extension is contemplated. Yearly plates for 1964 go on sale on March 2 and are valid until March 31, 1965. As the new system of quarterly licensing introduced last year has won popular acceptance among commercial operators and private trailer owners, it will be continued this year and plates for the first quarter will be available on March 25.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to make a statement with respect to the Ontario Foundation Tax Plan.

On February 21, last year the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) gave to this House a statement outlining the principles and objectives of the Ontario Foundation Tax Plan and said that this plan would be introduced and implemented in 1964.

In brief, Mr. Speaker, the purposes and objects of the Ontario Foundation Tax Plan, as set out in that statement are: firstly, to provide equality of educational opportunity for every young person throughout the province, regardless of the wealth of the community in which he or she may live; secondly, to ensure that the ever-increasing costs of elementary and secondary school education do not bear too heavily upon the home owner and other municipal taxpayers of the province.

To implement this plan we are now ready to distribute to the school boards the regulations covering the grants that the boards of the province will receive in the fiscal year 1964-65. This is the earliest these regulations have been made available to the school boards in recent years. Our objective in providing them at this time is to permit the school boards to do the necessary planning and budgeting in order that they may fit their requirements into the general budgeting of the municipalities.

Our growth in education since the end of World War II has indeed been fantastic. In 1946 we had approximately 663,000 students enrolled in elementary and secondary schools. For this present school year, 1963-64, we have about 1,600,000. Thus you can see we have added nearly one million pupils in 17 years.

Secondary school enrolment alone has tripled. In general, our pupils are staying in school for a longer period of time. At the end of the war, about one third of the 15- to 19-year age group was in school and today three-quarters of this age group are continuing their education. This required that we construct schools at the same pace. We have added 1,100,000 pupil places in elementary and secondary schools since 1945. Thus hon. members can see that we have indeed kept pace with the increase in our school population. It is axiomatic that we must continue to keep pace. It is also essential that we ensure that a crippling burden is not placed upon our municipalities through this increase.

In order to relieve the burden on the home owner in this first year of the Ontario Foundation Tax Plan, the amount of grants that we will distribute to the local school boards will be $285,400,000, which amount includes the grants for text books in Grades 9 and 10 for this coming year. This, Mr. Speaker, represents an increase of $52 million over last year's estimates. This increase is necessary to take care of not only the natural increase in our school population, but also the adjustment in grants as a result of the foundation tax plan.

Basically, the Ontario Foundation Tax Plan, 1964, involves the setting of a "foundation" level of expenditure for various types of schools and the determination of the proportional sharing of the total costs of the foundation tax plan between the province, on the one hand, and the school boards, who are responsible to their taxpaying school supporters, on the other. It is essential to recognize clearly the nature and purpose of the unit cost levels and mill rate levels set forth in the foundation plan. They have been set primarily to govern the allocation of financial responsibility as between the province and the boards and to distribute the funds available in such a manner that the local burden of supporting education is equalized throughout the province to the highest degree possible under the constitutional and administrative requirements of our school system.

Nevertheless, we do feel that the levels selected for operating costs are quite reasonable. Extraordinary expenditures, being non-recurring for the most part and very uneven in application from board to board, have been treated separately and on a different basis, as is necessary in a foundation-type grant plan. Careful studies of the existing cost structure in this province indicate clearly that the majority of the existing boards can operate adequately and efficiently at the levels specified. To force local boards to increase local taxation, or to spend unwisely and unnecessarily, simply to satisfy the rigid demands of the classical foundation formulas would obviously be ridiculous.

We do not require that any board spend exactly the amount per pupil specified, or levy exactly the mill rate specified; these values are used primarily to calculate the grant payable. Any board is free to go above or remain below these levels; the local authority is in the best position to determine what are reasonable levels for its community—this is probably its major power and duty under the present school Acts and regulations. We believe that the exercise of this power locally provides one of the greatest safeguards for our democratic way of life, and is one of the best means of strengthening it.

We have, consequently, for this first year of operation of the new plan, deliberately set the levels in terms of the average. They will be kept under constant review, and will be changed at once when the need to do so has been demonstrated. We have built in many other safeguards, too, for this first year of operation of the new plan. It is our hope that these may be removed progressively as experience is gained with the foundation plan in our own jurisdiction—which is like no other in Canada, or on this continent. For instance, the “pure” or classical foundation programme works satisfactorily only in a jurisdiction where there are comparatively large units of school administration, and few in number, and where the ability to pay for education does not vary too greatly from one extreme to another. These conditions are not as yet satisfied in our province, as you know: we have approximately 3,200 elementary school boards, for example, varying in equalized assessment per classroom unit from less than $10,000 to more than $1,000,000. Our studies have revealed that caution is essential during the introductory years of the new plan. Experience elsewhere, and our own studies, reveal only too clearly the existence of “financial time-bombs” in foundation-type plans, which could, if detonated unwittingly, or otherwise, impose a financial load sufficiently heavy to threaten our whole economy.

In order to eliminate the major weaknesses of the “pure” foundation programme, as applied in our province, we have introduced what may at first glance appear to be complications or restrictions on the full implementation of the classical formulas. We had to introduce sufficient flexibility, for instance, to ensure that the grant plan did not discourage growth and experimentation, and hence local interest in education, in those units of administration where there has been a commitment to education combined with a willingness and an ability to pay locally for adaptations and improvements, which eventually benefit the whole provincial system. We felt, too, that it was very important to emphasize the tax-relief and stimulation functions of the grant plan as well as the equalization function.

Perhaps the gravest danger of all arises from the fact that, under the conditions which prevail in this province, the sudden implementation of a “pure” foundation programme could give to some boards such large sums of money in the first year of operation that they might well have either to increase expenditures extravagantly or reduce their mill rate to an unreasonably low level for one year. At the same time it could cut grants to other boards to such an extent—for example, a “negative” grant is a real possibility under the classical formulas—that a doubling or more in their mill rate or a crippling reduction in levels of expenditure might be necessary.

The points, Mr. Speaker, enumerated above illustrate, I believe, some of the numerous problems we have encountered and I hope solved successfully. We have tried, by various adjustments, to eliminate every such flaw or, where this was not possible, to reduce its effects to an absolute minimum.

For each of the four major types of school—elementary, continuation, academic high and vocational high—we have set up a foundation level of operating expenditure based upon actual levels existing in Ontario schools. These operating foundation levels are as follows: $210 per elementary-school pupil, $320 per continuation-school pupil, $420 per academic-high-school pupil, and $550 per vocational-school pupil. In effect, these operating foundation levels are extended by the amount of any stimulation grants paid.

For all types of schools, the foundation level for extraordinary expenditure—debt charges, capital expenditure from current funds, and expenditure on transportation—will be determined, as in the past, by approval based on certain principles, such as that debt charges for school accommodation will be approved on capital borrowings not exceeding $20,000 per classroom for elementary schools and $25,000 per classroom for secondary schools. Expenditures on transportation will be approved according to the same formula used in the past, as will capital expenditures from current funds.

It will thus be seen that outlays by boards will vary tremendously, sir, in the foundation level per pupil for extraordinary expenditure, depending on their expansion rates, need for transportation and financing of new permanent improvements.

As to the question of financing the foundation programme, the province will pay to each elementary and secondary board, as a basic tax relief grant, the first 35 per cent of the extraordinary expenditure portion of its foundation programme. Thus, the province will pay to each board, as a basic tax relief grant, the first $80 per pupil of the operating foundation programme of $210 per pupil attending elementary schools; the first $120 per pupil of the operating foundation programme of $320 per pupil attending continuation schools; the first $175 per pupil of the operating foundation programme of $420 per pupil attending academic high schools; and the first $250 per pupil of the operating foundation programme of $550 per pupil attending vocational high schools.

The remainder of the foundation programme level will be financed jointly by the province and municipalities in a proportion based on ability to pay as measured by equalized assessment per classroom unit. It is obvious from this that some boards will have enough local revenue to finance the balance of the foundation programme after the basic tax relief grants are paid without an undue tax burden.

The province will pay, as an equalization grant on the operating foundation programme, the difference between the operating foundation programme level and the sum of the basic tax relief grant, and the yield of 11 mills on the equalized assessment of the public-school section or separate-school zone and of seven mills on that of the secondary-school district.

To make certain that equalization grants are used to improve the quality of education, no equalization grant on current operations can be greater than a variable percentage of a board's current cost of operating for the preceding year—a percentage to be based on equalized assessment per classroom unit and to range from 35 to 92 per cent.

The province—in addition to the 35 per cent basic tax relief grant—will pay to each board an equalization grant of a percentage of its recognized extraordinary expenditure, varying from zero to 57 per cent for elementary boards and from zero to 55 per cent for secondary boards. The balance of the recognized extraordinary expenditure—from 65 per cent for the wealthiest boards to eight per cent or 10 per cent for the poorest—will be financed by local taxation, except for a special growth-need grant.

When recognized extraordinary expenditure per class room unit is greater than $500 for an elementary-school board or $1,000 for a secondary-school board, a special growth-need grant, proportional to the excess over the above amounts, will be paid to the board. This grant is in the form of an additional percentage of the recognized extraordinary expenditure—varying from a minimum of one tenth of one per cent to 10 per cent for elementary boards and to 20 per cent for secondary boards. However, the total grant on recognized extraordinary expenditure cannot be greater than 95 per cent. This grant helps to keep the local tax burdens at a reasonable level, even in the face of rapid expansion necessitating, of course, much new construction, and in the face of high transportation expenditure.

In addition to basic tax relief grants and equalization grants, the government will continue to encourage special services and desirable administrative and organizational structure by means of stimulation grants. These grants will be paid to boards providing free textbooks, approved library books, free milk, free instruction in home economics and industrial arts to non-resident pupils, municipal inspection, and evening classes.

A special feature of the Ontario Foundation Tax Plan, 1964, will be the corporation tax adjustment grant which will equalize the benefits to be derived from corporation assessment within a municipality among all the elementary school boards in the municipality. No corporation assessment will be taken away from any board now possessing it; but instead, the province will pay a corporation tax adjustment grant, calculated at the 1962 average public-school mill rate on commercial assessment in the municipality, on the excess of that proportion of the total non-farm, non-residential corporation assessment of the municipality which constitutes the board's residential and farm assessment of the total residential and farm assessment of the municipality over the corporation assessment taxable by the board. I am sure the hon. members opposite, Mr. Speaker, all understand this.

This grant will be considered as local revenue. Since the additional assessment on which the grant is based will be added to the other assessment available to the board and used in calculating equalization rates and grant limitation percentages, the grant itself will not be subject to the limitations on grants dealt with in the next section of my remarks.

To smooth the transition from the previous grant system to the Ontario Foundation Tax Plan, 1964, the percentage that the 1964 grant is of the 1963 cost of operating, is not to be more than 20 per cent higher than the percentage the 1963 grants were of the 1962 cost of operating, nor is it to be more than five per cent less.

The general effect of this provision will be to spread over a number of years unusually large increases or decreases in grant; it will also function as a safety valve to control possible inaccuracies in the formulas in their first year of operation.

To ensure that boards do not use the increases in grant to lower their mill rates or maintain unusually low mill rates, while at the same time spending at a level well under the foundation programme level, an over-all limitation on grants has been provided for. As such boards increase their local contribution towards education so that it approaches the mill rate for current operations suggested by the province—11 mills for elementary, seven for secondary—such boards will, of course, receive all of the grants to which the formulas would entitle them.

I think it is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that because of the complexities that arise in implementing the Ontario Foundation Tax Plan and the large additional sums of money that will be required in the present year and that are bound to be required in the years ahead, we must look very carefully at the costs of new school construction. Controls over school construction, and research and investigation into new materials and new methods of construction are being pursued by The Department of Education. In addition, plans are being made to help eliminate inefficient use of the educational tax dollar, by creating larger units of school administration, particularly at the elementary-school level. No matter how much money we may channel into our school system, it is doubtful if we can obtain equality of educational opportunity and efficiency of administration unless we reduce the number of administrative units in the province as a whole. Our present plans are aimed at reducing the number of elementary-school units considerably. Much has already been done to accomplish this in the secondary-school area, but our efforts will continue undiminished.

With the distribution of these regulations, Mr. Speaker, to implement the principles of the Ontario Foundation Tax Plan as I have outlined them to you this afternoon, we are entering into a new era in the financing of our elementary- and secondary-school education. I think we are all agreed that the education of our young people must be a first charge of the government. Education cannot wait. The future of our province and its people for generations to come depends on a productive educational system. With the great record of achievement that lies behind, we can approach with confidence the challenges that lie ahead.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister permit a question relevant to the statement he has just made? I will not ask him to explain the statement, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to inquire how many larger units at the elementary level have been set up in the past year?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I have the information off-hand as to the number of new central areas that have been created, but there is a fair number. I will be very happy to get the exact number for the hon. member. They were created, as you know, primarily in the rural sections of our province. I would be going from memory, but I think now only six out of every 100 elementary-school students attend a one-room school in this province. I think I am roughly correct in that number.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister permit another question? Would he have the figures available which would indicate, in rough proportions, how many more provincial tax dollars will be contributed this year as contrasted with last year, in percentage perhaps, taking into account what would have been the normal growth?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would think, Mr. Speaker, I am just going from memory again, that the natural growth amount required under the past year, or the past system, would be in the neighbourhood of $13 million to $15 million, so that this new foundation plan would represent an increase of roughly $40 million over and above what might have been the case if the other plan had been continued. Now these, Mr. Speaker, are approximate figures.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister pleases, I just want to ask one question. When you were speaking of the elementary schools, I do presume that you were speaking of both the public and the separate, am I right?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I was speaking of both public and separate all through.

Mr. Belanger: Thanks very much.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: First order: resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I have nothing as startling to reveal as the hitherto unsuspected fact that distillers, or breweries, or manufacturers, or life insurance companies, or even trade unions, might from time to time contribute to political parties. Nor do I intend to repeat the suggestions made by my hon. colleagues and myself earlier last week insofar as these matters are concerned. Certainly it should be obvious to the government, and we will hope that we will see some action, that the public wants publicity attached to this type of donation and the public is entitled to expect real government consideration of this very serious problem. Very probably if there is such legislation brought down, if the government brings it down, there should be top limits on this type of donation.

I do, however, Mr. Speaker, want to comment on some of the activities that have engaged our attention since January 15. First of all, sir, I wish to commend you most sincerely for the firm, authoritative and fair manner in which you have approached your office. Your task is not an easy one, nor are the decisions you have made always been the obvious. You have, however, clearly and simply outlined your position and left no doubt in our minds that in this House, you are the only Speaker. Even though on occasion some of your rulings have not met with universal acclaim, your approach has earned the real respect of each and every hon. member of this assembly.

Then, too, I wanted to say a word about some of the speeches we have heard in the past several days. It has been remarked that we have in our membership more new faces than perhaps any legislative assembly has had before. Already we have heard from many of our new hon. members. Their contributions have, in my opinion, been of exceptional quality and will earn for this House the respect of all of the people of Ontario.

I do particularly want to commend the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop), and I am sorry, sir, he is not in his seat this afternoon, for the remarks made in his maiden speech. Though a government member, sir, he has not hesitated to quickly point out a serious shortcoming in the government's approach to matters of health. I do hope that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) was paying some attention to what he had to say. In the past the hon. Minister seemed to play down the importance of having more hospital beds in Metropolitan Toronto. He heard from one of the new hon. members a very strong criticism of this approach of the government over the past many years. There is no doubt, sir, that there is a real shortage of hospital beds in Metropolitan Toronto and the people of Metropolitan Toronto are entitled to government action in this regard. There is a shortage of hospital beds throughout the whole of the province of Ontario and the people of Ontario are entitled to some real action in this regard. The suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Forest Hill is a new one and certainly deserves the most careful consideration.

But the whole field of medical care wants careful study, and in an earlier debate this was clearly spelled out. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) indicated he was not in favour of compulsion. This was the word he used, and appeared to reject out of hand for this reason, the resolution put forward by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis).

His objection had the old and familiar ring. His predecessor used to vow on all appropriate occasions that he was going to defend local autonomy and he was going to defend it to the death. The Tories have been saying this for these 20-odd years they have been in government and they have been getting away with this same sort of nonsense for years and years. What do they really mean? What does the hon. Prime Minister really mean when he says we have no compulsion and he is against compulsion?

He said there is no compulsion in automobile insurance. This, sir, is nonsense, as you well know. We give the people of Ontario the right to drive their cars if they have insurance or if they throw away $20 in lieu of having an insurance policy—and we require them to carry a certificate to prove it. If this is not compulsion, what would the hon. Prime Minister call it?

In the field of hospital insurance, the large bulk of Ontario people are compelled to be insured. A few, such as the self-employed, are given some choice. But except for Ontario's millionaires, who do not have to worry about this sort of thing, what real choice is there? Is this not compulsion, Mr. Speaker?

Then through its arm, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, the government rules the hospitals of Ontario with a hand of iron. Even the moving of offices within a hospital—as petty a matter and a matter that can concern no one really except the administrators of the hospitals—even that event, sir, requires the approval of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

Presently we are concerned with labour disputes in Trenton, at the hospital in Trenton, and more recently at several hospitals in Windsor. These disputes revolve substantially around wage demands. The Ontario Hospital Services Commission demands lists of salary schedules and these schedules must be approved before the salaries can be paid. They cannot be varied without OHSC approval. Yet they put up the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) to initiate all sorts of inquiries to determine what is going on and why it is going on. Why does the government not bring this dispute into its proper perspective and admit that it is the one, through the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, that controls these things? It should not try to hide behind the skirts of the hackneyed phrase, no compulsion.

The whole question of nurses' salaries relates to the availability of nurses and certainly will be discussed very substantially during the estimates of the hon. Minister of Health. We suffer from nursing shortages and this is no secret to any hon. member of this House. The hospital services commission has a great deal to do with this. They determine salary schedules and the government has the responsibility for these decisions. No amount of excuses can get away from these facts.

Yet we hear from the hon. Prime Minister the phrase, we do not believe in compulsion.

There used to be a gentleman, sir, in the public life of this country, named Tommy Church. He was a former mayor of Toronto and a member of the House of Commons. One of his favourite speeches was to the effect that we had too many laws, too many restrictions and too many compulsions. He used to say we should scrap all of our statutes and let ourselves be governed only by the Ten Commandments. Perhaps he was right, but our way of life presently does not allow this sort of thing. Every statute that this government brings into this House and that this House enacts into law involves compulsion and we all know it. The Industrial Safety Acts, introduced by the hon. Minister of Labour, certainly are not being challenged by anyone, least of all the hon. Prime Minister, on the ground that they will compel certain people to act in a safe manner.

Let us be honest about our approach, Mr. Speaker, let us throw away all these outworn clichés, let us get down to facts and discuss the issues at hand in an effort to arrive at the best solution and not surround the legislative processes with high-sounding but meaningless phrases.

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I addressed a question to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Cass) concerning some statements that had appeared in the press relative to the human rights code. The hon. Attorney-General rose and rather caustically suggested that I had addressed the question to the wrong Minister, sir, that really he had no responsibility for this but he had discussed the matter with his colleague, the hon. Minister of Labour, and it was his responsibility. Then he went on to say that the idea behind the administration of the human rights code was mediation and they were going to attempt to mediate any apparent disagreements that took place. And in the event that that did not work, if somebody would come forward and file a complaint, perhaps somebody—and I presume that other somebody would be the hon. Minister of Labour—would take some action.

It seems, Mr. Speaker, rather surprising to me that the chief law officer of the Crown can dismiss so lightly and so out of hand the challenge hurled at the government by a gentleman who chose to be quoted and re-quoted in the press saying he was going to ignore the law and he was going to carry on the way he thought he should. This was not a question of saying that the law was wrong or that the law had been misinterpreted. The gentleman who was quoted in the newspaper said: "I don't care what the law is; I am going to carry on in the way I think is best."

Surely, Mr. Speaker, if the office occupied by the hon. Attorney-General means anything it means that as the chief law enforcement officer of this province he has a duty, and a real duty, to see that the laws of Ontario are enforced.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): He always fulfills it.

Mr. Singer: I am not too sure!

The hon. Attorney-General rose from his seat and tried to slough off this whole thing on the basis that it did not matter and I suggest to him, sir, along with his hon. colleagues in the front bench, that these things do matter. If we are to have respect for law and order in this province, when it is brought to the attention of the hon. Attorney-General that some member of the public said: I don't care what the law is, I am going to disobey it; that the hon. Attorney-General should be eager to rise in this House and say, I am going to enforce the law. The answer he gave is an insult to the office which he holds.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point that I want to deal with. It concerns the widening of Highway 401. As we know, within Metropolitan Toronto Highway 401 is being widened from four lanes to 12 lanes. A very substantial job of work is being done by The Department of Highways, a lot of dollars are being expended for this purpose. This is a matter that has been discussed in the election campaign, in various public meetings. It is a matter of concern to many hon. members of this House. My hon. colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Braithwaite), government members such as the hon. member for Armourdale (Mr. Carton), the hon. member for York Mills (Mr. Bales), the hon. member for Scarborough North (Mr. Wells) and the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young)—all of our ridings, all six of these ridings, lie beside the portion of Highway 401 about to be widened.

I do not know that I can speak for the other five hon. gentlemen, I know that many of them have appeared at public meetings, along with me, and have said at public meetings that they are very concerned about this. But the point is that in this widening it is necessary for the government to expropriate many properties. Insofar as their programme of expropriation is concerned, as far as I know, they have dealt fairly and equitably with those people whose land they have taken away. I would anticipate had there been violent complaint, or a substantial number of complaints, insofar as the expro-priatees are concerned, that we would have heard about it before now. But in the widening there has been an effect, and a real effect, on many properties—several hundred, perhaps 300 or 400 or 500 properties—which were not affected by expropriation. There has been a real effect on the value of these properties. There is no doubt, sir, that bringing a modern highway, 12 lanes in width, to the borders of a property that was protected from it by another building or by distance or by landscaping in the past, by bringing this highway right to the borders of the property today, it is going to have a very serious effect on the value of that property.

This is not idle gossip, nor is it something that cannot be proven time and time again. It has been proven, at least to my satisfaction, to a variety of civil servants who work in The Department of Highways. These gentlemen—and there has been a whole group of them—have been to various public meetings and have heard these complaints.

Some properties have depreciated a quarter, a third or more of their value and the government says: well, it is too bad.

It is too bad that our laws will not allow those people whose properties have depreciated to be compensated. The law presently relates only to expropriation. If we expropriate, we will pay; but if we do not take any portion of your land, we will not pay. The fact is, sir, that a few hundred home owners, a few hundred families in the province of Ontario, are being called upon to bear a very substantial loss for the benefit of all of the rest of the people of Ontario and the government, to this date at least, has given them little more than sympathy and promises—little more than sympathy.

It would seem to me, sir, that all of the problems that are involved in building a super highway system such as those currently involved in the widening of Highway 401, should somewhere along the line take into consideration the problem faced by people who have to suffer through no fault of their own.

There is nothing that these people did, sir, that put them in this position. It was the fact that Ontario grew. It was the fact that Metropolitan Toronto explosively expanded and suddenly these people—homeowners, owners of businesses, people who have grouped together and built churches, synagogues and so on—have found that the properties in which they had invested hundreds of thousands, millions of dollars have been depreciated. And there is no remedy.

It would seem to me, sir, that it would only be good common sense and equity that the government should be prepared to say that where there has been this kind of depreciation of property value, we will do something about it. It is no answer, sir, to suggest that the law does not allow us to move. The law is made by governments and if the law is inequitable, if the law is not just, then it can be changed by governments to become equitable and to become just.

I understand, sir, that the brief—I have the brief here on my table and it is a very able brief—is presently in the hands of the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton).

Mr. Speaker, it is being studied by himself and his officials. The problem raised in the brief is certainly nothing new. He and his officials have been hearing about it for many, many months and I understand, sir, that in the near future the hon. Minister is going to receive a deputation representative of the citizens who are affected in this way.

I would urge, sir, that the hon. Minister pay attention to the real problem that has been created by the necessary widening of Highway 401 and I would urge upon the government the real consideration that they should not ask a tiny minority of our people to pay for expansion demanded by all of the people of Ontario. Why should a few suffer for the benefit of the many?

If there is any sense of equity and justice in the minds of the government, they will approach this matter not on the basis of what the present existing law says, but on the basis of whether or not harm has been done and on the basis of whether or not, as a fair-thinking government, they are prepared to take some action which will deprive many people of a substantial part of their life-savings.

Now, sir, I want to turn to the Throne Speech. I was very disappointed in His Honour's remarks on January 15. Surely we can expect from the government something more than the pre-election flurry of apparent legislative activity surrounded with all the correct titles which properly identify the problem but offer little more than words as the solution.

The time has come when our words must be a real indication of action about to be taken rather than an excuse for inaction. Where is the government of Ontario's plan for the sixties? In this age of technological advance we must harness science for the advantage of all of the people of Ontario and further the good of all the people of Ontario by the proper use of our scientific achievements. Words alone, nostalgic as they may be, or posturings, no matter how validly they identify current problems are not going to secure Ontario's place in the sun.

Our future depends to a unique extent on the speed with which we come to terms with the world of change.

There is no more dangerous an illusion than the comfortable doctrine that the world owes us a living. One of the dangers of the Frost-Robarts approach to life is the thought that whatever we do, whenever we run into trouble, we can always rely on our special relationship with someone or other to bail us out—the United States, perhaps, the British Commonwealth, or the federal government.

Surely the facts of life must be known now to the people who lead the government of Ontario and there must be a recognition that Ontario, the wealthiest province in Canada—and the keystone of Canadian prosperity—will have just as much influence and prosperity as it deserves.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Is the hon. member not proud he is living here?

Mr. Singer: Well, I am proud, but I could be much prouder, Mr. Speaker, if the Speech from the Throne had indicated some real progress.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): We are proud of the people; it is the government we are against.

Mr. Singer: We have no accumulated reserves upon which to live, Mr. Speaker, and mouthings and criticisms such as those put forward by the hon. Minister of Mines are the very thing, Mr. Speaker, that I am deploing in this speech this afternoon. And I think the people of Ontario go along with me in expressing this view.

There should be one theme running through our government action. It is the theme of change and a long overdue need for this government to adapt itself to different conditions. This is the challenge facing every member of this Legislature.

Perhaps it is not necessary to point out that we are living in a time of such rapid scientific change that our children are accepting, as part of their everyday lives, things that would have been dismissed as science fiction just a few years ago. The 15-year period from 1960 onward, will embrace an era of technical change, particularly in industrial methods, greater than the whole industrial revolution of the past 250 years.

When we understand, sir, that 97 per cent of all the scientists who have ever lived in the history of the world since the days of Euclid and Pythagoras and Archimedes, are alive and at work today, we get some idea of the rate of progress we have to face and of the immense talent available to us in accepting the challenge of the sixties.

Our problem is not the acceptance of technological advance, with all that it could mean in the terms of unemployment, but the conscious purposive use of scientific progress to provide undreamed-of living standards and the possibility of leisure ultimately on an unbelievable scale. This is why we in this parliament must devote a lot more thought to providing for the use of leisure and this is why again we shall have to be a lot more imaginative about the provision for retraining workers made redundant by the development of new skills and new techniques.

Our programmes of retraining, sir, have been most disappointing. The number of people who have been able to take advantage of them have been just a tiny portion of the number of people who actively need retraining. The picayune sums of money—paid weeks and months late—have had a very serious effect on the success of our limited retraining programmes.

It is hard to determine whether the complete blame lies with this government or should be shared with the federal government; but between the two levels of government, sir, this whole retraining programme needs to be re-examined from top to bottom. The government has to be prepared to do something and say something that will be effective in retraining those workers who have been caught up in this great industrial change.

Now, how do we set about our task to bring a new approach of government to the problems of the sixties? First, we must produce more scientists and secondly, having produced them, we must be a great deal more successful in keeping them in this province and in this country. We cannot afford to have any more Avro debacles.

Thirdly, having trained scientists and kept them here, we must make more intelligent use of them than we do presently. Finally, we must organize our industry so that it applies the results of scientific research more purposefully to our production efforts.

To accomplish the first part of our task, we must develop a more realistic attitude towards education—not only higher education but education at every level. We cannot, as a province, afford to neglect the educational development of a single boy or girl. And I suggest, sir, that it is much more than a single boy or girl who is being neglected in Ontario today.

We cannot afford to cut off from virtually any chance of higher education, those of our children unfortunate enough to be born beyond the jurisdiction of large and financially sound metropolitan educational systems. And I suggest, sir, that this is what we have been doing for far too long. Too many of our children have been at the mercy of some 3,500 different educational jurisdictions, many of which have been unable to do the task assigned them by reason of lack of training or financial resources.

I was delighted to hear this afternoon that the hon. Minister of Education finally has recognized that this is a problem, and, apparently, there are some rumblings in The Department of Education that something is going to be done to cut down the number of units. I will be more impressed when I see this take place but I do not know which hon. Minister to believe. The hon. Prime Minister told us he does not believe in compulsion, Mr. Speaker. Hon. Mr. Frost used to say, "The glories of local autonomy outweighed all the importance of the need for this type of change." Do you believe the hon. Minister of Education this afternoon when he says he is going to "cut down the number of units even though this is going to interfere with local autonomy," and this is going to be compulsion? And somewhere along the line the government is going to have to be brave enough to say we want less than 3,500 educational units. Is that what the hon. Minister of Education means, and if that is what he means, how do you correlate this with what the hon. Prime Minister said to us the other afternoon? I hope the hon. Minister of Education is right and he is going to set about his task as he somewhat outlined it to us this afternoon.

No longer can we tolerate ever-more burdensome and artificial increases in our university admission standards, dictated only by reason of the fact that there are not enough university spaces available, nor enough university teachers trained and ready to serve in Ontario. Notwithstanding the praises we heard about separate departments and new methods under new Ministers or the same Minister to do a different function, notwithstanding all the promises we heard in the Throne Speech, there seems to me, Mr. Speaker, still no realistic approach by this Tory government to provide for the financing and do the planning necessary to achieve these ends.

I do not need to remind anyone in this House that only a few months ago the people of Ontario saw fit for better or for worse to entrust to—

Mr. Whicher: For worse.

Mr. Singer: The worse perhaps, to entrust to the Tory Party the reins of government for another four years. But surely in doing so they expected, anticipated and are entitled to more than the meaningless words that we have just been given in the Speech from the Throne. These words should have implied a programme of legislation along the line that I have already referred to; unfortunately, however, they seem to be nothing more than a series of excuses for a lack of action.

Not too long ago some 300 engineers held a reunion. These gentlemen had formerly worked in the Avro plant in Malton and they decided to meet together to discuss the old days when they used to work on the Arrow. Unfortunately for all of us, they were not able to meet in Malton or even in the province of Ontario or even in the Dominion of Canada. They gathered together in California where they are now all employed. Can there be any greater indictment of lack of planning on the part of government in this province and in this Dominion when that sort of thing can happen?

With great fanfare our government created a Department of Economics and Development a few years ago, and gave to the Minister of the day—some people used to call him "Rapid Robert" from the way he got around so quickly—unusual and extraordinary authority and spending power in order to promote the economic development of the province. One of his main achievements seems to have been making the hippo more famous than the maple leaf. As the hippo gave way to the moose so he has given way to the new hon. Minister from Don Mills (Mr. Randall), who arrived on the scene in the midst of much blowing of bugles and beating of drums. One would have thought that the new hon. Minister, whose praises have been so loudly sung in government press releases, would have been able to impress his hon. Cabinet colleagues more than he has done, and in so impressing them would have inserted some new thoughts for the development of Ontario into the Speech from the Throne. But this is another one of the disappointments, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that we will have to continue to put up with.

I would have hoped that this government would have been able to say, "We want our engineers and scientists to stay in Ontario; we want those who have left to come back, we are creating an atmosphere which will make more intelligent use of your planning and your talents and your ability. We have new industries which will challenge your training and resourcefulness; we are creating an atmosphere which will provide earnings competitive with those in other jurisdictions which at the moment seem more attractive. We are creating an atmosphere wherein your training and resourcefulness will be held in such high regard by your fellow citizens that you will want to stay here and be a part of the development of Ontario."

But we have had none of this, none of this thinking at all, Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech. I would have hoped that we would have heard in His Honour's remarks some reference to the vastly expanded research facilities both in the field of education and of industry, and research is so important. There is no indication whatsoever that this government is prepared to spend worthwhile sums of money in educational research.

Other than lip service to the Ontario Research Foundation in the years that I have been in the House, there has been no change of heart which would lead our trained people to believe that we are prepared to devote sufficient amounts of Ontario dollars in projects necessary to cope with the challenge of the sixties. And surely this is a field where this government should be anxious and eager to give leadership but, again, Mr. Speaker, none of this in the Throne Speech.

Finally, presuming that there was a promise of a better educational system, of government encouragement toward trained personnel to stay in Ontario and to work here, and of real government participation in educational industrial research, the most startling omission from His Honour's speech is the lack of any plan to harness our assets for the good of all sections of this province.

We in the Liberal Party in the past have talked about the possibility of using such Ontario assets as Hydro, the Ontario Northland Railway, our taxing powers and our natural resources in such a manner as to encourage new industries to locate in some of the so-called depressed areas of the province, or those areas that have not yet been able to take part in our industrial development. But where, Mr. Speaker, is the plan for northern Ontario, or for Windsor, or for Cornwall, or for the farmers, or for the thousands of students who leave our schools year after year to take their place as citizens in our community without proper training. Where are these plans?

We continue to maintain a system of municipal government that is older than Confederation itself. The 1,000 separate units based on artificial boundaries that might have made some sense more than five generations ago, today frustrate the likelihood of regional planning and regional development. We hear nothing from the government benches in response to this very serious lack in advanced thinking. His Honour's speech does not give us a vague promise of change in this direction.

The problem in this country today, in this province today, is not unemployment but the concern for job security. Those who are at present employed are most concerned about whether their jobs will be in existence five years from now, or 10 years from now. The thousands of youngsters who leave school every year deserve some indication that they are joining the economic stream with sufficient training to enable them to obtain jobs and hold jobs which will support their families and themselves. That there is no real indication that we are able to do this is an intolerable reflection on our so-called civilization.

John Kenneth Galbraith warned the world a few years ago that social imbalance is the inevitable consequence of the unplanned affluent society. And we are finding this imbalance in the growing number of young people and old people who cannot find employment. This is why we need new industry, and revitalization of declining industry and of declining areas to provide new hope for the people of Ontario.

We must relate our planning research to the problems of the war on world poverty.

It seems such a waste, Mr. Speaker, that we are devoting so much of our initiative and capital to producing better detergents or finer colour television sets, to enable the image-makers of the ad game, who more recently and perhaps quite successfully have turned their attentions to politics, to convince us all to buy a little more of something we did not even know we wanted in the first place.

Surely the time is long overdue that these energies and abilities should be developed into providing products which could be used by the people of Africa and of South America. We must combat one of the real dangers of our age—mass poverty, and the problems presented by these undeveloped countries. And selfishly, too, perhaps in so doing we can provide challenging outlets for employment for our people in the expansion of industry in the province of Ontario. These, Mr. Speaker, are some of the reasons for my disappointment and dismay in the remarks made by His Honour at the opening of this session of the Legislature.

The people of Ontario deserve better treatment from their government. The promises of the last campaign are being translated into four more years of the same. It is too bad that the so-called new Robarts government is afraid to face the challenge of the sixties.

Having listened to His Honour's remarks, I have been left with a feeling of great disappointment. I had hoped that this new government of ours would have paid some attention to the ideas and thinking of such people as Galbraith and others who advised the late President Kennedy in his approach to the New Frontier; to those persons such as Harold Wilson and others in the United Kingdom who are offering an alternative to the present government in that country. In preparing these remarks, I have drawn heavily on some of their thinking and make no apologies for doing so, because I believe this is the sort of approach that the challenge of the sixties demands.

You heard the amendment moved to the address by my hon. leader (Mr. Oliver) and I think it is important that it be read again because this expresses in just a few words the sentiments I have been trying to put forward this afternoon.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Our amendment does it better.

Mr. Singer: Well, I was going to comment on that of the NDP as well.

I was going to say—and I will say it now that the hon. member for Woodbine has interjected—that we have no objection to supporting the amendment to the amendment because it is just a rephrasing of what we said, it is exactly the same thing and apparently we are agreed on yet another issue. They had to come second and they worded it in a slightly different way.

But let me read to the House, in concluding my remarks, this amendment, and let me express the hope that in reading it, that the amendment, the speech of my hon. leader and the speeches of others in this House who will follow in the Throne debate, will make some impression on the hon. leader of this government and that we will be able to look forward to bigger and better things in Ontario in the sixties.

The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) moved, seconded by the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume):

That the motion for an Address in Reply to the speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor, now before the House, be amended by adding thereto the following words:

This House regrets that Her Majesty's government has failed to proclaim a programme designed to meet the challenges of the sixties.

And this House regrets that the government has chosen to use empty and hollow phrases as a substitute for action, rather than, as it should, seize the opportunity to chart an imaginative and comprehensive programme designed to encourage the social, economic and educational development of the province of Ontario.

Could anything be more correct?

And this House further regrets that the Speech from the Throne indicates that the government dissipates the confidence of the people who returned it to office in that it now shows a lack of awareness and a refusal to act upon important problems of immediate concern to the people of Ontario, such as automation and job security, a comprehensive programme of medical care using the experience gained in other jurisdictions, a fair and equitable pension plan, a code of laws designed to recognize and advance the rights and interests of the working man, a programme of protection for the consumer, a method whereby farmers can be afforded a fair and adequate return for their efforts, a recognition of the potential of and a plan for the development of northern Ontario, and an acceptance by the government of responsibility for equipping every boy and girl in Ontario with sufficient education and training to enable him or her to bear a responsible, useful and satisfying role in meeting the challenge of the sixties.

I would hope, sir, that this House will see fit to support this amendment.

Mr. T. L. Wells (Scarborough North): Mr. Speaker, in rising today to take part in this my first address to this House, I, of course, must follow form as all hon. members already have done and congratulate you, and I do this with utmost sincerity, because I believe from the short time we have seen you in action you will be a fair and able Speaker and one of whom this House can be proud.

I would also like to add my congratulations to the hon. member for Waterloo North

(Mr. Butler) and the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard), who moved and seconded the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I think that their addresses and those of the new hon. members who have preceded me have been very worthwhile.

As the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) has already mentioned, I too would like to offer some special words of congratulation to the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop). I believe we all in this House appreciate the contribution which he has and is going to make. He has made a fine contribution to this country already in other fields and I am sure that this will be heightened by the contribution that he makes here in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be the first representative of the new riding of Scarborough North, a riding which was carved out of the reasonably new riding of York Scarborough which belonged to the old traditional riding of York East. This new riding includes many old communities such as the village of Agincourt, but mainly it is a riding which is composed of suburban dwellers, urban people who live in this riding and in the main work in the city of Toronto.

They are people much like many of us who are buying homes, they have highly mortgaged homes, they are raising young families and they have to live in this area in order that they may work in a metropolitan area like Toronto. Mr. Speaker, these people appreciate the more adequate voice which they will now have in the government of this province by the forward step that occurred when redistribution added 10 additional seats to the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Mr. Speaker, I, of course, have some feelings of my own as I stand here and make this maiden speech, because I can remember the times when I was in high school that I used to come and sit in the galleries here and watch George Drew and E. B. Jolliffe tangle horns and think that perhaps one day I might be fortunate and lucky enough to be able to sit in this Chamber.

As I now stand here and make this speech I reflect that there are probably few countries in the world where this can happen, where anyone, regardless of background, amount of money, regardless of who their parents are, can become an elected member of their Legislature. So I am very proud to be here today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having listened to the remarks that have just preceded mine: the hon. member for Downsview called for bigger and better things in the sixties. I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Ontario decided last September 25 that they wanted bigger and better things in the sixties and they went about it the right way.

The hon. member, Mr. Speaker, in referring to the Throne Speech, talks about not even vague promises of change. I would say this to him, Mr. Speaker, changes happen so fast in this province that they have completely left him behind and he has missed them. Mr. Speaker, the vigour and enthusiasm of all the hon. members of the Cabinet, I think, has brought new life to each of their departments. But particularly this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, because of my background in education, I would like to talk for a few minutes about The Department of Education.

Certainly from a trustee's point of view, for very many years this department was a faraway ivory tower which was aloof and out of touch with the quickly moving currents of educational change. However, this has all been changed, Mr. Speaker. When the present hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) assumed the Education portfolio a few years ago he began a revitalizing process within the department. The new programme for secondary schools in Ontario, a plan which is now universally known as the Robarts plan, was introduced.

I would like to talk about it in a few minutes, but first I want to say a word about the present hon. Minister of Education, the member for Peel (Mr. Davis). Sir, he has and is ably carrying on this programme of revitalization and he is expanding it to even a greater degree. Evidence of this is given to this House today in his address on the Ontario Foundation Tax Plan for 1964.

I would say this, Mr. Speaker—and in doing so I know that I speak for all in education in this province when I pay tribute to the hon. Minister of Education—he has come out of the ivory tower here at Queen's Park and he has mixed with trustees, with teachers and with educational officials. He has become known personally by hundreds of thousands of these people and, Mr. Speaker, these people now feel that they are working together as a team with The Department of Education. They do not feel that this is a faraway, aloof ivory tower any more. This, of course, Mr. Speaker, is of vital importance today, because every community in Ontario faces practical problems in education—shortage of teachers, shortage of school accommodation and shortage of money. In addition there are constant pressures for change in the subjects that we teach and in our methods of teaching and today we have to abandon what we thought would satisfy people a few years ago. Today we have to abandon the easy thought that we can be satisfied to educate only a few people exceedingly well and all the rest of our people less well.

(Mr. W. G. Noden takes the chair.)

The times that we live in now, Mr. Speaker, call upon us to give maximum development to every individual at every level. No nation today can expect to be ignorant and free, but ignorance means something different today than it did a few years ago. Matters which in the years gone by seemed to be the business of only a few people are now recognized by an increasing number of Canadians as being their business too. Intelligent citizenship does not consist in having a simple faith in democracy. Today it calls for a thorough knowledge of political principles and institutions and of history and of economics. It requires ability to read, to understand and to test the logic of arguments far more complicated than any that have hitherto been addressed to the public at large; and further, Mr. Speaker, I think we should hold fast to this idea that our homes, our schools, our universities, and in their social environment, our children shall be educated to live with others to attain their highest individual success and happiness and to prepare themselves for citizenship in a world society.

Mr. Speaker, the test of our educational system is whether it has helped children to become fully developed human beings. We are failing in our purpose if children merely go to school to walk the treadmill of vocational preparation. But I would say we are likewise failing if children leave school prematurely with neither purpose in life nor any training to earn a living and be useful to society.

A few years ago, Mr. Speaker, our government, as I have already said, did some soul searching in an attempt to find out what was wrong with our educational system. It was apparent at that time that many pupils who had neither the ambition nor the capacity to proceed to further education lost interest and dropped out of school. A plan was devised to preserve the best features of the existing system and to introduce innovations that would meet the needs of changing conditions in order that all our young people would receive the maximum benefit from our educational facilities. This plan was the Robarts plan. It is now in its second year of operation. What are the results? Is it succeeding? It can be said, Mr. Speaker, that 90 to 95 per cent of the secondary-school boards in Ontario have adopted some features of this plan. They have not been obliged to adopt all the programme, however. Since all city boards and schools of 15 teachers or more have adopted some facet of this new programme, more than 95 per cent of the pupils of Ontario have come in contact with the plan. Statistically I am told 55 per cent of the pupils in the province in Grade 10 belong to the arts and science branch and 45 per cent of the pupils are enrolled in the business and commerce, and science technology and trades branch. Also, Mr. Speaker, of particular interest are the new special vocational schools which are being established to offer occupational courses of two years' duration. These schools accept pupils whose main forte is not academic work. They offer to these pupils a variety of occupational courses but the programme is also geared to provide 50 per cent of a pupil's time in academic work.

Mr. Speaker, in the old days these students would gain admission to a regular collegiate institute and likely drop out at the end of Grade 10 with a very unsatisfactory educational background. Now they will leave these vocational schools as full-fledged graduates with some basic skills which will help them earn a living. One of these schools opened last September in my riding of Scarborough North. It is called the Bendale Vocational School and cost $2.5 million. It was financed completely under the federal and provincial vocational-school building programme. Mr. Speaker, this school is now filled to capacity and has proved so successful that the Scarborough board of education is planning to build another school of similar nature as quickly as possible.

Although the Robarts plan has only been, as I have said, Mr. Speaker, in operation for two years, definite trends are beginning to show which indicate it will have a profound effect on the drop-out problem. In the township of Scarborough the average pupil retention factor of all secondary schools was 73.7 per cent in 1959. This has risen to 79.9 per cent for 1963. In 1959, Mr. Speaker, the number of students in secondary schools in the township of Scarborough was 3.5 per cent of the total population of the township. In 1963, the percentage of students had risen to approximately six per cent of the total population. It will take three or four more years before a definite appraisal of the plan can be made, but it appears, Mr. Speaker, that it is meeting the educational challenge of our times. When one reviews it and the results of it, that part about education in our hon. friend's motion, the amendment to the Throne Speech has a very hollow sound.

Our job now, Mr. Speaker, is to sell this new Robarts plan actively—sell it to the institutions of higher learning and the business community, who seem to be lagging behind in their appreciation of what we are trying to do. I hope that by the time the first graduates from the new programme are ready to enter some of our universities, that the universities will have adjusted their entrance requirements to fit in with the courses that are being offered under the new plan in our secondary schools.

Likewise, Mr. Speaker, business and industry must realize that the four-year arts and science course is an excellent course for those who will be employed in retail trades, and financial and service occupations, where the ability to communicate is a prime requisite.

While I am on the subject of education, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to the many thousands of members of the teaching profession throughout this province, who are on the front line of our educational system. They do a wonderful job. I would also like to pay tribute to the many hundreds of school trustees across this province who work tirelessly to make our educational system succeed. I know, Mr. Speaker, of their devotion and sacrifice to this cause. I know of their dedication to this work. To serve as a school trustee is to make a substantial social contribution to your community, because on the school board rests the obligation to provide what is necessary in the way of education. I hope that the government will not consider seriously the demands that are being made to bring some of the powers and rights of school boards under the control of municipal councils. This would be a backward step and certainly not in the best interests of education.

Further, Mr. Speaker, while I am talking about these school trustees of this province, I would like to draw to the attention of the House the results of a poll conducted last fall by the Ontario School Trustees Council. Ballots were distributed to all boards of education, all collegiate-institute boards and high-school boards and to most of the elementary-school boards in this province. Each trustee was asked if he thought school trustees should be paid, much in a similar manner as members of municipal councils are? The overall result was in excess of 2.5-to-1 in favour of payment of school trustees—4,225 individual trustees voted in favour and 1,606 voted against. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that at this session of the Legislature the hon. Minister of Education will give serious consideration to introducing permissive legislation to allow school trustees to be paid in this province. I personally feel that this would be a progressive and forward step.

We have also heard much, Mr. Speaker, about the institutes of technology programme and I hope that the hon. Minister of Education will seriously consider the establishment of another institute of technology similar to Ryerson somewhere in the eastern section of Metropolitan Toronto. I would also like to commend the government for proposing to set up a select committee to study the problems of youth—not only those problems, Mr. Speaker, that have to do with education, but also the social problems concerned with our youth. This, I think, is a forward step and is in line with the already instituted establishment of the youth branch in The Department of Education. This committee, I am sure, when it begins to function, will continue to widen the government's progress in the field of youth. Certainly there are areas which must be looked at. I think, Mr. Speaker, you and many hon. members of the House probably followed with interest the report in the Toronto Telegram of a special squad on youth and the law. Certainly the reporters who wrote this pinpointed some of these problems of youth in the sixties.

In the field of commuter service, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have received and read the first report by the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study Committee. It shows that it is physically feasible to use a number of existing railway rights-of-way in the Metropolitan Toronto area for commuter or rapid-transit rail service. I hope now, as this committee progresses, it will bring in a report to show how adequate commuter service can be provided in this Metropolitan Toronto area. Certainly the residents of my riding are waiting with anticipation for a further report on this very necessary field of modern transportation.

Mr. Speaker, for the next few minutes I would like to deal with the subject of medical insurance—one which was debated at some length last week and during which I believe some erroneous statements and impressions were presented.

First, let me say, I believe that the health of the people of our province is of the utmost importance and that we must have a plan by which all who wish can obtain health insurance. I further believe that at the present time this should be available on a voluntary basis but that it should be available to all residents of Ontario regardless of their existing health condition. The plan should be obtainable from either the present non-profit medical-insurance agencies operating in the field or the private insurance companies now operating also in this field. I feel, Mr. Speaker, the function of government in the medical-insurance field should be to assist those people who cannot afford to cover themselves, that is those in the indigent, marginal indigent and low-income categories. Secondly, it should be to make sure that coverage is available to all those who are now normally considered poor risks and perhaps cannot obtain insurance. Thirdly, I think it is the government's duty to ensure that medical insurance is non-cancellable, that is, it can only be cancelled by the person buying the insurance.

Mr. Speaker, it is, of course, very obvious to all of us that these are the basic ground rules under which Bill 163 was introduced by our government last year—the bill that is now being reviewed by the Hagey commission. In this House last week the members of the New Democratic Party talked in glowing terms about the compulsory Medicare scheme enacted in the province of Saskatchewan and endeavoured to show us what a glowing success this scheme has been, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) went even further and stated that the plan in Saskatchewan had been an unqualified success. Against this, Mr. Speaker, those who spoke also wrote off the only other medical-insurance plan operating in Canada—the one in the province of Alberta—as a failure. Let us, therefore, take a look at these two plans.

The Saskatchewan plan is, of course, a compulsory one and therefore it naturally follows that nearly all the residents of the province are covered by the plan. However, it is well to remember that after the initial plan was introduced and the ensuing trouble that took place, the plan was amended so that existing medical-insurance plans could continue operating in the province of Saskatchewan. It was also amended to allow doctors either to practise under The Medical Insurance Act, or to practise outside the Act. A person who wishes to join one of the voluntary medical-insurance plans can do so by paying $5 a year. It is estimated, Mr. Speaker, that there are around 600,000 people insured under these voluntary agencies in the province of Saskatchewan and it is also estimated that more than half the doctors of the province do not practise under the government plan. I find it very difficult to reconcile myself to the point of view that all these people support the Saskatchewan plan, as has been implied by the statement made last week that all groups in Saskatchewan now endorse this plan. In fact, as a matter of information, I understand that a number of members of the Saskatchewan provincial Cabinet are members of the voluntary agencies.

Dealing with the question of premiums, the stated premium for the plan is now $12 per family per year, but of course this is only window dressing. A premium can be set at any amount that the government wishes, even lower than this, because a substantial part of the cost of the plan comes from the general revenues of the province of Saskatchewan, a province which has one of the highest tax rates in Canada. Remember, Mr. Speaker, additional financing for the Saskatchewan Medicare scheme comes from a sales tax of one and a half per cent, a one per cent corporation tax, which I assume is probably passed on to the consumer, plus a six per cent surcharge on personal income taxes. Ironically, I think, these taxes have probably raised the cost of necessary goods and it should be remembered that these higher prices also apply to those whom the scheme was originally designed to help the most.

While there has been an increase in the number of doctors coming into Saskatchewan in the last year, I find that this increase has been less than the average yearly increase during the five years immediately preceding the operation of the plan. Most of the doctors who have come into that province have been in the general-practitioner category whereas, Mr. Speaker, a high degree of those who left were specialists. There has been a substantial turnover of doctors since the plan was implemented and, I am told, approximately 400,000 people in Saskatchewan have had to find a new doctor because their own doctor had left the province.

There are many areas, Mr. Speaker, of dispute still festering in that province. We read about them even now in the newspapers and these cannot help but have an effect on the quality of medical care available to the people. To say that the Saskatchewan Medicare plan, Mr. Speaker, has been an unqualified success, I submit at this time is sheer folly. The deep wounds inflicted on that province by a scheme hastily introduced to further one man's ambition of national leadership will leave scars for generations to come, and I think, Mr. Speaker, when the ballots were counted on the night of June 18, 1962, the people of Regina showed how they felt towards this effrontery.

Mr. Speaker, let us look at the Alberta medical-insurance plan, one which is very similar to what we are proposing here in the province of Ontario. It is a comprehensive type of medical-insurance plan available to everyone in Alberta on a voluntary basis. The government assists those in the low-income bracket to buy the insurance. It is available through the existing non-profit organizations and private insurance companies. Contrary, Mr. Speaker, to what the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis), in his very eloquent and fine address last week, said to the effect that the premium was $162 per year per family, I find that it actually is around $144 per family per year if bought as an individual contract. If, as many of us buy our insurance, it is bought on a group basis, it is $125 per year per family. As a matter of fact, under the existing laws in the province of Alberta governing this plan, the maximum premium above which no carrier can charge is $159 per year per family. For those who pay no income tax, the government pays approximately one half of their premium and for those who pay less than $500 income tax, the government pays one quarter of their premium.

As I stated earlier, Mr. Speaker, the plan is voluntary. It was advertised through the newspapers and through radio. No one was forced to join. We all know that naturally under this type of circumstance there are people who will not respond but no pressure was applied. If I was to stand here, Mr. Speaker, and give away $5 bills, and announce this, I would venture to say I would not give away 108 $5 bills in this Chamber.

An hon. member: Try it!

Mr. Wells: This is precisely how the voluntary aspect of the plan works. But I am told, Mr. Speaker, that probably half the policies sold by the private insurance companies were sold by one insurance company that actually put a force of salesmen in the field, something not done by any of the other companies. Now, however, at the present time—and I am informed that these are up-to-date figures—approximately 700,000 residents have taken out insurance under the Alberta medical plan. Of this group, 167,000 are receiving a government subsidy on their premium. It is estimated that this is 42 per cent of the number who would be eligible to receive the government subsidy.

Mr. Speaker, this 700,000 insured under the plan does not include such groups as federal civil servants, railway employees, the armed services, Indians and other groups who have special contracts. Therefore it is estimated that all people who have reasonably comprehensive medical-care insurance in the province of Alberta total 1,176,000 people. And yet, Mr. Speaker, just last week the hon. member for Woodbine said, and I quote: "The legislation has failed in Alberta. Practically no one is registered under the plan." Mr. Speaker, I maintain that a plan which, within six months on a voluntary basis, together with existing insurance that was in force, is covering 84 per cent of the people of the province, is anything but a failure. I predict that the Ontario medical-insurance plan when it is presented to this House in its final form will provide for the people of Ontario an adequate, sane and sensible voluntary medical-insurance plan, which will further the health needs of this province in keeping with our traditional way of doing things.

While in the health field I would like to commend the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) for his activities thus far on the subject of cigarette smoking and lung cancer. I hope that he will take all steps possible to assure that the hazards of cigarette smoking are made abundantly clear to the rising generation of young people in this province. This problem, I feel, is of sufficient magnitude, to justify immediate steps being taken to institute an educational programme in conjunction with The Department of Education. Other necessary steps and programmes I am sure will evolve as the hon. Minister of Health meets with his colleagues from the other provinces and the federal Department of Health and Welfare.

In this regard also, Mr. Speaker, I think that we should not forget the growing and ever-present health problem from air pollution in our major cities and that this too requires speedy and concerted study and action.

Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased—as I know all hon. members of this House were—to hear in the Speech from the Throne that the government plans to commemorate in a special way the 150th anniversary of the birth of Sir John A. Macdonald. This event, of course, takes place next January 11. I am sure from the remarks which have gone before, particularly of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), that we are all happy that this event is to be commemorated in some special way. I am very pleased and proud to tell this House that there will open in my riding, the riding of Scarborough North, next September, the Sir John A. Macdonald Collegiate Institute. Surprising as this fact may seem, this is the only secondary school in Ontario which will bear the name of this great Canadian. And I think this fact itself, Mr. Speaker, shows how we have neglected the history of our country.

Perhaps as a part of the commemorative project, The Department of Education could adopt an idea presented a few weeks ago by George Hogan in his column in the Toronto Telegram. He suggested that pictures of Sir John A. Macdonald should be made available to every school on the 150th anniversary as part of the celebrations. I think this would be a fine project for The Department of Education to carry out in conjunction with this event. They could be made available to every elementary and secondary school in the province of Ontario, and I am sure that the pictures would be hung in a place of honour in each of these schools.

It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that important writings, documents, and mementoes of Sir John A.'s career will be displayed at all times in the new Sir John A. Macdonald Collegiate in Scarborough.

While on this subject, Mr. Speaker, I would further like to urge that the hon. Prime Minister consider approaching the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada and the other provincial premiers with a suggestion that next January 11, Sir John A. Macdonald's birthday, be a national holiday. All across Canada on this day ceremonies could be held stressing national unity and co-operation in the spirit of this great Canadian who truly understood biculturalism, this great Canadian who said in the House of Commons in 1890, and I quote, "We have a constitution now under which all British subjects are in a position of absolute equality, having equal rights of every kind, of language, of religion, of property and of person. There is no paramount race in this country. There is no conquered race in this country. We are all British subjects." Or, Mr. Speaker, in the language of today, we are all Canadians, no matter where we live in this great country, and this I am sure, we all want to remain, united and free.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope I will be forgiven for interrupting this very interesting debate, but on behalf of all our hon. members I would like to express a word of welcome to a distinguished visitor we have in the gallery, the leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the House of Commons and a former Prime Minister of Canada, the Rt. hon. John Diefenbaker.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate again in this traditional debate, I would like first of all to join with others who have preceded me in congratulating you on your election to the high office of Speaker of this assembly. I sincerely believe that the choice was the best one that could possibly have been made and that you will perform the functions of your office with dignity and impartiality. In fact I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am hopeful that we will now be entering an era, and a new era it would be, when rulings of the Speaker in this House will never be challenged. This will not necessarily mean that all members will agree with all rulings of the Speaker, sir, but it will mean that all members will recognize that someone has to make final rulings as to procedure in the House and that where there is complete confidence that such rulings are made in fairness and in good faith, they should be accepted without question, whether one agrees with them or not.

I would also like, Mr. Speaker, to express my congratulations to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on his victory in the recent election campaign. Some of us may not have been too happy about the results of that election, but only a person who refuses to face facts would deny the fact that the hon. Prime Minister received a significant vote of confidence from the people of the province. We accept the result, as indeed we must, but we are also mindful of the fact that in a democratic society nothing is ever finally settled and ideas which at one time do not commend themselves to the majority have an uncanny habit of becoming the majority view at a later time.

While I am on the subject, Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the hon. Prime Minister on the fair attitude he has shown towards the members of the Opposition. Certainly the office facilities that we in this group now enjoy are a vast improvement over those we had in previous years. Moreover, the hon. Prime Minister has shown a willingness to accept reasonable suggestions regarding the debate of private member's bills and resolutions. Sir, I do not think there is anyone who would not concede that government business must take precedence, but the hon. Prime Minister has illustrated that he is willing to let private members' motions be debated when there is time and I am hopeful that time will be found to debate some more of them, and perhaps even to let some of them come to a vote.

I personally do not envy anybody who carries the heavy responsibilities of Prime Minister. No doubt the office carries substantial prestige with it, but it also involves the greatest assortment of headaches that anybody could possibly seek voluntarily, and in the present case I am sure that the already difficult task has been complicated by the amount of attention the hon. Prime Minister has had to devote to clearing out deadwood in his Cabinet. I think we will all concede, Mr. Speaker, that this is a herculean task and the more so because in Tory Cabinets, paradoxical as it may seem, deadwood seems to have an almost infinite capacity for regeneration.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, and without any implication of association of ideas with what I have just been saying, I would like to extend my congratulations to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver). As I understand it, he himself holds the view that he is occupying the position of leader of the Liberal Party on a temporary basis only, but I am confident that as long as he is the leader of the Opposition in this House, he will perform the important functions of that office with distinction, both to himself and to this House.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bryden: Like the hon. member for Scarborough North (Mr. Wells), who preceded me in this debate, I used to spend considerable time when I was a student at high school and university—I have no doubt it was a good many years earlier than the hon. gentleman followed the same pursuits—but I often sat in the galleries of this House and listened to the debates. Even in those days, though it was a good many years ago, the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) was considered to be one of the leading debaters in the House, and he still is.

I was interested in the declaration he made in the early part of his remarks in this debate to the effect that the Liberal Party of Ontario is now firmly resolved to return to the path of truth, virtue, clarity and, above all, reform. It is my clear recollection, Mr. Speaker, that we used to hear declarations of that kind frequently from gentlemen on the Liberal benches during the last Legislature, and I can only conclude that the Liberal Party's capacity to declare its intention to return to the path of reform is equalled only by its capacity to stray from that path. No doubt the frequency of the former is determined by the frequency of the latter. Perhaps some day the party may realize that there is a difference between treading a path and criss-crossing it.

We hear a great deal these days about the old cliché that forces of reform must unite, which means, I take it, that we of the New Democratic Party should get together in some sort of an alliance or even merger with the Liberals. When I hear this cliché, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but think of Saskatchewan where at this very time, the leader of the Liberal Party is stumping the length and breadth of the province, trying to stampede Conservatives and Social Crediters into joining forces with him for the purpose, he says, of defeating the present CCF-New Democratic government. Whatever criticisms one might make of that government, it is surely to be recognized as pioneering great and lasting reforms of benefit not only to Saskatchewan but to the whole of Canada.

So in one province the Liberal Party advocates that the forces of reform should unite behind it; in another province it offers itself as the leader of the forces of reaction. Apparently it is so obsessed with its lust for power that any manoeuvre and any alignment are justified if it can see that it has a hope that it will thereby be able to grab the reins of office.

One of Canada's traditional myths is that the Liberal Party is more radical, more progressive, more reform-minded, more liberal, if you like, than the Conservative Party. Historically there is little evidence to support this proposition, and if one takes the present federal situation in Canada as an example it is clearly wrong.

Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker, who honoured us with his presence in this House a few minutes ago, on his record is considerably more radical and reform-minded than the Pearson administration.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Erratic, the hon. member might say, erratic, but not radical.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The hon. member is all by himself.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): All by himself; he will be all by himself in Ottawa, too!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bryden: My main criticism of Mr. Diefenbaker is that he has no philosophical base for his radicalism, with the result his conduct often is, or at any rate appears to be, capricious and irresolute almost to the point of irresponsibility. But his instincts are clearly for the little man and for reforms that will benefit the little man. One looks in vain for evidence of such instincts among the cold-blooded organization men who dominate the Pearson administration.

There are obvious dangers in trying to classify political ideas or parties according to a linear scale, but if we should try to reproduce the present spectrum of parties in the Parliament of Canada from left to right, I think we would inevitably arrive at this picture:

On the left is the New Democratic Party. Also on the left, but closer to the centre, are the Diefenbaker Conservatives, but with powerful elements in the Conservative Party that are planted firmly on the right, and sometimes very far to the right. To the right of centre is the Pearson administration, with some elements tending towards the left—just how powerful those elements are it is hard to tell but there are some elements there tending to the left.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Where is the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts)?

Mr. Bryden: Further to the right is Social Credit. The Creditistes are difficult to classify because to an important extent they are the product of a special situation in Quebec, but in the main they, too, appear to be well to the right.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Not many on the left.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Awful mess, isn't it?

Mr. Bryden: It has sometimes been noted as remarkable that in Ontario, and more particularly in Metro Toronto, large numbers of Liberals were returned in the federal election of April, 1963, whereas large numbers of Conservatives were returned in the provincial election less than six months later.

Mr. Sopha: Oh! The Toronto Star is a powerful organization.

Mr. Bryden: I see nothing remarkable in this phenomenon. Both the Pearson Liberals and the Robarts Conservatives are the parties of the organization men. Conservative in outlook, cautious in performance, lacking any deeply held convictions, catering to the latest whims and fads, they are the purveyors of a pabulum that will never irritate the digestive system of the public even though it will never provide the sinews for challenging new effort and achievement.

An hon. member: Do not mix metaphors.

Mr. Bryden: I will send the hon. member a copy, it would be worth his pondering.

The supreme objective of such parties and men is to project what is described as a "favourable image," that is, to create an impression that they are nice guys who are administratively competent even if they have no policies to administer. They spare no effort to let it be known that they will not challenge anyone to anything greater than the contemplation of two-car garages and automatic washers and dryers. At the same time, they will give enough of an appearance of remedying injustice to allay any qualms of conscience that may be stirring among the beneficiaries of our so-called affluent society.

In the present mood, it appears that this is the kind of party that appeals to a substantial segment of the electorate—not to the majority be it noted, but a large enough plurality that, under the vagaries of our antiquated electoral system, the party can win an overwhelming majority of seats in such areas as Metropolitan Toronto.

Such a party is a bonanza for that supreme achievement of the affluent society, the public relations man. Realities are far less important than appearances, and who else should one turn to but the public relations man to clothe a bad or indifferent reality with a beautiful appearance? This phenomenon was well described by Charles W. Tisdall, an expert among public relations men, in a speech that was quoted as follows in the October 19, 1963 issue of the Toronto Daily Star:

Huckstering on the hustings is destroying initiative and leadership at Ottawa and the provincial capitals, a leading public relations expert claimed today.

Political parties embarking on a campaign now first find out what the people are for and against, Charles W. Tisdall, president of the Canadian Public Relations Society, told a society luncheon.

Then they modify their campaign strategy to conform with what they consider to be current public mood on current issues, he said.

"It is a marketing operation, not political leadership. It is as divorced from moral issues as the selling of toothpaste or detergents.

"If you look into the nuts and bolts of our present-day campaigns you will find a heavy reliance, actually a staggering investment, by all political parties in attitude studies and opinion research as the beginning and the end of strategy planning."

Mr. Tisdall charged that today's political party will compromise its economic beliefs when public opinion polls indicate that public will react in a negative way.

He said the CCF in the past bucked this trend with its long crusade for social-welfare measures. He noted the CCF never gained national office but other parties—mainly the Liberals—grabbed the CCF social-welfare planks when they felt it safe to do so.

"One party created the demand: other political parties later took it over, and, generally, the great mass of the Canadian population ultimately benefited. It was a demonstration of leadership and political courage by the minor party," he said.

An hon. member: Hear, hear. I must get a copy of this.

Mr. Bryden: The Pearson Liberals and the Robarts Conservatives are the parties of the Establishment, the darlings of Bay Street, the press and all the other champions of the status quo. This was well demonstrated by the fact that in Toronto all three dailies lined up behind first the Liberals and then the Conservatives in last year's two elections. In my view, the function of a democratic press in an election campaign is to present facts and issues in an objective manner so as to assist the voters to make rational choices. Apparently this is not the role accepted by the Toronto press. They prefer to try to brainwash enough of the voters that their chosen parties will reign supreme.

I consider this a very dangerous tendency, and I said so during the election campaign when I objected to what I described as the "king-makers of King Street" presuming to usurp the prerogatives of the electorate. This provoked a paranoid editorial by the Toronto Telegram, which contrived to find in my remarks an implication that I wanted to impose controls on the press. As we all know, criticism of politicians is a favourite pastime of the press, but apparently criticism of the press by politicians cannot be undertaken except with sinister motives being imputed to the politicians.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would not like to be too hard on the good old Tory Tely. After all, during the campaign it did me the great honour of singling me out for special attention. It carried its campaign right up to and including election day when it published an editorial exhorting the voters of Woodbine to elect my opponent. Then the day after the election it followed up with another editorial, bemoaning the fact that those voters had not seen fit to accept its advice. So I will always have a soft spot in my heart for the Toronto Telegram in view of the assistance it gave me in the recent campaign.

Mr. Sopha: Well, he is an author.

Mr. Bryden: He has become an author.

Mr. Sopha: I could not have voted for either of you.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bryden: Some people hand out compliments to both of us without preference between us. The art of applying public relations techniques to politics is a fascinating even if a melancholy study and nowhere will we find a more accomplished practitioner of the art than right here in Ontario in the person of the hon. Prime Minister. You know, Mr. Speaker, I used to think the previous Prime Minister was a great practitioner of that art, but I have found that his apprentice is perhaps if anything superior to the old master. In the period preceding the election, we were flooded with government announcements of policies that appeared good on the surface but represented very little real policy. This was perfect from a public relations point of view. It created the illusion that the government had embarked on a programme of reform without provoking any of the controversy that genuine reform inevitably entails.

We frequently hear about the controversies that arose in Saskatchewan, we heard about them again this afternoon, as the result of the Medicare programme in Saskatchewan. Well, Mr. Speaker, we all realize that in that particular case we had a very special situation of an intransigent but powerfully entrenched minority determined to impose its will on the government, and eventually there had to be a showdown. Nevertheless, I think it is true historically that wherever you have true reform you have controversy. Where the waters are barely rippled by the introduction of a new measure, it usually means that the new measure has very little in it, it is not disturbing anything; and in other words it is not changing anything because change always disturbs some people.

At any rate, I would like to take just a few of the examples of the use of this Legislature for the purpose of public relation gimmicks prior to the past election campaign.

A 12-point housing programme was announced. So-called Medicare legislation was introduced, and to it was attached the semantically favourable word voluntary. Construction safety legislation was passed—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): We never introduced the term Medicare—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bryden: Sorry!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make it very clear that we never used the term Medicare in dealing with it. In fact we were quite particular in referring to it as a medical insurance scheme. It is not referred to as Medicare.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister is quite correct in relation to the statements he and other government speakers made when the bill was brought in for second reading in the House. I noted the fact at the time and said that he was quite correct, because it had nothing to do with Medicare. But the press picked it up and used the term Medicare consistently in relation to it, and so did the Tory propaganda organization throughout the length and breadth of the province.

I would not like to say that the hon. Prime Minister himself used the word in those records and tapes and everything else we heard where he listed this, that and the other as having been done. Certainly the advertisements which were produced by the Tory party in the newspapers, on radio and on TV regularly said that Ontario now had a Medicare programme. In fact they even went so far as to imply that the legislation, whatever it may be, was already in effect, so that I will agree with the hon. Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: How many people does the hon. member think—excuse me, Mr. Speaker—but does the hon. member really think that there was anybody in this province who really believed that this government had introduced a full Medicare programme? It is inconceivable, just inconceivable.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Sure!

Mr. Bryden: I regret to say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacDonald: Why did the hon. Prime Minister apologize?

Mr. Bryden: I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that notwithstanding the caution used by the hon. Prime Minister on the occasion when the bill was brought into this House, the spate of propaganda by the Tory public relations machine, which unfortunately was accepted completely uncritically by the press, created in the minds of a great many people the notion that—

Mr. MacDonald: Sure!

Mr. Bryden: —there was a Medicare programme in this province. Certainly many rank-and-file voters that I talked to had the idea that every party had a Medicare programme, there were only minor differences among them. I submit that the Tory propaganda machine was mainly responsible for having created what is now recognized by the hon. Prime Minister to have been confusion and a deliberate blurring of issues.

To continue with some of the other examples I was citing, construction safety legislation was passed. A new minimum wage policy was introduced which was to apply at first only to those in the horseshoe area, but was to be extended as soon as possible to the rest of the province. Portable pension legislation was passed. A select committee was established to look into the serious abuses in the consumer credit field. A youth branch was established in The Department of Education. A conference was held on automation and social change.

These and other measures constituted the icing on the cake. It is only after the election that the people are getting an opportunity to bite into the cake to find out how much sawdust there is in it. To date the 12-point housing programme has produced little, if any, more than the pitifully inadequate amount of housing we were getting before it was announced. The so-called Medicare legislation has been indefinitely suspended; and in any case, even if it is ultimately passed, it will not provide genuine Medicare or anything like it.

The Construction Safety Act has been almost totally ineffective because of a joker in it providing for municipal enforcement. The election was hardly over when the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) announced a go-slow policy in regard to the extension of the minimum wage to other areas of the province; and we all know, Mr. Speaker, that in the Tory lexicon go slow is practically indistinguishable from never.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): The hon. member will find out—

Mr. Bryden: Well, the hon. Minister did announce a go-slow policy, did he not?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member will find out just how good a programme—

Mr. Bryden: I have already found out; that is the trouble.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: If we did not have so many of these speeches—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: I will be quite happy to defer my remarks until all the government's bills have gone through second reading. Do not accuse me of holding up any legislation. On Friday the government moved second reading of a bill which we had just barely received on our desks and we still made no objection; we let it go right ahead.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: How long does the hon. member require?

Mr. Bryden: I would suggest as a normal rule, Mr. Speaker, that on important legislation of that kind it is desirable to give members 24 hours, shall we say, to study the text of the bills before them. We had to—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that bill to which we gave second reading on Friday morning had been in the hon. member's book for more than 24 hours—

Mr. Bryden: We got it that morning. I was reading it over before the orders of the day on Friday.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I can only say that I would be very happy to recall that order if that is so, because I was under the impression—I took my position from when it was printed—and it is never my intention to call a bill until it is put in the order books. We have discussed this here on many occasions and I can only say that I really thought the bill had been in the books for some considerable time. If it caused the hon. member or any other hon. member of the House any embarrassment, I would be quite prepared to recall second readings—

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the hon. Prime Minister has misunderstood the purpose of my remarks. I certainly am not criticizing him. I know from previous experience, sir, that if a member asks that a bill that has appeared in the books be deferred for a day or two, he is always ready to accommodate. I was merely indicating to the hon. Minister of Labour that the last idea we have in our minds is to try to hold up any of the legislation he has put before this House, and I used that incident on Friday as an illustration of how we are ready to go along with him in getting his legislation advanced.

Mr. MacDonald: Now we have things straightened out. We have been waiting so long for that, we were ready.

Mr. Bryden: I will now return to some of the government's pre-election announcements. I take it the government is not too happy about these announcements, because they seem determined to prevent me from proceeding to itemize them, but I am going to carry on regardless, Mr. Speaker.

The portable pension legislation, which was also announced with great fanfare, never was anything but a public relations gimmick of little real benefit to the people, and now the major part of it is being abandoned.

Last summer the consumer credit committee held sensational hearings on the second-mortgage racket which enabled various Tory backbenchers to get their names in the papers, but in actual fact those hearings produced no information that the government did not already have in its possession and on which it has refused to act for years.

The youth branch is a nice idea but neither the hon. Minister nor anyone else in the government seems to have any idea of what it is supposed to do.

The conference on automation and social change has so far resulted only in the publication of a book in which little was said that had not already been said, and often said better, in many other places at many other times.

And the real payoff came with the announcement that the people could expect increased taxes in the new budget, made by the hon. Prime Minister a month or two ago. At the time of the announcement, a gentleman connected with the Toronto Stock Exchange—I do not spend very much time down there, but I happened to be down at that particular time looking at the very interesting operations that are performed there—this gentleman remarked to me that the hon. Prime Minister had shown real courage in frankly stating the need for increased taxes. I will give you two guesses as to which party he supported. My only comment was that I could not recall the hon. Prime Minister saying anything about it during the election campaign.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Who cares?

Mr. Troy: Oh, that is not a very nice northern spirit.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister of Mines must have had vinegar in his coffee at lunch.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: Hon. members should hear what they are saying on Bay Street about the hon. Minister of Mines.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would like to ask the members to desist from speaking across the floor to each other while another member is on his feet making a speech. I would like to enforce this admonition if I could and I am going to endeavour to enforce it henceforth.

Mr. Sopha: That hon. Minister of Mines is a bad one.

Mr. Bryden: As with everything else, Mr. Speaker, the prospect of tax increases has been handled in accordance with approved public relations techniques. Almost all media of communication have been softening up the people with the uncritical assertion, no doubt inspired by the government, that increased taxes are inevitable. It is, of course, impossible to comment in detail on the government's plan until it is disclosed to us in detail but the information currently available does not demonstrate any inevitability of tax increases at this time.

The latest abridged report of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) relates to the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963. It indicates that in that year the net debt of the province increased by $75 million. Before we are carried away by that figure, Mr. Speaker, let us take a look at the whole story. When the hon. Provincial Treasurer presented his Budget for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, he predicted a shortfall of revenues in relation to expenditures of nearly $125 million. Even a year later, when he had actual figures for nine months of the year he estimated that the increase in the net debt would be $107 million. When one considers that the government ended the 1962-63 fiscal year $50 million better off than it anticipated at the beginning of the year, and $30 million better off than it expected three-quarters of the way through the year, I do not think an impelling case has been made out for tax increases. Considering the undesirable economic consequences of increased taxes at this time and the undesirable social consequences of the regressive type of taxes the government apparently favours, I would suggest that the government should take another look at its position before announcing tax increases.

We are told, though not officially, that one of the ways the government will increase its revenues will be to increase liquor prices. I would say that, if the government feels that it must increase its levies on the people, this is about as good a device as any because in effect it is a form of luxury tax. It is now becoming clear, however, that the public Treasury is not going to get the full benefit of the price increase.

Last Thursday, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams Limited announced an increase of five to ten cents per 25-ounce bottle in its wholesale price of whisky. It is inconceivable, sir, that this or any other distillery that looks to Ontario for so large a part of its market, would announce an increase in the wholesale price without firm knowledge of an impending increase in the retail price and of the amount of that increase. The government has vouchsafed to neither the public nor this House any information at all, much less firm information, about either of these matters. It is an incredible state of affairs that distilleries or any other special-interest groups should be privy to the government's intentions before the public and the Legislature.

This, however, is in line with long-established government policy in relation to distilleries, which can be summed up by the phrase, "You scratch our back and we'll scratch yours."

Why should the distilleries get any of the increased retail prices? Their latest financial statements indicate that they are feeling no more pain than those who have imbibed freely of their products. Net profits for Distillers Corporation-Seagrams Limited are up from $31,613,490 to $34,258,788. Figures for other distilleries are also favourable.

The position of domestic distillers in Ontario is made particularly favourable by the protection given them by the LCBO. Imported whiskies are sold in LCBO stores, as I understand it, at prices that are 60 or 70 cents a bottle higher than domestic brands for which the LCBO pays exactly the same price. It pays the same price to the supplier but in the case of the imported whisky its retail price is 60 or 70 cents higher. I am not necessarily objecting to this protection but surely a condition of it should be that the Canadian distilleries will not use their privileged position to gouge the public or the public Treasury.

If the government is convinced that it is necessary to increase the price paid by the public for liquor, then it should take steps now to ensure that all, not merely part, of the increased revenue accrues to the benefit of the public Treasury. The LCBO, being the sole wholesale purchaser of liquor for packaged resale in Ontario to the public is probably in a position to determine the prices it will pay to distilleries. If it is not, then the government should seek legislative authority to fix those prices at the wholesale level before any retail price increase goes into effect.

Moreover, in view of the cosy arrangement that now appears to be developing, I call upon the hon. Prime Minister—I regret that he is not here at the moment; he is usually in his place but I have no doubt he has other business to attend to at the present time—I would call upon him, sir, in his capacity as the leader of the Progressive-Conservative Party in Ontario, to instruct his party officials to let the public know if any contributions were made by distilleries to Progressive-Conservative campaign funds in the recent election and, if so, the amount of such contributions.

An hon. member: Oh, no!

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): That would not be fair.

Mr. Bryden: You mean you would be somewhat embarrassed.

Mr. Troy: He got a few cases.

Mr. Sopha: That the hon. member nodded should go into Hansard.

Mr. Bryden: I will thank the hon. member for Sudbury whose forensic experience no doubt called this point to his attention.

Mr. Sopha: Let the record so declare.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bryden: The sub-amendment that this party proposed to the motion for an Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne calls attention to what we consider to be the two most important facts of modern society, namely, the scientific and technological revolution and the continued existence of widespread poverty.

I will not attempt to deal with the implications of the scientific revolution because my hon. colleague from Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) has studied this subject in much greater detail than I have and, I understand, intends to deal with it at some length later in this debate. I would, however, like to make some reference to the important problem of poverty.

A few years ago Professor J. K. Galbraith published a significant and thought-provoking book entitled The Affluent Society. Though the influence of this book on public policy has not been as great as one might have hoped, the title has become a stock phrase used by many to describe the condition in which all people in the United States, Canada and most Western European countries are alleged to live. This half-truth has, unfortunately, concealed from our view the stark reality that large sections of the people of these countries—and I am not now talking about underdeveloped countries where the problem is even worse, I am talking about the most developed countries in the world—large sections of the people of these countries do not enjoy the benefits of the affluent society but instead live under conditions of grinding poverty.

Michael Harrington in his book The Other America estimated that between 40 million and 50 million people in the United States are afflicted by poverty. He argues that it is nonsense to talk about "pockets of poverty" as many of us including myself have been inclined to do. Poverty in the United States is so widespread, he says, that it forms a separate culture existing within, but not as a part of, the culture of affluence. It is more concentrated in some geographical areas than in others but there are no areas where it does not exist.

Unfortunately, there is no similar study of Canada and Ontario, but would anyone argue that the situation is any better here in our less affluent society? Those like myself who are in close contact with people in an area of below-average income, know from personal observation that it is not, and conditions in my constituency are not nearly as bad as in some other parts of Toronto.

Mr. Harrington distinguishes numerous groups or classes who are the victims of poverty. I would like to make reference to a few of these groups and make some observations about how they fare in Canada, according to my observation and such information as I have been able to glean.

One group consists of the farmers in several areas of the United States. It is not likely that many farmers in Ontario exist under the same conditions of poverty that characterize those sections of the United States where the soil has been depleted of most of its goodness by generations of over-cultivation and erosion. But even so, the losing battle that the independent farmer is now carrying on against the corporate farm and more particularly against vertical integration is producing an ever-widening circle of rural poverty in this province. Unless something is done about it we may someday find conditions as bad as they are in some of the worst areas in the States.

Mr. Harrington also refers to the plight of the negro. Negroes in Canada are not as numerous as in the United States and they are not subjected to the same blatant indignities and injustices as those in the southern states and South Africa. Nevertheless, they continue to suffer gross discrimination in employment right here in Ontario and in Toronto. The avenues to better-paying jobs are so narrow that most of them have been deprived of any incentive they might have had to try to acquire the necessary qualifications to qualify for those jobs. A few break through the barrier, I admit, but that is evidence only of their superior intelligence and strength of character and not of anything we have done for equality of opportunity.

And then there are the original Canadians, the Indians. Recently, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests quite properly called attention to the indescribable conditions under which many Indians live in Northern Ontario. I am going to suggest to him that he might also look into the conditions under which Indians live in his own constituency right here in the centre of Toronto; people who have come to this city looking for opportunities only to find themselves rejected and exploited in a strange and hostile environment.

The aged are another group referred to by Mr. Harrington. Not all old people, of course, are reduced to poverty, but far too many of them are. Since 1957 the old-age pension has been increased in various stages from $40 to $75 a month, demonstrating that frequent elections have some value, but what is $75 a month? It is a nice supplement for those who have other resources, but for those who have to depend on it, it is sheer misery.

It is tragic to see an old couple striving desperately to hang on to their one security, the modest home in which their life's savings are invested. If they are entirely dependent on the pension, their total income under the new upgraded scale will be $150 a month. That is assuming they both get it, and often you have a couple where only one gets it. In the city of Toronto, property taxes alone will take about one and a half month's income.

The pensioner who has no home is even worse off. Unless he is lucky enough to get into one of the few public housing projects available—and pay more rent than he can afford in most cases—he will be consigned to a cheerless existence in slum rooming houses.

The federal government, as we all know, is now working on a plan that will improve somewhat the position of those who will reach pensionable age in the future. I regret to say that the hon. Prime Minister of this province used his very considerable influence to force a reduction in the scale of benefits contemplated in the original federal plan, and heaven knows the original scale of benefits was by no means generous. The hon. Prime Minister claimed that the plan should be funded, at least in part, so that investment funds will be available for the provincial governments, including Ontario. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know when that revelation suddenly struck him. There was nothing in the now-defunct scheme he piloted through this House last year that would have guaranteed that even five cents of investment funds would be available to the provincial government. That was one of the criticisms this group made of his legislation at that time and he considered it of no significance at the time.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I dislike interrupting any hon. member speaking in this House. On the other hand, I cannot permit these misconceptions to be tossed around. It is not a defunct scheme in any sense of the word and I am quite sure the hon. member for Woodbine knows this. However, he chooses to refer to it that way, probably hoping that I will not mention the point. The scheme is by no means defunct. One portion of it, I have said, will be postponed in order that we may see what the federal government is going to do. I think this is necessary in order that we not cause an enormous amount of dislocation, but to refer to it as a now-defunct scheme is simply untrue.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, it is not untrue and the expression I used was well chosen. The legislation that the hon. Prime Minister piloted through this House in the last session provided for two somewhat related programmes. One purported to provide that certain employees in the province would receive certain very small pensions; the other purported to provide that up to certain very inadequate limits any pension plans in the province, whether they were required by the legislation or not, would be portable.

Now, those are two distinct things. I was talking only about the first, the scheme of the government to provide in its very inadequate way for limited pensions for certain people in the province, and I say that that scheme is now defunct.

The hon. Prime Minister says it is in cold storage. I will not quibble with him, but certainly anything we have seen of the federal plan, with whatever criticisms we may want to make of it, indicates that that plan is so far superior to what the hon. Prime Minister proposed to this Legislature last year that I am certain that his government will accept it and that therefore the scheme that I was talking about, introduced last year, is now defunct.

I quite concede, however, that the other portion of it, which would provide for a certain minimum degree of portability with regard to plans voluntarily introduced, will be retained. I hope perhaps the government may see fit to even improve its provisions. However, if the hon. Prime Minister now considers funding of the proposed federal plan to be important, he should be advocating an increase in premiums and not a reduction in benefits.

So I have now mentioned several groups referred to in Mr. Harrington's book, Mr. Speaker, and tried to indicate, at least in a general way, how some of them are getting along in this country and in this province. I suggest that if we add to these groups the sick, the disabled, the alcoholics and others and their families, we arrive at a formidable array of people. Yet by far the largest group of the poor are the unskilled and semi-skilled workers who, when they are not unemployed, populate our sweatshops and other establishments of substandard working conditions, not the least of which, I regret to say, are many of our public hospitals and other so-called charitable institutions.

These people are out of work more often than any others, and paradoxically our limited social insurance plans are of least benefit to them. A worker who has irregular employment at low wages collects very little in unemployment insurance benefits. So he is often reduced to welfare. I believe the welfare officers of Ontario and Toronto are doing as good a job as they possibly can, but they are limited by the laws under which they operate.

Let us face it, Mr. Speaker, the allowances permitted under those laws are little if anything above the starvation level. In and out of work, receiving only $1 or $1.25—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if I may interrupt the member to ascertain if he is completing his remarks; and if not I would suggest that he adjourn the debate.

Mr. Bryden: I am afraid it will take me some little time to complete my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bryden moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will proceed with second readings. I will check with the Clerk of the House to make sure we call only those bills hon. members have had an opportunity to examine. We will proceed with second readings tomorrow and if there is time we will resume this debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

Introduction of bills.

THE HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT ACT

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Highway Improvement Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation: sections 1 and 6—the amendments to bring the provisions into line with present practices; section 2—the amendment will enable roads that are partly in territory without municipal organization as well as roads that are wholly within territory without municipal organization, to be designated as tertiary roads; sections 3 and 4—these amendments will permit cities, towns, villages and townships to receive provincial subsidy on roads where a contribution toward their cost has been received from another source. A similar provision was passed last year in respect to counties; section 5—this new section provides for provincial-municipal agreements for expressways and freeways in urban areas.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask of the hon. Minister of Highways, notice of which I have already given. The question is as follows, Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. Minister inform us when tenders will be called for the remaining interchanges and fly-overs that are not completed along the route of 401 between Tempo and Tilbury in Elgin and Kent counties and when these contracts will be completed?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having provided me with notice. I would say that the following structures are contemplated at present for inclusion in the 1964-65 construction programme: Scanes Road underpass, 2.2 miles west of Highway 21; Highway 21 interchange; Interchange at Highgate Side-road, 4.9 miles east of the junction with Highway 21; Underpass at Muirkirk Road, 7.5 miles east of the junction with Highway 21; Furnival Road interchange, 5 miles west of Highway 76; Highway 76 interchange.

I would say further that it is difficult, if not virtually impossible, to forecast the relative priority of structures to be built in succeeding construction years, for a variety of reasons which I am sure the hon. member will understand. To indicate exactly the date of tender calls, awards and completions involves such matters as traffic patterns and demands, safety standards, areas to be serviced, etc.

However, a list of the structures to be built after the 1964-65 construction season, and which when completed will fully control the access of Highway 401 between Tempo and Tilbury, is as follows: Kent County Road No. 19, 2.3 miles west of the junction with Highway 21; County Road to Shedden interchange, 7.7 miles west of Highway 4; Blacks Lane underpass, 7.2 miles west of Highway 76; Coyne Road underpass, 4.7 miles east of Highway 76; Elgin County Road, No. 5 underpass, 2.5 miles east of Highway 76; County Road to Iona interchange, 12 miles west of Highway 4; Willis Side Road underpass, 9.2 miles east of Highway 76; County Road to Lawrence Station underpass, 10.2 miles west of Highway 4; Drake Sideroad underpass, 6.4 miles east of east junction Highway 2 interchange;

Centreline Road underpass, 9.1 miles west of the junction with Highway 21; Dillon Sideroad underpass, 9.3 miles east of Tilbury east limits.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I have an inquiry to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Cass) as follows: will the hon. Attorney-General permit a public inquiry into the operation of Ontario's coroners' system as asked for by the chief coroner of Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge notice of this question, as provided by the rules of the House. I would like to say that I have read with interest the question of the hon. member for Parkdale, Mr. Speaker, and the material recently in the press in connection with the office and duties of supervising coroner for Ontario and chief coroner for Metropolitan Toronto. It would appear to me that such matters as are envisaged by the question of the hon. member should be dealt with first within the department concerned. I am not a little surprised that the chief coroner for Toronto should have spoken first to the press in connection with matters which are primarily administered within my department, of which he is an official.

I would remind the hon. members that quite recently the office of supervising coroner in Ontario was created with the appointment of Dr. H. B. Cotnam to this office. Over the past two years, Dr. Cotnam has been engaging in a programme of modernization of the system and re-education of coroners in order that the duties of coroners throughout Ontario might be properly understood and properly carried out. Very considerable progress has been made and it is inevitable that there should be a difference of opinion in many matters of procedure between the supervising coroner and other coroners, including the chief coroner for Metropolitan Toronto. These are matters, however, which, in my opinion, must be first dealt with by the responsible officials of the government.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Attorney-General will permit a supplementary question; in fact, he really has not answered the question I asked. Will there be a public inquiry or has he given any thought—

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I have answered the question of the hon. member so far as I am able to at this time.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I had put in essentially the same question so perhaps I might be permitted to ask a supplementary question. Is it not accurate—

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the hon. member confine himself first to the question which he has submitted to me.

Mr. MacDonald: The question as submitted is—I did not want to repeat it—is it the hon. Minister's intention to abolish the post of chief coroner in metro areas? If so, would the hon. Minister indicate why, and will the hon. Minister assure the House that an appropriate occasion will be provided for the Metro chief coroner to present his allegations in connection with the operation of the coroners' jury system?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Well, Mr. Speaker, having now heard this question, I am sure the hon. members will agree with me that the two questions are not essentially the same. I would say this, that if there should be any consideration of the abolition of the office of chief coroner for Metropolitan Toronto, it will, of course, come before this House as legislation will be necessary.

The office of the supervising coroner for Ontario, as I have recently said, is a comparatively recent one and there are, quite understandably, areas of jurisdiction which are not settled and which could, if misunderstood, appear to conflict with the jurisdiction of other officials.

The question of the hon. member can be divided into two parts, Mr. Speaker. I have referred now to the first part. The second part could quite easily be answered by the word yes, but I would elaborate upon it by saying that the chief coroner will, of course, be afforded every opportunity to present his allegations respecting the operations of the coroners' jury system.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: If the Minister cares to answer.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it not accurate that the first discussion of this was initiated by members of the hon. Minister's department and not by Dr. Shulman?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough, West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon.

Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile). What steps does the hon. Minister plan to take to prevent municipalities from cutting off supplementary allowances to recipients now that the old age pension has been increased?

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having submitted his question to me beforehand. In response to the question concerning supplementary allowances, I should inform the House that the administration of general welfare assistance—of which this special aid is a part—is the responsibility of local municipalities. The province gives ample authority and support to the municipalities to make these additional funds available; but the determination of need and the circumstances under which the grant is made must be left with the municipalities.

I would quote from the regulation which provides for the granting of supplementary aid, as follows:

Where a municipal welfare administrator grants and the municipality pays supplementary aid to a recipient of a governmental benefit for the purpose of assisting the recipient to meet the cost of his shelter, or such other extraordinary costs as approved by the director, Ontario shall pay to the municipality 80 per cent of the amount that is granted, or $16 a month, whichever is the lesser.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no change in policy on the part of the department in this matter, even though $75 monthly is now made available to recipients of governmental benefits in place of the previous $65.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE APPRENTICESHIP AND TRADESMEN'S QUALIFICATION ACT, 1964

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour) moves second reading of Bill No. 4, The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act, 1964.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the items of legislation which has been advanced by the government following the committee on manpower which was headed by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Simonett). Now, on the occasion of the introduction of the bill, I outlined generally what it was intended to accomplish. It follows the recommendations of that committee. The bill is printed and is well annotated and there is not too much to add to what has already been tabled before the House. However, I would like to point out that one of the major changes in handling the system of apprenticeship is contained in this bill, and one of the important features of it is that it places the administration of the scheme and of this branch of the department, in the hands of a director who is responsible to the Minister. At present, it is the task of the industry and labour board, but this has become a mere formality in recent years and the change will bring the Act into line with current administrative practices. The Act also provides for the appointment of local apprenticeship committees which will function in an advisory capacity and will be appointed by the director rather than by the provincial advisory committee as heretofore. We also, of course, require authority to negotiate such agreements as may be possible and desirable with the Minister of Labour for Canada. That is covered in section 6.

In a transition of any scheme from one system to another, there are certain principles that must be maintained, and provision is made for exempting persons from the requirements of the section and an appropriate "grandfather" clause has been inserted. I draw the attention of the House in particular to that provision of the bill, No. 12, which provides that a contract of apprenticeship is not considered to have been violated because the apprentice is engaging in a lawful strike. The rest of the bill follows the lines which have been discussed before.

The part I would like to bring to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, is that a programme of apprenticeship is really the important feature of this entire subject. It may be said that The Apprenticeship Act itself provides the machinery and the modus operandi, if I may use that expression. Since I believe that attention must be given to the programme that the government is advancing under the subject of apprenticeship, it seems appropriate on this occasion, the moving of second reading of this bill, to announce a major extension in The Department of Labour's apprenticeship programme.

Following extensive study, the department is undertaking a major streamlining of its apprenticeship programme and this follows the first of what has to do with the introduction of the present bill. This is being done in recognition of the fact that in many fields, skilled workers are already in short supply and the demand for them can be expected to grow considerably as Ontario's industrial economy continues to advance at an increasingly accelerated pace. While we have had an active apprenticeship programme for many years, we recognize that our economic future depends more than ever before on the skills of our work force and that it is essential to streamline and update some aspects of the programme to meet today's technological changes and challenges more adequately.

In discussions with all interested groups representing employers and employees, educators and others, it has become apparent that we need to place increasing emphasis on at least two major considerations: One is the need to train more people in the increasing range of trade skills required in industry today. The other is the need to provide qualified apprentices and tradesmen with some tangible evidence to verify this skill and training in order to give them their rightful status in their field and in the eyes of the public they serve. Recognizing the vital importance of this second consideration, we have decided to establish compulsory certification in a number of key trades under the apprenticeship programme and to extend voluntary certification to a number of other trades in which no certificates of qualification have previously been available. I would like to emphasize that the introduction of compulsory certification is a step designed not to restrict our tradesmen but to enhance their standing by enabling them to provide themselves, their employer or prospective employers, and the general public with positive proof of their qualifications. The value and effectiveness of such compulsory certification has already proved itself in three trades in the province, motor vehicle repair, hairdressing and barbering. The improved standing which these trades have experienced since gaining compulsory certification, has made it obvious that extending this feature to other trades will benefit all concerned.

There are an additional ten designated trades for which there are specific regulations and over 100 trades into which an apprentice can enter on a voluntary basis. For the tradesmen, certification confirms his status and safeguards his trade against unfair competition from unqualified persons. For the employer, it provides firm evidence that the tradesmen he hires are competent to perform the work for which he hires them. For the public, there is the same assurance of competence and the increased confidence which comes from knowing that a tradesman knows his job.

In addition to the updating of the Act, we are extending compulsory certification to the following additional trades: refrigeration and air conditioning; electrical, including domestic, commercial and industrial; plumbing; steam fitting; sheet metal and watch repair. Apprenticeship training programmes have been in existence for a number of years in the case of all these trades except watch repair which is covered under the new programme.

Persons already engaged in these trades will not be subjected to any hardship as a result of the change and in fact, special attention has been given to enabling them to obtain the required certification. Anyone practising any one of these trades at the time the new system goes into operation, will have two years to obtain his certificate of qualification. Certificates will be granted automatically to those who are able to show proof of experience in the trade for a period equaling or exceeding the apprenticeship period prescribed for that particular trade. Anyone unable to present such proof will be required to undertake an examination to establish his proficiency in the trade and qualify for certification. In this way, with experience and knowledge verified either by proof of time or by testing, everyone already engaged in the trades concerned, will be able to obtain his certificate of qualification. In the case of newcomers to these trades, all will be required to go through the established apprenticeship training programme for their trade, attending a provincial institute of trades for the prescribed courses, which include classroom instruction and provide subsistence allowance throughout the training period.

Through these approaches, Mr. Speaker, we are convinced we can greatly improve the status of all those presently engaged in these trades; and equally important, that the incentives which effective training and certification will provide will greatly increase the interest of our young people in entering and qualifying themselves in these trades and thereby increase their numbers. Experience with the motor vehicle repair, hairdressing and barbering trades already bears this out.

Now at the same time, Mr. Speaker, we are establishing new apprenticeship training programmes for 10 trades in which such training has not previously been offered. These are cooking; iron working in structural steel; tool and die making; cement finishing; machinists; molders; welders; millwrights; radio and television repair; and heavy duty equipment repair. These trades will be on a voluntary certification basis.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that I can overemphasize the urgent need for these measures which we are undertaking in close co-operation with The Ontario Department of Education and the federal Department of Labour. The incentives and protections provided by effective training and certification will enhance the value and the effectiveness of the new screening programmes provided in our secondary schools.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the House would give second reading to this bill and it may be desirable to send it to the committee if that is the House's wish that will be agreeable to the government, but I think probably the bill itself speaks for itself.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say at the outset that I appreciate very much the details of this bill outlined by the hon. Minister of Labour and I feel sure from our side that we welcome this bill, The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act of 1964. I know, Mr. Speaker, that there must be some in this House who can personally recall the Ontario scene in 1928. I am sure those people can see the great differences that have taken place in industry, and the skill needed in industry, between 1928 and 1964. As we look at the explanatory notes in this bill, we see that at the top it says that this is the first major revision of The Apprenticeship Act since 1928, so I would just say simply that naturally we all welcome these major revisions since 1928.

The hon. Minister pointed out the purposes of this bill. He suggested that it was to get more young people with skills and to give public recognition to these skills. This means, in my opinion, that in establishing the apprenticeship courses—and the hon. Minister outlined 10 courses that were going to get compulsory certification and a number of other courses that were going to be started under the apprenticeship scheme—I would suggest that in establishing these courses there surely must be some approach to understand, and indeed to foretell, the changing industrial aspects of Ontario. It is not just enough to give official recognition and supervision to the technical avenues which may perhaps end up as culs-de-sac, these technical avenues, but indeed we should ensure that these apprenticeship courses are the avenues for productive jobs.

In other words, what is training for? I am sure that the government and the hon. Minister of Labour are aware that this bill, the training of apprentices, is a part of a much larger study. I say this because I notice the former Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) was in the House and I appreciated reading the publication on the conference on automation and social change, which indicated the government is certainly looking at the challenges and the complexity of the new approaches in industry, which obviously means that there are going to have to be new approaches and revisions, constantly, to the type of training that young people get.

I was going to quote some of the words of the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) when he opened that conference, but in brief, what he was saying was that all levels of government, not just The Department of Labour, but The Department of Education, research, and so on, have to keep a constant look at the changing situation on the demand of the labour force. It is because of this, because of the fact that we know that the demand for labour is going to change with the changing aspects of industry, that I would have hoped, sir, that the bill would have had a little more emphasis on tying together the need for research and for forecasting employment changes. I would have hoped that, for example, an additional clause would read something like this, sir: that the Minister of Labour, in conjunction with the provincial advisory committee for any trade or group of trades, will provide such available information as the employment history of finished apprentices.

I am thinking, for example, that when we sat on the committee studying the whole retraining programme, I do not think that we really had any information about the young people who had taken the apprenticeship courses in carpentry, what they were doing, whether this had been of benefit to them. We do know that there were something like over 40,000 people who were practising carpentry who had not gone through a carpentry apprenticeship course. This raised the question that surely before we got into a situation like that we should have been looking at the content of the apprenticeship course in carpentry to see if it was up to date with the need in the employment field.

I would hope that then there would be a constant review of the training content for apprentices. I think of another example where members of the printing trade—I am specifically thinking now of the printing industry representatives—had come to the committee and had told us that in the two technical schools which had printing presses that these presses were obsolete for the industry today. Yet we had young people, still at the time of our committee meeting, who were taking the training from these printing presses; but the presses were obsolete, so the training was obsolete and was being of no benefit. This underlines the need to be constantly watching the content and keeping it up to date.

I would hope that we would have some knowledge—and I appreciate the difficulties in this—but we would have some knowledge of the number of young people who might be going into apprenticeship courses. I would hope that we would know the geographical areas from which apprentices are recruited so then we could see from a broad picture; whether we should build in trade schools or technical schools to include the classroom facilities which enhance and complement the apprenticeship courses.

I suggest we do not have this picture. I think that we should try to have some knowledge of new industries which might be moving into an area then we will know that there will be certain kinds of trade skills needed by the local people there. I suggest again that we do not have this knowledge.

Now the hon. Minister may say there is no need for me to make such a clause because the provincial, or indeed the local, committees will have available information and advice. But I would suggest that the local committees and the provincial committees are being asked to give advice, in fact it is emphasized in the explanatory notes that these two committees would be advisory, but I would feel the advice is not much good if they do not have facts to substantiate it. And I still feel today that we do not have the facts.

I noticed when the committee was meeting—this is the select committee on training and manpower—that we were informed in the federal government, in The Department of Labour, there was one economist who was forecasting trends in industry. And we were also informed that in Sweden there were more than 30 or 40 such economists forecasting the trends that were taking place in industry. It is true that, for example, in Sweden it may be easier to do because it is a much more planned economy, but surely that raises all the more reason for us, with an unplanned economy or a more free economy, to be looking at and trying to get facts on the trends of industry. Then we will have facts with which we will know what kind of training will be most suitable for young people in five or 10 years.

I would suggest we really do not know our manpower resources, Mr. Speaker. I feel that we do not know, for example, with this bill, how many welders will be affected by it, how many carpenters will be affected. We have not really kept up to date with the whole manpower study in our province in relation to our resources. In fact, I would suggest in this province we do not know the facts that are gleaned in the national employment service. When I say "we" I mean The Ontario Department of Labour. Too, I think that the national employment service, from what I can gather—and I stand to be corrected on this—does not have the facts of the number of men that are referred to various industries throughout this province and the types of training they have. I think they do not have this because in many cases men can get employed without going through the national employment service.

I am not for compulsion that an industry has to tell some department of the state when it is employing men. On the other hand I am sure by co-operation there could be some way where we would have many more facts about the kind of manpower resources that we have and the kind of people who are needed in industry. And I suggest that unless we do get those facts, that really our provincial advisory council and indeed, sir, I would say, our vocational counsellors in schools, for example, really cannot do an adequate job in advising young people what apprenticeship course to take.

The hon. Minister, I think, cleared up the point—and I am sure he has the sensitivity to realize in mentioning this—that the purpose of certifying is not to restrict but is to enhance. And it is important that the public should give the proper recognition to young people who have taken training.

One of the aspects of getting proper recognition is that The Department of Labour should have an adequate number of people to be examiners over the training that the young people have taken. And I would like to point out that in the past this was not done.

In one case we had an examiner of barbering for The Department of Labour. He explained to us, when asked about his qualifications, that his only experience in barbering had been gained when his children were very young and he had put some kind of a bowl over their heads and clipped around the edges. Surely if we are going to enhance the feeling of young people that they have achieved something through training, they have to realize that the examination means something. I feel assured that the hon.

Minister will see that the people giving the examination will themselves have full understanding and qualifications in the particular course.

The last point that I would like to mention is that in the explanatory notes of this bill it says that this bill implements the general recommendations of the select committee on manpower training such as the following—and then I notice that the hon. Minister refers to the fact of this apprenticeship bill being under The Department of Labour. I, for one, have some reservations—as indeed we had in our report to the hon. Minister, whether apprenticeship training should be under The Department of Labour. It may be argued that The Department of Labour has a tradition of looking after apprentices, and therefore this responsibility should not be taken over by The Department of Education, which was the alternative department.

But may I say, what a tradition The Department of Labour has displayed over the past years in connection with apprenticeship! I think the hon. Minister himself, with all honesty, had said it was not exactly the most inspiring tradition of looking after apprentices. I am putting my own words into what he did say but if he did not say that—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I found it rather exciting to be associated with The Department of Labour and particularly this apprenticeship programme which is being of such assistance to many, not just the young people, but the men and women of this province.

Mr. Thompson: I am glad that the hon. Minister can be inspired with the background of such apprenticeship training because certainly the report of the committee, in referring to the background of his department in connection with apprenticeship, has this to say: It said it has been a record to date which has been anything but impressive. And I would hope that the hon. Minister would be more excited with impressive action rather than non-impressive action in the future.

The next argument is that The Department of Labour is the most logical place for apprenticeship training, because it is the department, we are told, which has the closest relationship with industry and management. I ask this question: Why is it only The Department of Labour that has this very close relationship with industry and with management? Surely The Department of Education should also have a close relationship with management and labour. Surely,

Mr. Speaker, if there is a gap between the educator and the real world of business life, this should be changed. This can be done, in my opinion, if there is such a gap—and I question this—but if there is, it can be done by infusing The Department of Education with a new responsibility which is apprenticeship training.

I might say there are other reasons, in my opinion, why apprenticeship should be assumed by The Department of Education. First, the whole training programme, vocational and academic, should be on an equal footing. I think that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), when he was previously the Minister of Education, sir, made a point of trying to enhance the technical and vocational training in the eyes of the public so that no one would feel that in his son going into vocational or technical training he was going into a lesser training than an academic training. We have to do this because, for too long, vocational training has been ignored by educators and, in my opinion, has consequently been downgraded by the public. Because it is essential that apprenticeship should not be a confining training in the changing economy, but it should have a broad base to permit flexibility for the finished apprentice to change his skills to changing needs. I would suggest that this requires that the apprentice in his training should have some academic training also. I have noted in the bill and in the hon. Minister's explanation of it that there will be some classroom study.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if, in the interests of getting the facts on the records, surely the hon. member understands and is aware that The Department of Education operates this branch of The Department of Labour's programme, and that the schools where these apprenticeship people attend are run under the control of The Department of Education. It will follow from that that The Department of Education is closely aware of what is going on, and indeed this entire programme is worked out between The Department of Education and The Department of Labour. The official responsibility for apprenticeship, and apprenticeship per se, rests with The Department of Labour, but the actual schoolroom training is carried out by The Department of Education.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate, Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the hon. Minister. I am really going on the basis of the manpower study which suggested that previously when the government had The Department of Education looking after the classroom work and The Department of Labour looking after the actual in-the-shop-training, that unfortunately there had been friction between these two departments. I am suggesting that if in training, when giving training to young people, it is decided that the in-the-shop training should be just in the hands of one department—should be isolated and away out on a limb in the hands of one department—but all other vocational training, technical training, is all under the umbrella of The Department of Education, that this would make a very lonely spot for the apprentice training. Why, sir, can we not bring the whole thing under one department rather than give the hon. Minister of Labour's department this particular area of training and responsibility?

I am saying that in looking at the prognosis of future jobs we realize that if skills are narrowed down and if young people go out today with just one skill—and for example the study on manpower by the Senate shows that no man in another 10 or 20 years will be able to go through his life with just one skill—then, because of the change in technological aspects of industry the apprentice is going to have to learn another skill in his lifetime. Consequently, as indeed the manufacturers' association and others have said, do not let us get these young people going out with just one narrow skill and without the academic background so that they have a flexibility to learn another skill later on, because they are going to have to. If we need that kind of flexibility I am suggesting the emphasis should therefore be placed on academic training; and if it is placed on academic training then I think that apprenticeship training should be within The Department of Education's jurisdiction.

I am really saying that to me having apprenticeship under The Department of Labour, sir, is to make apprenticeship an orphan child in the whole scheme of training. Frankly, we in the committee were concerned about this because one of the aspects in our whole technical and vocational training in this province is that there are not culs-de-sac. For example, a young fellow takes his training to become an apprentice and then if he is bright discovers he cannot move on up the ladder to finally become, if he wants to, a graduate engineer or the president of the company.

I am speaking of training related to our educational institutions and the way it is now that there are traditional barriers in connection with acceptance of one qualification from one area.

For example, take Ryerson. You can graduate from Ryerson and there are some universities in this province which will not give recognition in engineering and other courses to this training. Yet look at other countries! There is a steady flow, that is accepted, where a young man could start as a ditch digger, then take apprenticeship training, then go on to technical education and gradually move up to be a graduate engineer. I am suggesting if we move apprenticeship off into a narrow area under The Department of Labour when all other forms of education, technical, academic and so on, are under the umbrella of The Department of Education, we may be creating a cul-de-sac and a place where the apprentice does not get his full recognition.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the principles of this bill I can only reiterate the words of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) when he spoke on second reading of Bill No. 3, The Industrial Safety Act. A bill of this type has so much reference to what is going to be in the regulations, the fact that most of it is subject to the approval of the Minister. Mr. Speaker, it says, in spots, the Minister may appoint a provincial advisory committee, it says the director may do this and the director may direct someone in authority to do something. So what we have to say is that the effect of the principle of this bill will depend entirely upon the will and the desire of the Minister, and the director of the Act, in wanting to provide the type of skilled tradesmen detailed in the regulations.

I am not going to say very much about the entailment of the bill, but there is something that disturbs me very much and that is that the explanatory notes start off saying this bill implements the principal recommendations of the select committee on manpower training such as the following.

Now, the committee was established to study this problem in April, 1962, and we sat for that whole year and brought down a report in February, 1963. Being one of the committee, I assured the House when I spoke on the introduction of the report to the House that I had enjoyed my work, that the committee had applied themselves to it with sincerity and that we attempted to put in the report some of the things we felt were necessary to bring about good skilled tradesmen in the province of Ontario.

Of course we had to deal with many facets of educational, occupational, academic and mechanical training. We listened to some 50 briefs and by the fall of 1962 we felt there was such importance attached to this report that we worked under pressure to have the report presented before the session ended in the spring of 1963.

Now the lack of any reference to this report in the past year, the brevity of the remarks of the hon. Minister of Labour indicates to me, if not an insult to the committee, an affront to it. The work done by Dr. Crispo and Tom Eberlee of the department deserves much commendation. They put in a lot of work and research in compiling the data that we received during our sittings. Certainly I am convinced that if the other facets of this report are not dealt with without delay, The Apprenticeship Act is bound to fail. If this is all we wanted, an Act to provide for orderly procedure in bringing about skilled tradesmen in this province, that could have been done very early in the sittings of the committee. We could have had the manufacturers in the building trades together with some of the trade unions and they could have pointed out the loopholes and the failure of the old Apprenticeship Act.

What has to be dealt with to make the Act work properly is other parts of the report. Part 4 spells it out pretty clearly: related comments and recommendations, research—a neglected but vital need—forecasting changes in the nature and composition and nature of the labour force, developing and improving our educational and training methods, assessing records, responsibility for research, vocational guidance and on down the piece—many of the important considerations necessary in this whole problem of lack of skilled tradesmen in the field. I would like the hon. Minister to explain the principle he adopted in rejecting some of the main recommendations in the report.

Certainly in dealing with all the facets of the report, the committee recommended quite an administrative set-up under the Minister of Education, as was set out by a chart in the report: chief director of education, deputy Minister of both secondary schools and adult education, superintendent of both secondary schools and adult education. Then director of evening classes, at secondary school level; director of trade schools and technical institutes, director of apprenticeship, as part of the overall picture; director of general training in industry; and director of training of the unemployed; director of research counselling, curriculum development.

These are the things I felt the hon. Minister should have referred to. He should have told us what was going to take place in the future as regards the report and not to tell us that this bill carries the major recommendations of the report. Certainly I think the bill only covers one significant part of the report. The hon. member for Dovercourt remarked on the establishment of the directorship in The Department of Labour rather than what the committee recommended as the logical department, The Department of Education. But, of course, it explains that if it was thought better to have it in The Department of Labour then both sides would have to have a great deal more co-ordination and co-operation.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we should hear, if not from the hon. Minister of Labour, then the hon. Prime Minister of the province, just what he intends to do about the rest of this report. Certainly if he intends to establish select committees, take the time of the members during the year and spend the money, the taxpayers' money, to do the research and listen to briefs and presentations from the various organizations across the province, then it certainly deserves more attention than this report has received up to now.

Mr. J. M. Gould (Bracondale): Mr. Speaker, may I direct the attention of the hon. Minister to section 2 of this bill and ask who has the authority to appoint the director of apprenticeship?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It will be done in The Department of Labour and on the best advice that we can get. That would obviously involve consultation with The Department of Education.

Mr. Gould: Mr. Speaker, that is not the answer. The hon. Minister is attempting to introduce, and have this House enact, legislation—and I read section 2, "There shall be appointed a director—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

I would like to inform the member that at this stage of second reading of the bill the member should speak on the principle of the bill only and therefore should confine his remarks to the principle of the bill, either being for or against. There is an opportunity to ask questions on any particular clause or details of the bill during the committee of the whole House.

Mr. Gould: Mr. Speaker, I say that the appointment of a director of apprenticeship who is a motivating force is something that concerns the bill in its entirety: how the director of apprenticeship is to be appointed. The bill deals with who can control and supervise the director, and what some of the duties of the director are, but there is an absence of mention of who shall have the power to appoint that director. I think it is pertinent to this bill and vitally important to this House to know who shall have that authority. The answer to my question will determine what questions we may or may not ask at a later date.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, if I may ask of the hon. Minister a very simple question: My past experience with apprenticeship—and I have had quite a few of my former pupils approach me in trying to see whether they could get into a certain type of trade—has been that if a boy wanted to get into, let us say, the plumbing trade, he would have to find a plumber who would take him in, whether he was 16 or 17 or 18. After that he made application to the local board. If the local board decided, we will say, that they wanted to take him in, fine; and if this plumber had enough connections with the local board to see that this apprentice was accepted, then it was okay.

But the boards, as I have found out in the past, were trying to safeguard the number of apprentices, or journeymen—call it that if you want. Therefore, I wanted to find out whether we are going to have this same affair or whether the people who want to take a trade in a particular field will have a chance. Is this going to be another affair of whom you know or who you are, in order to be accepted?

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this bill, I would say that our hope is that it does mark a real step forward in some aspects of apprenticeship training. The hon. member for Dovercourt and the hon. member for Wentworth East have both made some rather pertinent comments on the different phases of the bill.

There is one aspect of it upon which I would like to comment. The hon. Minister mentioned the need for urgency in the matter of apprenticeship training and the need to hurry up the whole business of training and get more apprentices in the field. I would call to the attention of the House one of the reservoirs of apprenticeship which up to this point seems to have been ignored. I refer to those unfortunate people who had the experience of being sent to our reform institutions for some period of time. I would hope that consideration of this bill will lead to relating its provisions to the training going on in our reform institutions. In the annual report of The Department of Reform Institutions for 1962, Mr. Graham, the deputy Minister, says this. He is speaking here of Guelph.

Trade training is particularly stressed among the younger inmates. The man who attains proficiency in a trade has gained two assets. He will have something tangible to offer a prospective employer and he has a solid basis upon which to develop self-respect. Trade training is one of the potentially valuable tools in the work of rehabilitation with the younger age groups. Working under the guidance of skilled instructors, trade classes are established in bricklaying, carpentry, motor mechanics, painting and decorating, plumbing, sheet metal, and upholstery.

He goes on to say this:

Of major significance is the fact that a man is trained and acclimatized to a modern workshop where he learns to use modern machines under commercial conditions. The time spent in the institution, instead of retarding a man's experience and estranging him to normal working conditions, can be used creatively to teach him to fit into industrial practices and methods.

It has been my privilege to visit some of our reform institutions since my election last fall, and I want to commend to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Grossman) the courtesy with which I was received by the officials of those institutions. It seemed to me in visiting some of the shops that good courses were being offered by competent instructors. In many cases the young people, who are receiving that instruction, are acquiring real skill and, I think, getting themselves equipped to do exactly what has been said in this report.

One of the problems is that, except for stationary engineers, none of the young people who are taking the courses can get any credit for the apprenticeship training which they are in effect taking in those institutions. I think we should give very serious consideration to this.

One of the problems here is that since the young person may take a year or two years of such training, and since he gets no credits outside against his apprenticeship training, he has to repeat that time as an apprentice after he leaves the institution. So he regards this as more or less a waste of time and he does not have the interest in the work that he should have. So we have the problem here of how to stimulate interest and to build up that interest in these young people. In the report which I mentioned, we find that of the young people who are in the Ontario reformatories, industrial farms and training centres, more than a third are listed as having high school standing. In other words, they qualify for the Grade 10 entrance for apprenticeship training. There is here a large body of young people who should be considered seriously.

I suppose The Department of Reform Institutions has the accurate figures as to how many of these young people, who have the educational qualifications, are actually taking the training which might qualify them for apprenticeship. It was my experience in one of these institutions, along with one of the officials, to stop and chat with some of these boys. I want to tell you about one of them.

This young fellow was working, and I said to him, as we stopped and discussed his job, "You'll have a trade when you get out of here, that will be something for you." He said, "No, I won't have a trade." I asked him how long he had been in, and he told me just three or four weeks, but he said, "This is the second time. I went through my first sentence and I fiddled away my time here. I was out for seven days with nothing to do and no place to go." This was his story, although I understand that the supervision is fairly good now for these young fellows. But in any case, he was back again. I said, "This time I hope you're going to settle down to work and get a trade so you can offer your services to an employer when you get out." He said, "No, I can't get a trade here, this is kid stuff. I get no credits. But I have my plans all made. I'm going to get a trade and I know how I am going to get it." And I looked at him and said, "What do you mean?" He said, "When I get out this time, I'm going to see to it that I get into Kingston for long enough to get a trade, and I'll get it at public expense."

I looked at him, and the official looked at him, with some wonderment in our eyes and voices, and we said, "Is that not a strange kind of attitude to take?" "No," he said, "that's the only way I see to get a trade." And he went on to say, "My father did it that way and I am going to."

I think here is an illustration of one of the problems faced by these young people. I had the feeling—and discussed this with him a bit and he admitted I was right—that if he could get credit for the training he was then taking and if then somehow he could be apprenticed to an outside employer and have that credit taken with him on his apprenticeship with the new employer, then he would take a real interest in what he was doing inside the walls of the institution. It seems to me that we have to work out the techniques by which young people like this can get their training without the stigma of the penitentiary attached to them afterwards.

I quite realize that there will have to be safeguards. I quite realize that we have to have standards against which the achievement of these young people must be measured. We must be certain that the instructors are good instructors who know their job, and I think we have them now in large measure within the walls of these institutions.

We do want, most of all, to see to it that these young people who are now in these institutions come out as self-respecting members of society, able to take their places in the world which they face at that point, with skills so that they can carry on and become members, and active producing members, of that society. I would hope that in discussion and in consideration of this bill, this can happen, so that we can help in this transition and we can give to these young people a further measure of self-respect and a further inducement to take an active interest in the work that they are engaged in today. If this programme is implemented and if we can find the ways and means of working out the difficulties that may present themselves in this kind of new concept, then I am dead certain that we will find this a real reservoir of new skills and new apprentices out of which will come many of the journeymen of the future.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I wanted to address a couple of general inquiries to the hon. Minister in regard to some of the discussion that has taken place and his remarks.

I notice that when he introduced the bill he talked about inaugurating new courses in cookery and in ironworking. Harkening to the line of my hon. colleague from Dovercourt, I wonder what study has been done to indicate that we need more cooks or more ironworkers. I think we are all familiar with the great effort to produce welders. We ran all sorts of courses and produced hundreds of welders across the province. The only thing was that we found we had so many welders that there were not enough people around to employ them. So what we were able to produce was a whole group of trained unemployed people who were trained for more or less permanent unemployment. I suppose if you have to be unemployed, it is better to be a trained unemployed person than to be an untrained unemployed person.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Then you have some prestige.

Mr. Singer: Yes, as my hon. colleague says, then you have some prestige. But one would think that the real essence of this effort on the part of the government would be to study what it is doing, to have some knowledge that we need cooks, that we need more ironworkers.

Is the hon. Minister able to tell us—I would hope he is—that there is a demand for cooks and it is greater in eastern Ontario than it is in western Ontario or in northern Ontario, or something? But I just wonder if he has pulled these two trades out of the air or whether there is some logic and there is some sense in talking about cookery and ironworking.

And then if he is going to inaugurate an apprenticeship course in cookery, is this going to mean that when a small restaurant is opened in connection with a tourist resort and, for instance, old Mrs. Jones who lives down the road is called in to make some pies and cakes, is she going to have to enroll in an apprenticeship course? Does the hon. Minister intend to interfere with this type of endeavour that we have through Ontario? These are things that come to mind almost immediately when the hon. Minister starts to talk about apprenticeship courses in cookery.

Then there is another problem, Mr. Speaker, that concerns me, and it revolves around a discussion that I had with a former Minister of Labour, Mr. Daley. A few years ago, sir, we exchanged a considerable amount of correspondence concerning the age limit. I notice that this Act has been very carefully drafted and it does not mention a top age limit insofar as apprenticeship is concerned. But the regulations have also been very carefully drafted and they leave the door open to the Minister to do almost anything he might want to do at a later date. He can determine that the age limit for apprentices shall be 21, or he can determine that it can be older.

The reason that Mr. Daley and I were exchanging correspondence at that time was as a result of an inquiry I had from a young immigrant chap who had come to this country a few years ago and who had worked as a labourer for some few years. He came to the realization that as a labourer he really did not have much future, and at the age of 23 he decided it was high time that he learned a trade. He decided that work in the automobile repair field was the trade he would like to learn. But he got caught up, Mr. Speaker, in our apprenticeship regulations because he was 23, and since he was over 21 nobody was able to do anything to help him.

I think it is important that there should be a declaration of policy at this stage as to whether or not the government intends to have flexible top age limits or whether it intends by its vagueness not to delineate this at all and to continue the hardships that have existed. I think it is most important that there be a greater spelling out in this Act, or in the pronouncements of the hon. Minister that go with it, than now appears before us.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): That was all done last year.

Mr. Singer: It was all done last year, the hon. member says. I would hope it would be but it is not here in the Act, and if it is all done why is it necessary—

Mr. Boyer: Done!

Mr. Singer: Done, yes, done, that is right. I do not know if I have the ad here, yes, we did not have a "done" on this one. We did not have one on apprenticeship or labour legislation or safety legislation, 19 of the many reasons why. But this one was not done.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): There were a lot in there that were not done either.

Mr. Singer: Yes, well, that can be another speech.

So, I say, Mr. Speaker, just to conclude these remarks, that I think we should have some real indication from the hon. Minister before this bill moves beyond this stage that there is some study or available source for study, some research, that indicates, for instance, that we need more ironworkers and that we are not going to have a glut of ironworkers the same as we had a glut of welders. I would like to hear some authoritative pronouncement on the government's attitude to apprentices who might be over the age of 21. This is a very important thing in our system of training and these are obvious gaps that the hon. Minister perhaps has left deliberately unanswered.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Wait a minute!

Mr. Speaker: I might inform the House that on second reading the Minister has made his remarks on the principle of the bill as he introduced it, and he is really not in order to come back and speak again on the bill.

Mr. Bryden: May he not close the debate, Mr. Speaker, on the motion and cover some of the points that the hon. gentlemen raised, if he sees fit?

Mr. Speaker: Not according to the rules. If it is in the form of a question it may be allowed, but according to the rules of the House he is not to speak twice on the motion presently before the House.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Would you give me permission then to answer briefly one or two of the questions raised?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, permission granted.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Firstly, Mr. Speaker, those hon. members of the House who were members of the House a year ago, will remember that I was the Minister and that the present hon. Prime Minister was the leader of the government, when we took out the limiting age of 21 under The Apprenticeship Act. That was done immediately it became apparent what the present condition with respect to the age limit was, and what the need for apprenticeship training was, particularly in the light of the sittings of the committee on manpower training.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but you can put it back by regulation now.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, I am going to answer these questions. I believe I am a responsible person. I think that what I did a year ago was a good indication of the policy I intended to follow. In moving the second reading of this bill today I deliberately presented the present expanded and extended programme of apprenticeship which The Department of Labour and I were advancing as an indication of the policy, and the views, and the feeling with respect to the subject matter, which the government endorses. Surely I was trying to get a message over to the hon. members of the Opposition, but they did not get it very well.

The point is this, that in the operation of a programme such as apprenticeship a very wide latitude is required for those running it if there should be any degree of elasticity in the handling of the programme, and accordingly it is with this in mind that the bill has been drafted in general terms.

With respect to the appointment of the director, this will be done in accordance with the provisions of The Public Service Act.

With reference to another dissertation at length on The Department of Reform Institutions, we in The Department of Labour are aware of the need for therapeutic treatment which may be available under an apprenticeship system and while second reading is not the time to go into detail, for the benefit of the new hon. members of the House, it is our intention that part of this latitude and elasticity provided in this bill, will enable the director of the programme in certain circumstances to issue the necessary certificate of apprenticeship to which reference is made.

The final question to which I will make reference has to do with what consultation and study have been made with respect to the selection of these courses. The selection of the courses into the compulsory certification category has only been done and determined on after the closest investigation of all of the circumstances applicable. Similarly, with respect to the named certification, the named apprenticeship group dealing with cooking has been done, of my own knowledge, with all facets of the industry—employers, labour representatives, associations, those in the business—to determine the actual need of this type of facility being offered on a voluntary basis and that is why it has been done.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed I rise on a point of order. In the questions that were asked earlier in this House of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Cass), I have now ascertained that he gave false information and misinformed the House in the course of doing so. Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter and I want to draw it to the attention of the House because it seriously affects the privileges of this House.

In the course of his reply to the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) the hon. Attorney-General stated—and I have a direct quotation:

I am not a little surprised the chief coroner for Toronto should have spoken first to the press in connection with matters which ; primarily administered within my department and of which he is an official.

At that time I did not think that was correct so I asked the hon. Attorney-General a specific question.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Snooping again, eh!

Mr. MacDonald: My question was to the effect that were the press stories not initiated by a statement of departmental officials. The hon. Attorney-General replied no. The hon. Attorney-General was in error, whether unwittingly or not, I do not know. The facts of the case are these and I have ascertained them from the city desk of the Toronto Telegram which I believe was the first paper to carry this. It carried a story first based on the comments of Deputy Attorney-General Common to the effect that he was recommending, or he was planning to recommend, the abolition of the post. After it had received that story, it—in turn—got in touch with Dr. Shulman and Dr. Shulman made his comments.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, deliberately or otherwise, the hon. Attorney-General has slurred Dr. Shulman with regard to his supposedly initiating this, when in fact it was initiated by the top departmental officials. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this was an unwitting error. I find it a little difficult to believe in the light of what happened yesterday, that it was unwitting, but I am now certain from having checked the facts that the hon. Attorney-General has misinformed the House.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Waste of time listening to the hon. member.

An hon. member: Furthermore, he has nothing to say.

THE INDUSTRIAL STANDARDS ACT

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves second reading of Bill No. 5, An Act to amend The Industrial Standards Act.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I think that The Industrial Standards Act is potentially one of the most important pieces of labour legislation in the province. I say potentially, because I do not think it has ever realized its potential. Perhaps we could hope that in the future it will be used more widely than it has in the past. We commonly hear these days about the desirability—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, might I say this at this time, that having in mind the detailed provisions of this bill, it is our intention that it be referred for detailed study and discussion to the labour committee?

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I think that is an appropriate procedure. I do not happen to be a member of the committee myself, but I am sure that there will be interested parties who wish to make representations and that members of the House who are members of that committee will wish to inquire in detail into some of the provisions of the Act. It is not the easiest thing in the world to understand the full import of all these amendments and I am sure that discussion in the committee will be useful.

I am, however, interested at this time, Mr. Speaker, in simply dealing with some of the principles of the bill and of the legislation which it purports to amend. I was saying that this legislation is potentially among the most important legislation of the province, because in this day and age I think everyone recognizes that everything possible should be done to encourage labour-management co-operation. Now that is a very broad term and sometimes it is used as a form of platitude, but I think it can be a meaningful term if we delineate areas of co-operation and do everything possible to encourage co-operation in those areas. There is no doubt that the whole area of the regulation of wages, hours of work and other related working conditions, is an important area for co-operation. I think it is a more mature achievement for management and labour in industry to be able to regulate their own working conditions without government intervention, than for the government simply to step in, as it does, for example, in minimum wage legislation, and simply decree that at least the minimum wage shall be so and so. It is much more difficult to work out procedures whereby labour and management can find a basis for co-operation along this line in an entire industry. If that result can be achieved I think we have a much better form of regulation than simply by government decree.

The Industrial Standards Act, when it was first passed, in the thirties I believe, was intended to provide the means whereby labour and management could co-operate in self-regulation of working conditions within their industries and the removal of competition based on exploitation of labour. The Act, when it was first passed, was very useful in the garment industry in Toronto in cleaning up undesirable conditions that then existed in that industry. I think it provided a base on which some of the most mature labour-management relations in any industry in Ontario now exist. Unfortunately, it did not have very much further application. As far as I know it has been used since then only in some phases of the construction industry, in only a minority of the construction industry, and also to a certain degree in the barbering trade, although I believe that most of the schedules in the barbering trade, certainly the one for Toronto, are hopelessly out of date and, for all practical purposes, meaningless.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, about 20 per cent to 25 per cent of the work force in Ontario have availed themselves of the provisions of this Act, this legislation—something over 200,000 people.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I will take the hon. Minister's word for it—that certainly is more than what my impression had been. I have not gone through all the details, but, for example, in the construction industry, the Laskin report shows that 70,000 employees are covered by schedules out of 168,000 in the industry. This is one of the industries in which it is more widely used. There are many industries in which it has not been used at all. I was suggesting that in the barbering industry, which is one where it is quite widely used, it has, so far as I can determine, been largely ineffective for either or both of two reasons: one, that the schedules have been allowed to fall way out of date; and the other, that enforcement has been almost impossible in that particular industry. I think Laskin makes some reference to the problems of enforcement and I will make one or two references to them myself in a moment or two—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But this is a voluntary step!

Mr. Bryden: I quite agree. I think I made that clear. It is more difficult than simply issuing decrees. It is more productive in the long run to provide the means whereby labour and management can get together and regulate conditions, but I agree that they have to do it voluntarily for it to be meaningful and therefore that makes it more difficult. I believe that The Industrial Standards Act has not been as effective as we might have hoped and has not been as widely used. The government in recognition, perhaps, of that fact and of other facts, appointed Professor Bora Laskin as a commissioner to inquire into the Act, and he has made a number of recommendations and the government has now seen fit to accept some of them. The purposes of the recommendations are, of course, to make the Act more effective in achieving its original purpose, which was to encourage self-regulation of wages and working conditions in industry.

I might mention that in Canada we have legislation which approaches the same problem in a somewhat different way. Several provinces have Acts which are similar in principle to our Industrial Standards Act. The province of Quebec differs from the other provinces—and, I think, any other jurisdictions in North America—in giving much greater recognition to collective agreements in this problem of the self-regulation of industry. In fact, its legislation is entitled The Collective Agreement Act. It used to be called The Collective Agreement Extension Act. This, I think, was a more accurate description of its purpose, which was to provide a procedure whereby certain clauses of a collective agreement could be extended to the whole of an industry in a specific area where—I am not quite sure of the exact words, but it was some such words as the following—where it was considered that they had achieved preponderant significance in determining wages and hours in the industry. This Quebec statute was copied from, or modelled on, legislation in Europe where I think there has been greater experience in such matters and greater maturity in collective bargaining relationships than we have so far achieved on this continent.

I am not sure myself that the Quebec legislation with its European model is not superior to our industrial standards legislation with its American models. Professor Laskin, I think, has made recommendations whereby he hopes that perhaps the best of both worlds can be achieved. It remains to be seen if that is possible. At any rate he does not recommend a full-scale adoption of the principle of the Quebec legislation as compared to our own. He does, however, recommend the incorporation of certain basic principles in that legislation into our Industrial Standards Act, which as far as I can see, the government has not seen fit to accept.

Professor Laskin's report contains a total of 58 recommendations. As far as I have been able to make out from studying the recommendations and comparing them with the amending bill and comparing that with the original Act—which admittedly is a rather difficult process—it seems that the government has accepted about 20 of the recommendations and has accepted another one in part. As I will try to show in a minute, the part that it has not accepted is the key to the recommendation, but it has accepted 20 recommendations and one additional one in part. It has not accepted, for the present at any rate, 20 other recommendations. The remainder are not really applicable to the bill since they deal in the main with administrative practices which would naturally not be covered by the legislation. Of the 20 recommendations that the government has not seen fit to accept, some, of course, are fairly minor and perhaps the government's omission is not too serious, but there are some that I consider important and three or four in particular that I would like to refer to specifically.

The first is recommendation No. 3, which deals with—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit in which the debate has been carried on, I think I should confirm what the hon. member has said, that of a large number of some 56 recommendations in the report, some 20 of them are adopted in the legislation in their entirety and there are some 23 others which we believe can be dealt with by administrative procedure within the department. I mention that to give you the picture as the bill stands in relation to the Laskin report.

Mr. Bryden: I thank the hon. Minister for giving me that information. There was some difficulty from where I sit in determining which ones could be handled administratively and which ones could not, so it may be that some of the recommendations that appear to me not to have been adopted will, in fact, be adopted by administrative procedure.

I do not think, however, that that affects the ones on which I particularly want to comment. The first of those is recommendation No. 3, which relates back to my previous comments about the desirability of formally involving collective agreements in the principle of self-regulation and of providing a means whereby the principle of the Quebec legislation could be made applicable in Ontario, even if it is not the exclusive principle as it is in Quebec. Recommendation No. 3 says:

Employer associations and trade unions should be recognized as representatives of employers and employees for the purposes of the Act.

Unless I am wrong, and the hon. Minister no doubt will correct me if I am wrong, that recommendation has not been accepted and I think it should be. I would like to read one comment from the main body of the report which says:

The virtue of the Act will lie in its invitation to employers and employees in a particular competitive area of their industry or trade to join in eliminating unfair competition in labour costs through agreements on wage and hour rules for all. Although the theory is that workers will thus be protected against exploitation, and responsible employers against unfair undercutting, the fact is that the Act has not worked and indeed cannot work, except in the barbering industry where prices as well as wage rates may be fixed, unless there are employer and employee collectivities to provide the substratum of support needed for a schedule.

In other words, as I read Professor Laskin's words, most of the success that the Act has had to date has been due to the existence of employer and employee collectivities or organizations. I think this fact should be frankly recognized in the Act. I believe Professor Laskin says a little later that such a change would be formal rather than novel. I am not sure I agree with him on that. I think frank recognition of the importance of employer associations and trade unions might be an encouragement to more of them to avail themselves of the advantages of the Act, which I think are substantial. In fact, I would like to see the day arrive when some of the major industrial unions, and associations or collectivities, to use Laskin's words, of employers, would regulate conditions in such industries as primary steel throughout the province through one joint negotiating process. That may be some time in the future. But I think our legislation should be—we should have those possibilities in mind in drafting the legislation now.

Related to recommendation No. 3 are recommendations No. 57 and No. 58, which also appear not to have been adopted. No. 57 says:

The Industrial Standards Act should expressly provide that nothing therein affects the operation of The Labour Relations Act.

And No. 58, which is related, says:

It should also provide that where employees covered by a schedule are subject to a collective agreement, the latter shall govern unless the terms of the schedule are more advantageous in which case they shall prevail.

I think those two recommendations are important, Mr. Speaker. I think they might help to remove any vestige of suspicion which I believe still exists in some quarters that The Industrial Standards Act is a disguised means of approving company unions. If it is clearly stated in the Act that trade unions and employer associations have a positive role, indeed the most important role to play in the operation of this Act, and that the Act itself will not interfere with anything that is provided for in The Labour Relations Act, then I think there might be a fuller acceptance of the genuine advantages it has to offer in the trade union movement as well as among the employers of the province.

The other class of recommendations to which I would like to refer, Mr. Speaker, are those relating to enforcement. The government has adopted a great many of Laskin's recommendations on enforcement and I think has improved the Act substantially by doing so.

There are, however, one or two of them—I have noted three—that they have not adopted or appear not to have adopted at any rate—which I consider rather important. First is recommendation No. 26, which proposes that the severability principle should be applied to schedules. Maybe the government has received legal advice that it is not necessary to have such a provision in the Act. On the other hand, Professor Laskin is a pretty distinguished legal authority himself and he apparently thinks that it is necessary to have this spelled out in the Act. Unless I misread the bill, there is no such provision in it. I think it would be desirable that it be there just so that there will be no doubt on the matter.

The next recommendation that I would like to refer to is No. 38 which provides that the chairman of an advisory committee should be vested with the powers of an inspector. That apparently has not been adopted and I think it is important that it should be. I can remember off and on for quite some time representatives of the barbering industry in Ottawa complaining bitterly about the fact that they never seemed to be able to get their schedules enforced. It did not matter who they went to, they always got the brush-off. It was usually left to the employee representatives on the advisory committee and they had no resources at all at their disposal.

To an important degree the government has met this point but not as fully as it should, in my opinion. To demonstrate what I say, or in support of the point I am trying to make, I would like to read a paragraph of Professor Laskin's main report as follows:

Inspectors should not be limited or limit themselves to investigations only on individual complaints but should be responsive to advisory committees.

It may be that the hon. Minister has that in mind; so that particular point may be covered. Maybe that is what he is envisaging. In fact, I have no doubt that is what he does have in mind, so that particular point may be covered. Professor Laskin goes on to say:

A working partnership will be thus encouraged which should dissipate the disillusionment about enforcement and the helplessness of advisory committees expressed to me at the inquiry. This liaison and responsibility of inspectors to advisory committees should alleviate the want of power in the committees themselves to ask for information or seek access to premises. I recommend a further alleviation by the reposing of authority in the chairman of an advisory committee to exercise the powers of an inspector. To effect a balance in this respect I also recommend that the chairmanship of an advisory committee should alternate annually between an employer-nominated member and an employee- or union-nominated member.

I may say that in that last sentence I have read another recommendation which I do not think the government has adopted. But I do think it should complete the enforcement structure which it has built very substantially in its proposed amendments by accepting Laskin's recommendation of giving the chairman of an advisory committee the powers of an inspector under the Act, in addition to providing for close liaison between inspectors and advisory committees. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to Laskin's recommendation No. 46 as follows:

It should be made an offence to discharge or discriminate against any employee who lodges a complaint under the Act or a schedule or who gives evidence in any proceeding connected with the administration of the Act or a schedule.

Now, this much, I think the government has accepted. Well, I know the government has adopted it because it is in the bill. But the next part of the same recommendation is as follows:

And this should be fortified by permitting an inquiry into any such discharge or discrimination with power to order affirmative relief.

And unless there has been something written along the edges of the bill that I have missed, the second part of that recommendation has not been adopted. In my submission, Mr. Speaker, the recommendation is meaningless without the second part. Surely we found that out by experience over 20 or 25 years with regard to charges of discrimination against employees or dismissal of employees on account of trade union activities.

The bill here provides, as far as I can see, that an employee, who complains of discrimination, has only one remedy: to go to police court. Now, that procedure did not work with regard to labour-relations legislation and it did not work with regard to human rights legislation. I do not know why the hon. Minister thinks it will work with regard to this kind of legislation.

I would suggest to him that he should consider incorporating into the bill procedure similar to the procedure set forth in The Labour Relations Act or in the human rights code, whereby a complaint regarding discrimination can be investigated in a less formal method than is required in a criminal prosecution in police court and with powers of affirmative relief, whereby orders can be issued requiring certain remedial action if the complaints are found to be justified.

This is the procedure that has been worked out with regard to labour relations legislation and human rights legislation. It has been worked out by long experience, because it has been found that the police court procedure simply does not meet the bill in this sort of situation. Therefore, I would suggest to the hon. Minister that there is no point in him cluttering up his bill with, I think it is, the proposed new section 16 of the Act unless he is prepared to provide procedures whereby inquiries can be conducted informally and affirmative relief provided.

Apart from those criticisms, some of which I consider very important, Mr. Speaker, I think the bill is an important step forward. I hope it will achieve its purpose; I hope that the amended Act will be used even more widely than The Industrial Standards Act has been used in the past. Certainly that Act has proved to be of real value in some industries and I am hopeful that the principle contained in it can be extended ultimately to almost all industry in Ontario. I think that that objective would be more readily achieved if the hon. Minister would accept, in addition to the recommendations he has already accepted, those additional recommendations of the Laskin commission to which I have made reference.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, it appears that this is Bryden day in the Legislature—at any rate, the latter part of it is. At the time of adjournment yesterday I had been dealing with the subject of poverty and after enumerating groups of people to whom I considered the concept particularly applied, I mentioned that by far the largest group of the poor are the unskilled and semi-skilled workers who are consigned to sweatshops and other establishments of inferior working conditions such as many public hospitals and a great many other establishments that it is not necessary to enumerate here. At the time the adjournment hour arrived I was at the point of calling attention to the fact that these people are in and out of work. They receive only $1 or $1.25 an hour when they are working and much less than that if they live outside the “golden horseshoe.” In view of this vicious circle to which they are inevitably confined and from which they cannot escape, or have not been able to as yet, they and their children may never escape the grip of poverty. If they are to do that, there must be government policies which guarantee (a) full employment and (b) decent minimum wages.

What is even worse, Mr. Speaker, is that technological change is steadily adding to the numbers of this group. It is a traumatic experience for a man who has been receiving $1.90 or $2 an hour with the full protection of a union contract, to find himself at middle age or later suddenly hurled out on a labour market where he cannot earn more than $1.05 or $1.10 an hour with no union protection. Yet nobody with any power to do anything about it seems to care a hoot about him. Poverty is a problem with many facets that has to be attacked from many angles. Full employment policies will help; so will adequate minimum wages, adequate training and retraining programmes, proper pensions and other social security measures.

But Michael Harrington, whose book I referred to yesterday, the man who probably knows more about the subject than anyone else, has suggested that the strongest single weapon with which to fight poverty is a full-scale public housing programme. Such a programme will not only provide important new job opportunities for unemployed and exploited workers, but it will remove the slums that are the product of past poverty and the breeding places of future poverty. And, Mr. Speaker, just as an illustration of that point I would like to read a portion of an item that appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of November 7, 1963, summarizing a report of the Canadian Education Association, under the headline,

POVERTY BLIGHTS CITY CORE, RUINS YOUTH—REPORT

Downtown areas of Toronto and other big Canadian cities spawn crime, alcoholism, drug addiction and disease, the Canadian Education Association reported today.

It also blamed downtown conditions for broken homes and conditions that seriously impair children's learning ability.

The report draws a composite picture of the central cores of Canadian cities being deserted by all but low-income families and immigrants and of such overcrowding that many children are forced to do their homework in restaurants.

Nearly 50 per cent of the cases of failures, dropouts, truancy and delinquency in the large Canadian cities come from the downtown schools, the CEA said.

There is a direct correlation between the learning capacity and achievement of children and the economic level of the district in which they live, said the report.

Unfortunately, the government has never shown any disposition to face up to this challenge. Year after year it has announced what it has described as bold new programmes or bold new developments on existing programmes in the housing field. These announcements have usually produced headlines but little else, and headlines are a poor substitute for houses. Year after year we have found by experience that the bold new housing programmes did not produce any more housing than the inadequate old programmes. Rarely has the government's capital spending on housing exceeded $5 million a year and in most years it has not even been that much. In a budget of more than $1 billion, that is peanuts, Mr. Speaker.

I think one of our difficulties has been that responsibility for housing has always been entrusted to a Minister who has been overburdened with other responsibilities. I would suggest to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) that the time has come to set up a separate department of housing, with a full-time Minister in charge. In that way we may have a chance of getting real action on the critical housing problem.

One phase of the problem to which increased attention might well be given has already been mentioned in this debate by the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard). That is the conservation and rehabilitation of existing stocks of housing. Some areas have deteriorated so completely that nothing short of total redevelopment will now suffice. But we will save tens and even hundreds of millions of dollars in the long run if we take adequate steps now to prevent other areas from suffering a similar fate.

In this connection I would like to put before the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall), publicly, a proposal that I have already discussed with him privately. Unfortunately the hon. Minister is not here at the present time, but I have no doubt that he will see this statement in Hansard—in any case I will take steps to call it to his attention. I have in any case discussed the problem with him. I have not as yet received any indication from him as to what his views are, but actually I do not expect that I will receive any such indication until he has had an opportunity to consider it.

As most of us know, termite infestation has become the most important single threat to existing stocks of housing in Metropolitan Toronto. It is extremely heavy in large sections of the city proper all the way from Yonge Street to the eastern city limits. It has extended into Scarborough and East York townships, and occurrences have been reported in the western and northern parts of the city and even in Don Mills.

There are no known methods of eradicating termites, but quite effective methods have been developed of protecting individual buildings against them. The difficulty is that these methods are too expensive for the small homeowner of limited means. As a result, such a homeowner, when faced with termite infestation, will all too often react in one or other of the following ways: either he will try to unload the house on someone who has not yet heard of termites—and I may say, in Toronto that is getting more and more difficult and, in any case, it is no solution to the problem as far as the community is concerned—or alternatively he will slowly give up the struggle, and it can be a very discouraging struggle—and let his house gradually deteriorate in value. If this process continues unchecked, Toronto will ultimately be faced with enormous problems of slum clearance, and the senior governments will have to make huge outlays to help solve them.

The Householders' Association for Termite Control, an organization of residents of the eastern part of the city, has been making representations on this matter to city authorities for the past two years. To encourage the owners of homes suffering termite infestation to termite-proof and repair their properties, the association has proposed that grants of up to half the cost with an upper limit of $250 should be given for owner-occupied dwellings in which not more than two families are living, plus loans at the city's current borrowing rate plus administration to cover all or part of the balance. This proposal has been approved in principle by the appropriate committees of city council. In fact it has been before two committees of the city council, and both of them have approved it in principle. Indeed, a by-law has been drafted that would implement it if the by-law were adopted.

The hold-up now is the reluctance of the board of control to recommend any expenditures that are not absolutely unavoidable. This is not unnatural in view of the fact that the city has lost substantial assessment to expressways and other road improvements and has not yet got the compensating increases in assessment that the east-west subway will undoubtedly bring. Therefore, Toronto is in a particularly difficult financial situation at the present time, and naturally the board of control is very hesitant about committing itself to any new expenditures. I am certain, however, from talking to the board of control and individual members thereof on numerous occasions, that the board's reluctance would be overcome entirely if the province would undertake to share the cost of grants and loans made under this policy.

A total expenditure on grants of about $300,000 a year over the next three or four years, with a somewhat larger figure for loans, would break the back of the termite problem. Further expenditures would probably be needed in subsequent years but they would be on a much reduced scale. If this expenditure were shared on a 50-50 basis by the provincial and municipal governments, it would not impose an intolerable burden on either of them and it would save both of them large sums of money in the long run.

Since the province has already recognized a financial responsibility for housing, I do not think it is too much to ask it to make grants of $150,000 a year for the next few years and loans in a somewhat larger aggregate, to help implement a major programme for conservation of housing.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, in pursuit of long-standing government policy of trying to pre-empt publicity when Opposition members are scheduled to speak, the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) made a major announcement regarding education grants policy for the coming years.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Did the hon. member not like it?

Mr. Bryden: I will make comments on it in a minute. The programme was announced by the hon. Minister as a foundation tax plan, but it appears to provide about as solid a foundation as a sand dune.

Actually, the programme is a composite of five separate grants programmes. The bewildering variety of percentages, and percentages of percentages, within these individual programmes will no doubt leave many school boards with the impression that they are climbing a ladder on which the rungs have been sawed three-quarters of the way through. One of the many advantages of a foundation programme is that it should provide for greater simplicity in the application of grants policy. I do not think anyone would accuse the hon. Minister of simplicity in his presentation yesterday. Indeed, his new programme appears, at first sight at any rate, to be considerably more complicated than the hodge-podge programmes of the past and most of us had thought that the ultimate in complexity had been achieved in those programmes.

The objection to this degree of complexity is not only that it makes it difficult for school boards to know exactly what grants they are entitled to, but it leaves undesirable scope for administrative discretion. This can all too often be exercised with less regard to educational requirements than to the political exigencies of the party in power.

We recognize that the present hon. Minister has inherited a difficult situation for which he cannot be held responsible in that there continues to be an inordinately large number of school units in this province. As he himself said, a foundation programme cannot work properly when there is a wide discrepancy in the size and financial capacity of school units.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it was back in Mr. Drew's day that the government first announced its intention to consolidate school units in this province. The vigour with which that policy has been pursued in the ensuing 20 years can be gauged by the fact disclosed in the hon. Minister's statement yesterday that we still have approximately 3,200 elementary school boards varying in equalized assessment per class room unit from $10,000 to over $1,000,000.

I would urge the hon. Minister to permit at least some of his officials to put away their slide rules and get on with the job of rationalizing school units so that we can guarantee, in reasonable measure, equality of educational opportunity to all students everywhere in the province.

An ominous note was struck by the hon. Minister yesterday in his reference to the need, and I am now quoting: "to spread over a number of years unusually large increases or decreases"—and I emphasize the word decreases—"in grant." Elsewhere he said that the government has for this first year of operation of the new plan deliberately set the levels in terms of the average.

Mr. Speaker, it is not good enough to aim at the average and it will be most unfortunate if the new programme will to any degree have the effect of dragging down present above-average standards towards the average. I would say that educational standards in the city of Toronto are among the highest in the province, and yet I would say that they are no more than a desirable minimum, that we should aim to achieve throughout the province. I certainly do not think they are in any sense what one could consider above the desirable minimum.

One might quibble about a few of the expenditures of the Toronto board of education but in the main its expenditures have been to improve educational standards. They have done a good job, but I do not think there is anything in Toronto that should not be regarded as the birthright of any pupil anywhere in the province of Ontario.

In view of the tremendous importance of education, which I think all hon. members of this House acknowledge, I would suggest that the overall objective of any grants programme should be to bring the standards of all school boards not up to the average, but up to the level of the highest 10 or 15 per cent, and to permit those already at that level to pioneer new developments if they see fit.

The hon. Minister is, of course, concerned about costs, and that is a legitimate concern. He said that school grants for the coming fiscal year will increase by $52 million over the current year. But a large part of that increase, we should note, does not result from the operation of the equalization factor but merely reflects continued growth in our educational system and would have had to be undertaken whether or not this new grants policy had been announced by the hon. Minister.

In the three most recent fiscal years the increases in education grants over the preceding years were $32 million in 1963-64, $27 million in 1962-63 and $30 million in 1961-62. So that shows, Mr. Speaker, that around $27 million to $32 million has been needed for normal annual increases in the last three years. From that it would appear that only about $20 million or $25 million of the projected increase for the coming fiscal year is for the new equalization factor.

That will mean that about two per cent of the total provincial budget which will probably be presented here in the near future, will be for this equalization factor. And I have no doubt that a substantial part of that $20 million or $25 million increase will be used for providing much needed relief for separate school boards. In fact, I would think that all of it could very appropriately be used for that purpose.

However, it remains to be seen how much will be left to move other below-average boards in the direction of the average and also—and this is a point about which I am concerned as I mentioned a minute ago—how much will be transferred from above-average boards to the others under this new policy and under the ominous statement of the hon. Minister that he is trying to prevent decreases from being too big in any one year.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, it appears that once again we have an example of the government using a first-class title or description to describe an indifferent programme. This is good public relations, but we will have to wait and see how good it will be for education; so the hon. Minister of Agriculture can draw his own conclusions as to what I think of the announcement made yesterday.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some reference to the current controversy between the independent taxicab owners in Toronto and the Metropolitan Toronto licensing commission. This commission, which is accountable to nobody, arbitrarily decreed that the ratio of taxicabs to population will be reduced from one per 1,000 to one per 900, increasing the number of cabs on the street by about 400, I understand; that the annual fee for the renewal of taxi licences will be doubled from $50 to $100 and that the age of a cab will be limited to four years, regardless of its condition.

The independent owners believe that these policies will bring disaster upon them, and time after time they have appealed to the commission to reconsider them. To date nothing that either they or anyone else has said or done has had any effect on the commission except to provoke some snide remarks by commission members about the exercise by the owners of their democratic right to call public attention to their grievances through peaceful demonstrations.

We hear a great deal of talk these days about the desirability of encouraging small business. Well, Mr. Speaker, the independent cab owners are small businessmen. They have investments of $5,000 or $6,000 in their businesses, not very large but large to them. These investments, plus long hours of work, produce little more than a living wage for most of them and their families, indeed for all of them, I would say. The commission's new policies will reduce their revenues and increase their operating costs. I do not think it takes any genius to figure out what is going to happen as a result of that, Mr. Speaker, since almost all of these men are operating right at the line already. What is going to happen is that the overwhelming majority of them are going to be driven out of business and the whole industry is going to be handed on a platter to the large fleet owners by action of the Metro licensing commission. I think that is a disgraceful policy, Mr. Speaker. I think we have reached a real emergency and I think something should be done to bring this irresponsible body into line some way or other and into a position where it can be held accountable for its actions.

In normal circumstances this is a matter that should more properly be brought to the attention of the municipal rather than the provincial authorities. But the circumstances here could hardly be regarded as normal, since the essential problem stems from legislation that was passed by this Legislature and can be changed only by it. By part 12 of The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, the Metropolitan licensing commission has absolute power over licensing in this area. Its powers are partly legislative, partly administrative and partly judicial. The original legislation decreed that the commission would consist of the chairman of the Metropolitan council or his delegate, plus two magistrates. Last year, as some of us will recall, an amendment to the Act authorized the Metropolitan council to appoint the two additional members, subject to the limitation that they may not be members of any of the area municipal councils. The Metropolitan council, unwisely, in my opinion, continued the old policy of appointing two magistrates.

Now, let us consider for a moment what this can mean for a licence holder, Mr. Speaker. The commission, in pursuit of its legislative function, may enact by-laws prescribing the condition under which licences will be granted and retained, and the fees to be charged for them, and the number of licences to be issued in any of a wide range of businesses and trades over which the commission has authority. It does that in exercise of its legislative function. Then let us say a licence holder is charged with a violation of the commission's by-laws. He will be hauled up in court and he may very well appear before one of the magistrates who participated in the enactment of the by-law. Then, if he is convicted he can be haled before the Metro licensing commission to show cause why his licence should not be revoked, and he will there have to justify himself before the magistrate who has already convicted him.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner), in answer to a question I asked earlier in the session, explained that the Metropolitan Toronto licensing commission has no powers that are not exercised by police commissions in other municipalities. This is hardly a justification for the present situation in Metropolitan Toronto. It may be that the system works well enough in smaller municipalities, I do not know, but I do know that it is clearly not satisfactory in this huge Metropolitan area with all its complicated licensing problems. I do not think it is usually desirable for the same body to exercise legislative, administrative and judicial powers, but that is not the point with which I am primarily concerned at the moment. My main concern is with the arbitrary legislative powers assigned to the Metropolitan Toronto licensing commission.

I think it is a fundamental rule of democratic government that law-making should be the responsibility of the elected representatives of the people. It is often necessary for the elected law-makers to delegate some of their powers to appointed bodies, but where this is so I think it is most important for the regulations or by-laws made by the appointed bodies to be subject to approval by elected representatives—in the case of provincial regulations by the Cabinet, and in the case of municipal regulations by the appropriate municipal council. Otherwise, the elected representatives cannot be held accountable for the laws that are made by appointed bodies, and when that happens democratic control goes out the window, and we have the situation which now exists in Toronto of a body making laws of considerable importance, in fact of importance almost approaching the importance of life or death for certain people, that is accountable to nobody at all. It does not have to justify its conduct in the exercise of its law-making authority to anybody at all.

The by-laws of the Metro Toronto licensing commission, sir, are not subject to review by any elected body. None of the members of the commission is directly elected by the people. The Metro chairman is indirectly elected under this ridiculous set-up we now have in the Metro area, and the other two members of the commission are appointed. The Metro council can exercise no control over the commission's legislative actions except by the extraordinary and indirect method of revoking their appointments.

The hon. Minister stated in his answer to my questions that the present powers of the Metro Toronto licensing commission should be reconsidered only after the Goldenberg commission had presented its recommendations. As I suggested to him in a supplementary question following that statement of his, I hope that the Goldenberg commission will not now become a sort of a carpet under which all the unfinished business, no matter how urgent, can be swept for a couple of years. I trust that we will proceed with necessary reforms when the necessity is demonstrated. I think that, in answer to my supplementary question, the hon. Minister conceded that possibility. I am now going to suggest to him—even though he too is not in his seat at the present time—that we have reached a situation in the licensing field in Toronto where action is urgently required, and we cannot wait for the Goldenberg commission to report.

I am going to suggest to him that two things should be done as soon as possible. First, the hon. Minister should present to this session of the Legislature legislation to make the by-laws of the Metro Toronto licensing commission subject to approval by the Metro council so that, in future, elected representatives of the people will be in a position to take responsibility for what that commission does in the legislative field and to be held accountable for what the commission does, and that the commission in turn can be held accountable to them.

That is my first suggestion. My second suggestion is that the hon. Minister or the government, whoever may be appropriate, should appoint a commission to inquire into the taxi industry in Metro Toronto, and in the meantime suspend the operation of the licensing commission's new by-laws for that industry. Now, I realize that the government is always concerned not to encroach upon local autonomy. I think that is an important principle, but sometimes the government just uses it as an excuse for inaction. In any case, my suggestion that a commission of inquiry should be appointed to look into the taxi industry and that the new regulations or new by-laws of the licensing commission should be suspended, is not in any sense an interference with local autonomy because the elected local authorities have not got any control over this commission anyway. They have no say in the by-laws that it enacts and no one knows whether they favour those by-laws or not, repressive as they are for the independent operators in the taxi industry. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that nothing less than what I have suggested will prevent an already serious situation in this industry from becoming even worse.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your courtesy and the courtesy of the hon. members of the House in the attention that they have given me most of the time in my rather extended remarks. I hope that some of the suggestions of policy which I have made to the government will be considered, and that those relating to termites and the Metro licensing commission, which appear to me to be quite urgent, will be given early consideration.

Mr. A. V. Walker (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in rising for the first time to take part in this debate I naturally do so with considerably mixed feelings. There is, of course, a feeling of pride at the honour which has been bestowed upon me and also a very deep feeling of humility and responsibility. I am sure that all hon. members of this Legislature feel this weight of responsibility and I have appreciated the encouragement and the advice and assistance which has been afforded to me by various hon. members of this House as I endeavour to prove myself worthy of the trust of the people whom I represent.

I would, Mr. Speaker, add my sincere congratulations to you on your appointment as Speaker of this legislative assembly. I am aware of the great traditions represented in your person and in your office as well as in the time-honoured customs of this House. I would also extend sincere congratulations to the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler) and the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard) for their very fine speeches in moving and seconding the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Also a word of congratulation to the newly appointed members of the Cabinet and I would wish for them every success in their new portfolios.

I would, Mr. Speaker, like to say a few words of appreciation to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) for the outstanding leadership he has given to this province since taking over the reins of government. Last September 25 the people of this province displayed their feeling for his outstanding leadership and many of us were assisted to victory by his image in the background. I am sure he is also to be congratulated on his statesmanlike performance at the Dominion-provincial conference last fall. His attitude at the conference must have made it abundantly clear to Canadians everywhere that we here in Ontario are interested in the welfare of Canada as a whole. There were many expressions of appreciation of his actions voiced to me by citizens in my riding. There are, of course, many problems to be ironed out before we can arrive at a solution which will be in the best interests of all Canadians.

One item which is of considerable urgency for a solution in my area is the matter of the somewhat muddled, at the moment, pension situation. I have been approached by a number of people on this matter. 1964 is contract year for some of the larger industries in Oshawa riding and it is expected that the pension question will be one of the more important issues to be debated. A definite decision on the government position on pensions would be helpful on both sides of the bargaining table.

Mr. Speaker, I deem it an honour and a privilege to represent Oshawa riding. This riding is in the main a highly industrialized area and is included in what is referred to as the "golden horseshoe" stretching from the city of Oshawa on the east to Hamilton on the west.

In the city of Oshawa, General Motors is our principal employer and as a result, Oshawa is known as the motor city of Canada. It may be of interest to the hon. members that General Motors' employment in Oshawa at the end of 1963 totalled 16,700—an all-time record. This company is No. 1 among manufacturing industries in Ontario if concentration of employees in one location is accepted as a criterion. General Motors' total payroll in Oshawa for 1963 totalled more than $90 million. I would point out that this payroll is circulated over a wide area with workers travelling to Oshawa each day from anywhere within a distance of 60 miles. During 1963 this company manufactured 299,407 cars and trucks—again the highest in history.

Possibly of greater importance to our economy is the fact that, although final figures are not available, it is estimated by company officials that more than $600 million was spent in Canada by this company in 1963, with about 95 per cent of this money being spent in Ontario.

In a year-end forecast, Mr. E. H. Walker, president of General Motors, stated: "The flow of parts and supplies from Canadian companies to the industry increased during 1963 on several grounds and certainly will rise again in 1964." I am sure that all hon. members of this Legislature will be glad to learn of the increase in the manufacture of automobile parts and accessories which Canadian companies are experiencing.

The city of Oshawa also boasts of many other industries old and new which contribute to the economic prosperity of that great city of some 67,000 Canadians.

The port of Whitby boasts several new industries, some of which are allied with the automobile industry, such as the Dunlop Tire Company. Ajax, with many new industries, is a booming community which has become a major asset to our riding.

The southern part of Pickering township is experiencing a tremendous home-building boom and virtually new communities have sprung up in the past few years.

Unemployment has not been a major problem, except that Canadians realizing the prosperity of this great riding are arriving every day in the hope of participating in this prosperity.

My occupation is that of an industrial worker at General Motors and I am a member of Local 222, United Automobile Workers, whose membership is in the thousands.

Mr. Speaker, Oshawa riding has enjoyed a tremendous growth during the past few years, but with the growth come the inevitable problems of increasing financial need at the municipal level. This problem of provincial aid to municipalities is one with which I have been familiar as a member of the Oshawa city council for the past eight years. It is obvious there are limits as to how far the government can go in regard to municipal aid, but it is a problem, not only to the government, but also to the average homeowner who is called upon to pay the ever-increasing costs.

I am sure we are all well aware of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the prosperity of this province depends in a large measure on the success of its municipalities. The situation which faces the government of Ontario today is that while this is a province of tremendous wealth, we are constantly confronted with the problem of financial need. We are rich, yet we find ourselves as a government faced with the necessity of spending more and more to satisfy the needs of our people, and the scale on which we are spending today would have been considered an impossibility a few years ago.

In education alone, we are spending more than the entire provincial budget of some 30 years ago. The policy of providing free textbooks for Grades 9 and 10 beginning in September of this year will be a welcome financial relief to many hard-pressed family heads. The introduction of the Ontario Tax Foundation Plan will provide some measure of financial relief and more equality for all school boards, both public and separate. There will be an increasing emphasis during the next few years on university education as the tremendous numbers of post-war children reach the university level. Every encouragement must be afforded our young people to continue their education and so take their rightful place in our society. The university development programme, as outlined in the Throne Speech, is a clear indication of the forward thinking of the government in its efforts to provide equal educational opportunities for all.

Mr. Speaker, we hear a great deal these days that taxes are to be increased. With the increasing growth of our province and the need for increased services, especially in the field of education, it would appear that tax boosts are inevitable. I would, this afternoon, like to make a very earnest plea to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), and indeed to the entire Cabinet, that when tax increases are being considered, that every consideration be given to the financial plight of the many thousands of persons in our province who are on fixed incomes, old age pensions, disability pensions and blind pensions. These citizens are hard pressed to combat the ever-increasing cost of living—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Walker: —and if there is any way in which their tax burden can be eased, I would urge that every effort be made on their behalf.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Speak to Mr. Starr about it.

Mr. Walker: I am indeed gratified that a select committee is to be established to examine the economic, social and medical needs of our elderly citizens. These people have played their part through the years in the development of our great province and it is the responsibility of every one of us to see to it that in their declining years they are provided with a measure of dignity and well-being.

As an industrial worker I am naturally interested in our labour legislation and how it affects the welfare of the labour force in this province. My experience during the past 25 years as a rank-and-file member in the trade union movement has been that 99.9 per cent of union leaders are very solid citizens who are interested solely in the welfare of their fellow union members and the securing of better working conditions for these members. It has also been my experience that unions are operated in a very democratic manner with rank-and-file members having a perfect right to express their opinions on various issues—sometimes, I might add, much to the chagrin of the union leaders and executive. The labour-management picture of today is a far cry from those early days of 1937 when a certain Liberal premier called out the Ontario Provincial Police to drive those terrible union men out of Ontario—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): What about Kapuskasing?

Mr. Walker: Labour legislation in this province—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): What else is new?

Mr. Walker: Labour legislation in this province is moving forward and it must continue to do so. The minimum wage law which was introduced last spring was a step in the right direction. I was happy to note in the Throne Speech that consideration is being given—

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Are you happy with it?

Mr. Walker: —to the expansion of this programme.

Mr. Gisborn: Are you happy with the minimum wage law?

Mr. Walker: I would urge the hon. Minister of Labour to expand this programme at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Whicher: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walker: I sincerely submit that any worker who is employed to do a job is worth at least $1 an hour regardless of in what part of the province he may reside.

I would like to congratulate the government departments that sponsored the conference of last September dealing with the subject of automation and change, and I appreciated very much the publication I received and the articles contained therein. To the worker, the subject of automation represents a threat to his livelihood and to management it represents a more efficient way of production. Automation with its increased production means a steady rate of economic growth which is a very desirable result but we must also be sure that our people are going to benefit from that growth. Automation need not be a menace to society. It could, with proper planning, prove to be one of mankind's greatest boons. But it will be much more than a menace if we fail to deal with the problems arising out of automation in our industrial society. I feel the solution can be found through mature co-operation, and unlike one of the previous speakers, I believe that a great deal of that co-operation will come in the fields of labour and management.

The Ontario foundation on automation and employment, which is now in the process of being formed, will have an important part to play in the future welfare of this province as the inroads of automation become more apparent.

Matters pertaining to the health of our people are always of great interest and concern to everyone. That the governments of Ontario over the past 20 years have also been concerned with these matters is very evident from a look at government spending through The Department of Health. From a budget of some $12 million less than 20 years ago to more than $150 million in this present fiscal year, the involvement of the government in various health activities has continued to increase rapidly.

The government's proposal for medical health insurance has already been discussed at length in this House during the past few days. I would say that I support the basic mechanics, if I may use that term, of the government's plan and I am opposed to the principle of compulsion. I feel the people of this province want the right to choose for themselves. Many thousands of our citizens already have completely paid or partially paid medical health programmes and are not anxious for change. I suggest, however, that every consideration should be given to expanding the scope of the present government plan, dental care for children, drugs for elderly citizens, optometrical services, psychiatric care, these can all be costly and are all part of the health care programme. I would strongly urge that the final Medicare plan for Ontario be made as comprehensive as possible.

An hon. member: He is in the wrong party.

Mr. Walker: I want to touch upon two other health matters which I think are pressing needs today.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): This is where we get our advice.

Mr. Walker: One is nursing homes—

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): The hon. Prime Minister wants to change his committee then—

Mr. Walker: —and the other is ambulance service. Many people, particularly the elderly, have to be discharged from hospital, rightly perhaps, since they no longer need medical care, but many of them are practically helpless and need a great deal of nursing care, possibly not by skilled or highly trained nurses. Some of these patients can be admitted to homes for the aged, but this really is not where they should be. They could be well cared for in good nursing homes, but these homes should be good.

Mr. Troy: They would not let the hon. member have them up our way.

Mr. Walker: They should be approved, licensed and inspected by The Department of Health and they should be required to maintain a high standard of care. Under municipal control as they now are, there is no uniformity of standards and some of them may be of less than minimum quality. If we are to believe the many reports in the press, we must conclude that in some sections of Ontario, ambulance service is in a very deplorable state. There would appear to be no quick or ready solution to this problem. Communities have dealt and are dealing with this matter in different ways, some very successfully, I might add, and others leave much to be desired. But here again there are no uniformly recognized standards of equipment, training, staff or inspection. This I believe should again be a responsibility of The Department of Health so that standards would at least be uniform all over the province. I commend these matters—nursing homes and ambulance services—to the attention of the government as being in need of action. The picture in the province of Ontario is changing very rapidly. One might give this as cause for the population and industrial splurges which are occurring across the whole southern part of this great province: This is where the greater number of our industries are located and people have a tendency to establish their homes as close to their work as is humanly possible.

As our population increases, the greater will be the demands for new homes, for land, industry and for recreation. It is like a snowball gathering momentum as it rolls. We may expect a vast working force in this southern portion of our province as time goes on, and we might predict that, as this time comes about, we will find our work-week becoming shorter. Our labour forces are going to have considerably more leisure time at their disposal and will, in turn, require more recreational facilities. If the foregoing is true, and according to economic statistics presented to us periodically it is, then it presents the problem which in itself will be a challenge that we must be prepared to meet.

On examining the situation closely, it would seem that good planning is the only solution to this problem. I can readily realize, having had some experience in municipal life in Oshawa, that it is perfectly obvious one has to plan and plan well for the future. Today in most communities there are local planning boards which are serving their municipalities well, but we are sadly lacking an overall planning board which we might term an area planning board or, if hon. members prefer, a regional planning board, set up under The Planning Act. One must not overlook the fact that regional planning in the true sense would thus be allowed further scope. In our case, we could connect with the easterly boundary of the Metropolitan Toronto planning board which now comes as far east as the eastern boundary of Pickering township. This would allow a number of municipalities, made up of a city, a town and townships, to set up planning machinery to the extent that a pattern of roads could be developed extending easterly from the Metropolitan Toronto planning board boundary.

The requirements of this service for any given area would present the major reasons for regional planning, and by such services I mean the locations of filtration plants, sewage disposals plants, and so forth. An entire area could be served by this type of board. Experience has shown that there may be a very large community in one township, and in order to furnish it with sanitary sewers one would have to pass through one or more townships or municipalities to procure a proper location for out-fall purposes because of the topography of the land being what it is.

I believe the time is opportune for the government to give a quality of leadership to this idea of regional planning. At the present time the local planner can plan, but the Ontario Municipal Board decides whether or not the municipality has the financial ability to carry its plans through. Planning and financial responsibility really go hand in hand. The Ontario Municipal Board protects the people from unwise and hasty borrowing, and this is a sound policy. By having the government take active initiative in planning, the government can make certain that good overall provincial planning and sound economic policies will be encouraged and developed at the same time.

I suggest the government should proceed progressively with regional planning areas throughout the entire province. The end result for which we should be striving is a total official plan for the province of Ontario, one which designates broad land uses such as wilderness areas, reforestation areas, conservation areas, areas reserved for agriculture, provincial parks and a provincial major road system. The official plan should be predicated on the anticipated needs for residents of this province within the next 20- to 30-year period.

We hear and have read a lot the last few months about improvements that might be made to govern our municipalities more economically and more efficiently. If we review the situation in some of the smaller townships, we find that in some cases one councillor represents 120 ratepayers. This seems to be a very small number to have such representation. Let us take a good hard look at the situation. If a regional planning board were adopted, is it not reasonable that some form of regional government should follow immediately? One has only to look at the duplication of administration and maintenance equipment, to realize that more efficiency could be given to the ratepayers under a system whereby this equipment, which costs millions of dollars, could be used to better advantage if it were under one type of administration. I suggest we are rapidly reaching the stage where, in our own best interests, bigger municipal units of government must be adopted.

When the metropolitan form of government was set up some years ago in this area under former Premier Leslie Frost, there was some doubt in the minds of a good many as to the feasibility of the plan, but it has been proved that it is a decided improvement over the time when these 13 municipalities operated individually. The report of the Goldenberg commission, which was set up by our hon. Prime Minister some months ago, will be looked upon with keen interest by all concerned when the report is made available to the public. One thing is certain. There is room for improvement, which could mean a saving of many dollars and which would give a more efficient type of government in our municipal set-up.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I would say that Ontario during the past 20 years has enjoyed the greatest economic and industrial expansion in the history of this great province, and we will not lose sight of the fact that the challenges of today are totally different from the challenges of yesterday. We, in this government, in fact realize that we are living in a changing world and we will, with confidence, set our sails to the winds of change.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with the order paper and with this debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to make some comment on a subject that is of considerable importance to the farm people of Ontario.

All of us are fully aware of the contribution that has been made to the economy of the province by the farm people of Ontario. It has been a contribution not completely in the financial sense but one that has also materially increased the stature of the agricultural industry. I refer to the leadership that has been developed through various farm organizations of the province. It is with this leadership in mind and the benefits that have resulted from it that I would draw the attention of the hon. members of the House to the important role that is being played by the farm forums of the province.

Hon. members of the House, I am sure, will have considerable interest in the fact that the eighth annual leadership forum will be held at Orillia on February 9 to 15, under the sponsorship of the Ontario Rural Leadership Forum Committee. Topics of major interest to rural people, with special emphasis being placed on rural leadership, will have a prominent place on the agenda of the conference. The complexity of social and economic conditions affecting our rural people today has made the need for sound local leadership more evident than in the past. Leadership forums in the past have done a great deal toward creating an awareness of the various factors affecting rural life and I am confident that this gathering of dedicated farm people will do much to help farmers improve their social and economic life.

Farm organizations, as is the case in industry, are in constant need of leaders coming up through the ranks. It was with this particular thought in mind that the rural leadership forum was established in Ontario a few years ago. The forum began with a committee of interested people from six farm organizations and two government departments. These people began by establishing one-day and two-day leadership forums for farm people. This grew to the present full week of training, which includes lecture and discussion groups. Divided into five categories, the conference will discuss community and human resources as well as the physical and natural resources so necessary to our rural development.

It may interest the hon. members of this House to know that the delegates to the forum will be selected by a county selection committee, made up of representatives of the women's institutes, the junior farmer associations, the co-operatives in the province, the farm forums, the folk schools, the extension branch of The Department of Agriculture, and the community programmes branch of The Ontario Department of Education.

I am sure that all hon. members of the House will be interested in this worthwhile undertaking, for the development of competent leaders in any section of our provincial activity cannot help but be reflected in all walks of our society.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis). I have sent a copy of this question to him:

Does the department intend to have French-speaking instructors at the new trade school soon to be opened in Ottawa?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for notice of this question.

The teaching positions at the Ottawa vocational centre will be advertised this spring and will be open to competition. Successful applicants will be chosen on the basis of training, qualifications and experience, and bilingual applicants will be considered, of course, on the same basis as the others.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Simonett).

Does the hon. Minister intend to act on reports concerning neighbourhood distress caused by ash residue from an Ontario Hydro generating plant in Scarborough?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Scarborough West for giving notice of this question.

I wish to acknowledge the interest taken in the subject of this question by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. L. M. Hodgson) in whose riding the property affected is located. The hon. member for Scarborough East interviewed the property owners chiefly concerned and also interviewed representatives of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

Ontario Hydro has been disposing of fly-ash from its thermal electric stations in Toronto for more than ten years. Removal of the fly-ash is undertaken by private firms under contract to Hydro. Dumping sites are inspected on a regular basis by Hydro personnel and clauses in the haulage contract to protect the public from any nuisance are strictly enforced. This fly-ash is useful in filling large excavated areas such as gravel pits, which then can be turned to more productive uses.

The protest of residents in the Conlins Road area of Scarborough, Sunday, January 26, is the first serious complaint to be received by the commission in connection with its disposal practices. The contractor hauling fly-ash to the gravel pit adjacent to Conlins Road did not properly cover it as specified in his contract with Hydro. Unfortunately, a heavy snowfall covered the fly-ash placed in the gravel pit before Hydro determined whether it had been properly covered by the contractor. There it remained until the snow cover melted during the recent mild weather, exposing the fly-ash to the wind. As soon as the complaint was received, Hydro took immediate steps to remedy the situation and the fly-ash was properly covered the following morning.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a personal explanation. In the light of some discussion which has taken place recently, I feel constrained to affirm to this House some principles that must be of as much concern to it as they have been to me.

In my years as a servant of the people of this province and as the member for the historic riding of Grenville-Dundas, I have never misled those whom I have the honour to represent or the hon. members of this House. It has been my privilege over the years, to have served this government as a Minister of the Crown in three portfolios, each of which has demanded the utmost of the modest abilities with which I have been endowed. The ramifications of the operations of these departments have been such that it has required constant effort to ensure the accuracy of information, which the people of this province and the hon. members of this House are entitled to demand of their servants. In putting forth my efforts to ensure that accuracy may I be forgiven if I state that, to my knowledge, I have never failed in this endeavour.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Attorney General consider sending this bill to the committee on legal bills?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): All these bills, Mr. Speaker, will go to the combined committee on legal bills and municipal law.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE RECIPROCAL ENFORCEMENT OF MAINTENANCE ORDERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 14, An Act to amend The Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MAGISTRATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 15, An Act to amend The Magistrates Act.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion I would like again to draw to the attention of the hon. members of the House one of the principles behind this new legislation. As I called to the attention of the hon. members when this bill was introduced, it makes provision for a chief magistrate for Ontario. We have had in Ontario over the years, from time to time, in various courts, a great deal of work which has not been dealt with as expeditiously as perhaps the public and the litigants and those accused of criminal activities might deserve and expect. For many years now in the Supreme Court of Ontario, the chief justice of the high court has been the administrative officer who has made the necessary administrative arrangements to ensure that cases in that court before the trial court division were expedited and heard at the earliest possible moment by a justice of the trial court division.

Some three years ago, there was legislation before this House to appoint a chief judge of the county and district court. The reason for this, of course, was to endeavour to have the same amount of efficiency and good operation of our courts introduced at the county court and district court level, as we had experienced in the bench of the Supreme Court, the High Court of Justice. As we all know, the legislation passed and an appointment was duly made of His Honour Judge Wilmott. In the almost two years that he has occupied this position he has proved himself to be a sound member of the judiciary in his handling of cases which he himself hears regularly on the bench, and also in performing those administrative functions which are necessary if matters in the county court are to run smoothly.

One of the great areas of delay and of, shall I say, overwork, has been in the magistrates court. After considering the success which there has been in the high court and in the county and district courts, it is the feeling of my advisors as well as myself, Mr. Speaker, and adopted by the government, that there should be created the office of chief magistrate for the province of Ontario so that this chief magistrate could be a sitting magistrate and exercise judicial functions and also perform those administrative duties which are necessary if our magistrates courts are to function as they should.

This bill, sir, is to authorize the creation of the post of chief magistrate. I would say, Mr. Speaker, if we have the same success in the operation of this particular office and the same felicity in the choice of a chief magistrate as we have had, and other governments have had, in the choice of the other chief judges, that within the not too distant future there can be expected to be an appreciable improvement in the administration of our magistrates courts and in the cutting down of many of the delays and difficulties which presently plague us on that level of the judiciary.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE JURORS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 16, An Act to amend The Jurors Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DOWER ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 17, An Act to amend The Dower Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MENTAL INCOMPETENCY ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 25, An Act to amend The Mental Incompetency Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: First order: resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, if my voice today sounds as if I was talking down a rain barrel, I have a bit of a cold.

I align myself, Mr. Speaker, with those who have preceded me in this debate in paying my respects to you. I offer my congratulations to you on your appointment to this historic office which you grace in this assembly. Having followed your career in this House since I was a member, I have noted your flexibility of mind and your independence of spirit and I am sure you will fill this office ably and well.

I subscribe also to the commendations already expressed in this House to the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter). He was most gracious in his reference to my former leader and we, sir, in our party thank him for his courtesy to that Christian gentleman. I know that the hon. member for Waterloo South, with the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. A. Johnston), and myself were members of a unit with a very fine motto. The motto of our unit is of Indian origin, NeKah NeTah, which freely translated is not only do we command but we also obey.

To the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard), who already is a fresh breeze in this House, I couple my congratulations. I see for certain she has brought colour to our assembly. She has a charming taste in hats and I notice in her attire she favours "Le Rouge". She probably would sit well in these red seats. Unfortunately, she does not.

However, I thought that in the debate on the resolution by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis), that with her experience and her concern for the social welfare of our people she might have used her woman's prerogative and voted yes, with the resolution.

I must also refer, I did not know it until I came back to the House this January, that the former member for Middlesex South—the late Harry Allen—had died. I always found him a very perfect gentleman and I am sure I speak the mind of all here when I express sympathy.

Now I want to touch just briefly on the election campaign as it had some effect on my riding. We had a rash of members of the Cabinet up there, I think in all during the campaign it was 13, including—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): There goes a thousand votes for the hon. member.

Mr. Troy: Yes, including the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) himself. One little quotation—

An hon. member: Probably helped the hon. member out.

Mr. Troy: —quotation from the North Bay Nugget. It says:

Earlier Premier Robarts had officially opened the committee rooms of the PC candidate. As he cut the ribbons to open the premises, Mr. Robarts said, "From these headquarters victory will be won on September 25."

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I did my best.

Mr. Troy: The hon. Prime Minister's best was not good enough and cannot fool those people up in Nipissing. Then we had another Minister, my hon. friend—I thought he was a friend of mine—he is the hon. member for Cochrane South and the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner). He was speaking during the campaign in that lovely old town of Mattawa which nestles in the Laurentian hills. He said you can rest assured the government has not forgotten the district of Nipissing, but we are getting tired of having the representative of Nipissing who does nothing but complain in the Legislature. He referred to the four lost years of Liberal rule in Nipissing. Now the only thing you can conclude from that then—here is a Minister of the Crown telling the voters in an election campaign that the only way they are going to get anything is that they must vote on the government side. I will have some more to say about Mattawa in a moment.

Then we had the former Minister, that vibrant young hon. gentleman from Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay), he was then the Minister of Economics and Development, he came to our area, Mr. Speaker, and he also spoke. It was, I think, on the last day for radio and TV. He told us then that in two weeks at least two industries, and probably three, would be coming to our area and maybe to the city of North Bay, but to me it did not make any difference where they came to as long as they came to Nipissing. He is no longer the Minister of Economics and Development, I hope that the new hon. Minister (Mr. Randall), if he has not read that speech—I do not suppose he has time to read the northern papers—but I will send it to him, and let him know just what the Minister said, and also what the hon. Prime Minister said when he was in North Bay as a guest at a dinner there. Perhaps he remembers the night he was up to open officially Cassell Holme—the home for the aged in North Bay.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This is the kind of thing we do in that riding.

Mr. Troy: Yes, that is right.

But in any event at that time—no, it was not that time, it was on the northern tour—does the hon. Prime Minister recall speaking to a meeting there, when we were guests of the city of North Bay, and he said then he could not say definitely, he would give no names, but there was an industry coming and it was going to employ almost 500 people? I do not know if he referred to the federal industry of the RCAF, but I have not seen that industry either.

He also said—at least the paper gives him a very fine headline—it says that industry will follow people to the north. I must confess that that is one of our great weaknesses in northern Ontario, we need people. I do not know how we are going to get them, because immigration has been reduced, but we certainly need them, that is one of our great weaknesses in northern Ontario.

Also practically every hon. Minister, and certainly the hon. Prime Minister, I understand he was down to Mattawa, and he stood on the banks of the mighty Ottawa and looked across the river to the Laurentian hills and told us what a wonderful place it was and said: "Every consideration will be given to the town of Mattawa, every consideration for the building of this nuclear energy plant."

Sir, so also said the then Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay). The same time as he was making that announcement, in the city of Toronto I believe officials of his department knew that very likely it was most probable that the plant would be built either on Lake Ontario or Lake Huron. While all through the campaign in Mattawa it was: "If you want the nuclear plant vote Tory; if you do not want it, change the R around and vote Troy."

But there was a tragic aftermath for the people of Mattawa and I think it is a very callous situation. Later on we came down to Toronto, I came down with a delegation from that town including the present mayor and the industrial commission. We could not see the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Simonett) because at that time he was away, he had to attend a funeral. We saw his Deputy Minister. We could not see the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, he was away somewhere else, Mr. Speaker. We saw another person in his department. Then eventually we saw the chairman of Ontario Hydro, and he said: "Gentlemen, it is very improbable but not impossible, of course. It is within the realm of possibility, but very improbable that they will ever build a nuclear plant at Mattawa."

Later on it was announced that the plant—I do not know—at least in a dispatch from Mattawa that I noticed it is to be built at Fairport. At that time, too, the chairman told us if the atomic energy control board gives the okay, it will be built either somewhere in the vicinity of Frenchman's Bay or out near Clarkson.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): It is coming up before that.

Mr. Troy: Well, after all, being from northern Ontario I am not jealous of Port Arthur. If the hon. Minister gets it there, well and good, so much the better. But if it is improbable in Mattawa, it is impossible, I think, in Port Arthur.

But seriously, the chairman told us then that it is improbable. They wanted to get it near water as they needed millions and millions of gallons of water daily, and once the plant is in operation it continues. It is not like one of these other thermal plants using coal. A plant like this one will go on and on. So the tragic aftermath was that the chairman of the industrial commission said: "We returned from Toronto sadder but wiser," and "Do not trust necessarily the politicians and Cabinet Ministers during an election campaign." I say—

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): How was the hon. member's election?

Mr. Troy: My election unfortunately cost me more money than I intended to spend because hon. members opposite were spending it up there as though it were going out of style.

An hon. member: They were doing that everywhere.

Mr. Troy: Were they doing it everywhere? Well, I suppose in some way they were helping employment and keeping the printing presses going.

On Monday we had the announcement from the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) regarding grants. I certainly, even reading it again, cannot understand it. I will have to wait until I get back home to find out what the administrators of our schools think about it.

But if the separate schools in the riding of Nipissing are going to get some help through corporation taxes, certainly that would be wonderful. Take the town of Sturgeon Falls, for example, with the big Abitibi Company; 75 per cent of the assessment and 75 per cent of the population are supporters of the separate schools. The hon. Minister tells me it will help out schools and certainly I hope it will also help out not only the separate schools, but the public schools in areas all over this province as well. However, the proof of the pudding, they say, is in the eating, so we will have to wait for it.

A couple of other things just briefly. I will have more to say on education during the debate on the estimates of that department.

In the Toronto Daily Star of August 22, 1963, in a dispatch from Hamilton, it says: "Because Ontario's archaic laws prohibit them from teaching after retirement, this province is losing highly qualified teachers to other provinces."

I know quite a number of them have gone out to British Columbia, I know a former principal of a school in northern Ontario who went over to Quebec after his retirement and was still teaching. The author of this quotation is Mr. George Pugh, Oakville High School principal, and he said: "They may teach full time and still draw their pensions from Ontario". Another principal, Lieut.-Col. C. G. King—I do not just know what school he is from—said the teacher shortage was in no way being solved. A total of 866 students entered the Ontario College of Education last year to train as high school teachers. Ontario's annual requirements are three times that amount.

In the Speech from the Throne we find this government is filled with pride with its accomplishments. Surely the hon. Minister of Education or the former Minister (Mr. Robarts) is proud of that record.

We also find—it quotes the chairman of the Ontario Federation of Teachers—the heading is: "Ontario lagging in elementary teacher training". Again, there is a young man from my home city now teaching in Sturgeon Falls. He is a graduate of the University of New Brunswick and he is teaching modern language there, including French, but is just on a letter of permission. His degree from the University of St. Joseph's—I said the University of New Brunswick, I think it is the University of St. Joseph's in Moncton. I think it used to be at Memramcook but I think it is at Moncton—his degree is not recognized. So I certainly think that when the Premiers get together that they have some liaison and some co-ordination.

Again you read that school boards are going across to the British Isles to bring teachers. Surely a young gentleman from a Canadian university should be also permitted to go to summer school and continue on in his teaching career.

I want to touch also on a very interesting subject. During the meeting here, before the Cabinet, the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) was there, the hon. Prime Minister could not be there, all the Cabinet were there, or the bulk of them, when the northeastern chambers of commerce came down here on May 14 last year and they presented their brief and afterwards each hon. Minister answered the recommendations, including the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton). The Ontario Chambers of Commerce had stressed that they needed north-south roads between Highways 17 and 11. Also Mr. J. R. Meakes, the publisher of the Sudbury Star; he criticized the department for not going ahead with the Sudbury-Timmins road.

So later on the hon. Minister got up and he answered. During the brief there was some mention of the little village of Moosonee. So the hon. Minister says: Well I will let you know about Moosonee. At a certain time in June, I just forget the date, I am going up to Moosonee and I am going to set up a statute labour board there. Now just imagine. A Minister of the Crown going all the way up to Moosonee to set up a statute labour board for a little village that has about a mile and a half of roads. So the hon. Minister went up—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: How about sanitation?

Mr. Troy: He went up—well I am just going to touch on that, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister went up there. He was accompanied, I understand, by the deputy Minister of Highways, the municipal engineer—because he has to do with development roads—and the executive assistant. I believe, too, that there were a number of the members of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission there. I understand also there were private cars, I do not know how many, but they went on the way to Moosonee and had the meeting. Two were there, not three?

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Five.

Mr. Troy: Five, were they? I did not think they had that many. I will have to check when I go back to the Bay. They must be hidden somewhere. But in any event, the hon. Minister had a meeting with the committee of the little village. They told him, "We do not want a statute labour board, what services does it give? We need water, we need sewage facilities." The hon. Minister had a cheque for $15,000. He brought the cheque back with him. It reminds me of the story of Jack and Jill going up the hill.

An hon. member: They would not take it.

Mr. Troy: They would not take it. "We want service. We do not want a statute labour board," they said. I do not know what the trip cost, it must have cost plenty, but at least they still brought the $15,000 back.

An hon. member: Were they trying to bribe the voting?

Mr. Troy: Oh, I would not think so. I could not imagine they would do such a thing as that.

An hon. member: Not so openly.

Another hon. member: I can imagine it.

Mr. Troy: Almost simultaneously with the publication of the gracious Speech from the Throne, which said on page 68, "It is with a sense of pride in our accomplishments that we turn to a review of the performance of the economy in 1963," in the columns of our newspapers were stories that certainly should not fill us with pride at all.

In one, the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario warned of the increase of crime in Ontario, particularly among young people, and vicious violent crime. In another, social service worker deplored the increasing number of pregnancies among teenage girls, yes and even among children of elementary schools. We point with pride, as the Speech points out to our burgeoning economy, the increase of our gross national product, but all the while there is a cancerous growth spreading through our society. It has been called a sick society. If we think of the plays—I saw one the other night on Playdate, it was called, I think, The Lover, and then I had seen so-called plays on Quest—and if those plays mirror our society, then all I can say is, heaven help us.

Is it any wonder then that there is a deterioration of family life? In this House, while I have been here, hon. members on the other side have smiled rather cynically while we on this side of the House spoke on the subject of pornographic literature, of salacious films that evil people supply to our children. It has been said that the climate produced by salacious material is a seed-bed of delinquency and depravity among our youth. It is the cause of disruption in the home, the family and the entire society. I am not the author of that statement, but Representative Granaham in the United States who is on a special committee. You also can find out other quotations from Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI.

You say it cannot happen here, but it is happening here. I just noticed something in last night's paper, the Toronto Daily Star of Tuesday, January 28. The heading is:

CENSOR SAYS PERIODICALS ON METRO STANDS OBSCENE

David Coon, the chairman of the Attorney General's committee on obscene literature, speaking to the Don Mills lodge of B'nai B'rith, said that Fanny Hill is like a school book compared to the mass of masochistic and sadistic books and magazines pouring on to the Toronto book-stands.

I guess also some of them are in North Bay. And lastly, the police seized 2,000 copies of Fanny Hill and at the same time he said there are all kinds of others on our stands which are far worse than that supposedly titillating volume.

We glory in our boom towns, our high-rise apartments, our expanding subdivisions, our provincial parks, our recreation areas, but we turn deaf ears to the cries of the poor. We speak in platitudes on unemployment but we forget that in those long columns of unemployed are—

An hon. member —will look after it.

Mr. Troy: Well, I hope he will—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: The former Prime Minister never did.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: —are the fathers of families whose needs are desperate. We give grants —and I suppose it is necessary—to improve the breed of our livestock and our thoroughbred horses, so that the fellow at the race-track will get a better run for his money, I suppose. We spend much on the protection of wildlife but we make halting steps towards the protection of human life.

May I read you a column here from the Toronto Globe and Mail, from Scott Young? The heading is "Carnage and Queen's Park." I think it would be all right to read Mr. Young's column. I know he is persona non grata at the Maple Leaf Gardens, but he is still employed by the Globe and Mail. He begins it:

In the Windsor Star of a week ago Monday—

this was written on May 21, 1963:

—under the byline Cec Scaglione, a story begins:

"Seven persons died needlessly during the weekend.

"They died because officials in Queen's Park sat on their hands whenever the question arose dealing with the completion of 401."

I understand that this has been done but this article was written in May.

"The families that were shattered and the lives that were torn from existence by Highway No. 2, about 30 miles east of Chatham, were the results of inefficiency and oversight by the administrators of this province."

And Mr. Young goes on to say:

Ever since the election of 1943 the Conservatives have been so strong in Ontario that no little thing like 112 corpses strewn along the out-of-date highway can even make them sit down and reflect that maybe with a little bit of pluck most of these deaths could have been prevented.

The government's programme indicates that a select committee will be set up to study the problems of youth in today's society. In my view, Mr. Speaker, I think the scope of that committee should be broadened to include a whole study of family life in our society. All you have to do is take a cursory glance at the papers on Monday night. I read where three youngsters had died because they were battered to death. Then the coroner, Dr. Cotnam, speaking later on TV, said there was a syndrome in our society and that these things were increasing. Then all the newspapers, as I say, carry statements like this so that there is a deterioration of family life.

During the land rush in the closing years of the nineteenth century, immigrants were brought to this country from the British Isles to be placed on land in Muskoka, Parry Sound and Nipissing districts. They came with high hopes, but eventually the hard, rocky soil in certain areas where they were settled broke them spiritually and physically. Today, as you tour the countryside, you see abandoned farms, idle fields, harsh rocky ridges running through idle pasture lands; and here and there a tumbled-down shack which is mute evidence of a shattered dream of a pioneer.

Today this unused land is a liability to any township. This land yields nothing in taxes—or very little—to municipal councils, already burdened to provide essential services for their people. Similar conditions prevail in other parts of northern Ontario and no doubt in sections of southern Ontario, too. I notice in reading a column by J. Bascom St. John that Major General Kennedy some years ago had studied this subject and there were hundreds of thousands of acres of land that should not be used as agricultural land in Southern Ontario, too.

I remember also quite well, when I was a stringer for certain papers in northern Ontario and in metropolitan areas, an address by the dean of forestry of the college of forestry, sir, who spoke to a conference of Department of Lands and Forests officials in the city of North Bay. At that time he painted a picture to us of the forest management in Scandinavian countries and in France. I can remember in World War I on the way from Valenciennes to Mons—I was a scout on that particular march—we passed through the great forests of Raimes in northern France. It was laid out just like a regular park, with the lodge house in the centre with roads radiating in every direction through the park. Then when you think that they have been cutting trees in France and in Germany for hundreds and hundreds of years, nevertheless, I understand the yield per acre is fantastic compared to what our yield is here.

I remember then that he pointed out that there were all kinds of land that was settled in northern Ontario particularly, that should not be used for that purpose at all and he urged then that these idle lands should be made productive. They were entirely unsuitable for agriculture, but they could be planted with trees, then the land could be made productive, and not only would the township benefit, so would our provincial economy.

Surely here is a job for this new Department of Resources Management, which I see is to be set up. I notice it says natural resources, it does not take that non-renewable resource of mining so I expect that the mines department still remains. I say again that this is a job for the new department, in co-operation with ARDA and agricultural representatives. Then liabilities would be turned into assets.

The present hon. Prime Minister seems to have disowned his Tory predecessors who have been in power off and on, it is sad to relate, for more years than I care to remember. But I still believe that it may be a new government, but the same old party is behind it. Here is an opportunity for him to exhibit those bold and dynamic qualities about which his speech writers boasted. At the same time he could do something about those large areas of good standing timber held by lumber barons. Many of these trees are overmature; release parcels of this timber to small northern firms, whose roots are deep in northern Ontario, so that they may be able to keep alive their small industries or to set up new ones fabricating the products and using the resources that we have at hand so our township councils will be able to replenish their diminishing coffers.

But geography and population are against this in the north, just as geography is against some of these fellows in the line, I guess, forming on the right for these new Cabinet posts. Geography is against some of the bright young men over there, so it is also against us in northern Ontario.

Not in my time can we hope for the industrial development, that the hon. Prime Minister spoke about, as hon. members have down here; but we have the forests and we have thousands of acres of land to introduce forests. We need encouragement and support. Above all we need a minister of northern affairs, a department of northern affairs staffed by northern people and with a minister from the north, who knows its potentialities and its hard-working, independent people.

When I first came to Ontario many years ago there was a department of northern development. I would like to see again a department of northern affairs.

And I must remember, too, as industry, just like a relentless flood, sweeps further and further out from the golden horseshoe here, miles and miles of recreational land will be overrun by our factories and urban subdivisions. Even today, the city-dweller has to go far afield to find a wooded lane or a quiet lake beside which he can recline and listen to the soft sweet sounds of nature, or up to Nipissing and look at the sunsets over Lake Nipissing—no artist can paint the beauty; or see a trout leaping from a stream in the sunlight. These things you have to go far afield to see. Come up to northern Ontario, hon. members will find them there. We have thousands of acres of ideal tourist country waiting to be opened by access roads. The Lord in his kindness gave us this opportunity, let us seize it here.

Here again would be another area of concern for the minister of northern affairs. But this above all. We have in the far reaches of northern Ontario and northwestern Quebec, we have the most precious resource of all, a resource that some day, as the late well-beloved Maurice Tremblay, who was executive assistant in The Department of Lands and Forests, used to say, could be our greatest asset. I am sure all the hon. members can surmise to what element I refer. It is that element that all nature requires for life—it is water.

I spoke last year, and so did the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) previously, about Mr. Thomas Kieran's scheme for diverting the Harricanaw. Also the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) made a motion here some sessions ago in regard to a water grid. He also spoke on it and then we saw the conditions in southern Ontario last year. So certainly something has got to be done about the conservation of water. I shall speak of that later in another debate.

Finally, there is another agency which could come under the purview of a minister of northern affairs. It is the Ontario-owned Ontario Northland Railway which bears on its rolling stock the slogan "Ontario's Development Road". I think it is a slogan more honoured in the breach than in the observance. The former Minister of Economics and Development, under whose jurisdiction this railway was placed, assured us dynamic developments would occur under his direction. With great fanfare he announced that he was conducting a three-pronged survey and out of that survey would come developments which would revolutionize the operation of the railway.

There have been developments, it is true. One of them, sad to relate, is a somewhat uneasy and dissatisfied work force. I had a letter the other day from one of the work force and he says:

Our department has no less than four engineers, two of which were hired in the last year. To make up their salaries the working forces are laid off from the B. and B. department. There were one carpenter and four labourers laid off November 15, last year there was a reduction of four in September, despite the fact that four men were retired. Also the ONR says they have done quite a bit of contract work last year. If the facts were proven we could have done the work for less and all the men would be working.

That is only typical of other statements I have heard from employees of the ONR. I was told there was a possibility that there may be a reduction of almost 200 the next year, and I sincerely hope not.

Mr. Speaker, prompted by a question of mine, the hon. Minister of Energy Resources made a statement to this House on Monday of this week about the operation of the railway and referred to an expenditure of $3 million in the year 1962. I do not doubt, Mr. Speaker, that you and many others in this House got the impression that all this money was spent on the operation and expansion of the railway.

However, it is my understanding that at least half of that money, or almost half, or certainly more than $1 million, was spent not in providing better service to northern Ontario, better service to our municipalities there, but rather it had reference to a private contract which the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission, in union with the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, had carried out in the construction of the communication system for the federal government.

In bidding on this contract, the Ontario-owned railway competed with private enterprise, including a northern-based company. It is my understanding further that on the terms of that contract the ONR will be reimbursed for the expenditures made on the job in 10 years, for the full amount of the expenditure for that communication system. Also, thousands of dollars were spent on the building of the line up to Adams Mine and certainly it is producing revenue now, I understand, and will certainly in the future produce revenue for this—

An hon. member: Development roads.

Mr. Troy: That is right, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we would not have the road unless we had the American firms over here to build the mines.

On a visit to North Bay, again in the year 1962, the hon. Prime Minister, like a fairy godfather, told us how good his government was to northern Ontario. That was the time that he spoke about the $7 million, but that referred to the federal project about which I spoke and had little to do with expansion of this railway service to our people.

There are many other matters that I could concern myself with at this time, but I will defer any strong views I have until the budget is presented and the estimates of the various departments are presented in this House.

However, before I finish I just want to refer to a matter that occurred yesterday in the House. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) asked a question of the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) also asked a supplementary question. It had to do with charges made by the chief coroner of Metro Toronto. In my view the answers were not quite satisfactory, and it certainly did not satisfy my hon. colleague from Parkdale nor certainly the hon. member for York South and other hon. members over here.

In the Toronto Daily Star of January 28, there is an editorial under the heading, The Embarrassing Coroner, and it says:

There has rarely been a franker effort to "get" a public official than the move now under way to remove Dr. Morton Shulman from his post as chief coroner of Metro Toronto by abolishing the post itself.

It goes on to say:

Dr. Shulman has been in trouble with his superiors in The Attorney General's Department for some time.

I must say that I carry no brief for Dr. Shulman, I do not know the man at all, but there were very serious charges made. Also, he says—I think it was reported he said he was called a liar by the Deputy Minister. The editorial indicated that he intends to appeal to the hon. Prime Minister against the proposed change.

This may well be a decisive test for Mr. Roberts. It may show how far he is really trying to set up a new and improved administration of justice, and how far he is prepared to go along with the slackness and concealment of the former regime.

The Star finishes:

We believe Dr. Shulman is the kind of coroner the public needs, even if he is not the kind The Attorney General's Department wants.

Then in the Toronto Telegram of today, Wednesday, January 29—and this certainly is a metropolitan newspaper that supports wholeheartedly in every way, I think, the administration of the Conservative Party—there appears under the heading:

TELL THE FACTS

The public welfare is paramount in the conflict between Deputy Attorney General Common and Supervising Coroner Dr. Cotnam, on the one side, and Metro Chief Coroner Dr. Shulman on the other.

The dispute, with charges and counter-charges, detrimental to the public service, warrants Premier Robarts' attention, and a decision by him to appoint a judicial inquiry.

Mr. Common recommends the abolition of the office of chief coroner of Metro Toronto. This appears to be an oblique way of dismissing Dr. Shulman. If this action is taken before an objective inquiry is carried out, before all the facts are disclosed, the public will conclude that The Attorney General's Department is concealing the truth.

Dr. Shulman's allegations are too serious to be judged by the two men he attacks. He accuses Mr. Common and Dr. Cotnam of interfering—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Troy: I am reading from an editorial from the paper that supports quite strongly, and always can see no fault in your party, at least in Ontario—

Dr. Shulman's allegations are too serious to be judged by the two men he attacks. He accuses Mr. Common and Dr. Cotnam of interfering with an inquest; he asserts that attempts were made to suppress evidence, or to prevent inquests into several hospital deaths.

A most serious charge.

Mr. Common declares he is lying and Dr. Cotnam states that he is distorting the truth.

He might as well call him a liar, too.

Who is right?

One section of The Coroners Act requires that a coroner must be called when death occurs as the result of "unfair means . . . negligence or misconduct or malpractice . . . or from any cause other than disease or under such circumstances as may require investigation . . ."

The intention is plain—to uncover the facts of mortal offences, mistakes and accidents and to recommend measures to safeguard the public against their repetition.

Dr. Shulman, it is apparent, has antagonized some circles. Dr. Cotnam's statement that he is trying to clean up all the corruption at once implies that Dr. Shulman has been excessively zealous, which is not a bad quality in any person. The questions are whether or not his zeal has properly served the intention of The Coroners Act and whether or not he has been hampered.

The final paragraph:

As the matter is of vital importance, a judicial inquiry is essential to obtain the answers.

And certainly, with that view, I agree. I am supported by my own hon. colleagues, and certainly I think by the hon. members who sit to my left.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: No, no. Pardon me. There is a barrier there that I forgot all about, a little ravine that—

An hon. member: There is an overflow there.

Mr. Troy: Just before I close, I noticed an editorial recently about the hon. Prime Minister and his burden. It referred to his courage in telling the people of this province that we were going to be faced with an increase in taxes. He did not have the courage though, the hon. Prime Minister, to make that statement before September 25.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark): —did not know about it then.

Mr. Troy: You mean to tell me he did not know on September 20—August 1—that you are going to have to raise taxes? It is funny how you find out a few weeks later.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Troy: I remember the distinguished visitor we had here the other day in the gallery and who was recognized, and properly so, by the hon. Prime Minister of this province. He also made that statement—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gomme: Who was it?

Mr. Troy: I heard his name—

Mr. Letherby: Is the hon. member talking about Liz Taylor?

Mr. Troy: No, I am not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

I would like to inform the members that I do not like questions going back and forth across the floor. I do not mind the cut and thrust of debate, but I do think speaking directly back and forth to each other lessens the dignity of the House.

I would ask the member speaking to address all his remarks to the chair. The other members, if they have a question, should rise in their place and ask the member if he will permit a question. Otherwise the member has the floor and I would ask you to desist from talking back and forth to him.

Mr. Troy: Your point is very well taken, Mr. Speaker, and my apologies in not directing my attention to you.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Troy: Possibly later.

The hon. member for Simcoe, I just forget which Simcoe it is, Simcoe East, the hon. member referred to a certain person just a moment ago, Mr. Speaker. I believe she is coming to the great city of Toronto and I understand also she is going to come to the hostelry at which I stay—not to see me, of course—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: I suppose there will be a body-guard around.

As I close, my friends, hon. members, I again repeat that remark in regard to the increase we find of taxes in cigarettes, it is said; liquor, too, and sales tax and all. Unfortunately for the people of this province, they might have had a second look at this so-called good government if it had been made before September 25. As I close, I urge the new hon. members, and I know it is probably like beating against a whirlwind to appeal to some of them, to read and re-read the address of my leader, the hon. leader of the Opposition. It gives very much food for thought and particularly do I ask them, the new hon. members. They seem to be a fine body of intelligent young men.

By the way, before I sit down, I must commend the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop). His speech to us the other day was certainly an inspiration. It has been commented on by others, and I heartily agree with those words of commendation.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): I cannot hear the hon. member.

Mr. Troy: Speaking on, I regret that the hon. Minister does not hear me, but I was just saying that I must commend the hon. member for Forest Hill, who bears with him, and will to the end of his days, the results of his service to his country. He made what to me was a very inspiring address, and I sat there and listened to him. And I agree also with the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) when he said that he had made a very thought-provoking speech.

I might also say too that I intended to mention that one of the former members of the commission of the Ontario Northland Railway, who had given many years of service to the commission and to the railway, died recently. I refer to Mr. Reginald Aubert of Englehart. I extend, and I am sure I speak the mind of everybody here, particularly those that know the north, condolences to his family.

My final word to the hon. Prime Minister in regard to the Ontario Northland Railway Commission. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Parry Sound has been the vice-chairman of that commission since the mid-summer of 1962 and surely by now he has proved his worth and I think it is high time he should be named chairman of the commission.

Also, I see no reason to have the former member for Algoma-Manitoulin on that commission. I do not know that he did very much when he was a member, and I think he will do less when he is a non-member. Replace him with somebody from the riding of Timiskaming, and particularly one who speaks for labour. The late Mr. Aubert, when he was appointed a member of that commission, he was supposed to speak for labour, so I think the hon. Prime Minister would do well to reorganize the commission as I have said and also to have somebody from the district of Timiskaming.

There is a representative from Cochrane North, from Cochrane South, from the district of Nipissing, and also Parry Sound. So I think the government should then bring in somebody from Timiskaming, because then all the districts through which the railway traverses will be represented—and also give labour a voice on the commission. I urge the hon. Prime Minister to do this as quickly as possible. I have already asked the chairman of the committee on commissions that the commission of the Ontario Northland be brought before the committee as soon as possible.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your courtesy, not only to me today, but also when you were chairman of the committee of the whole and as chairman of the committee on private bills. Thank you very much.

Mr. R. A. Eagleson (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a privilege at this time for me to stand before this House of assembly as the first member to represent the new riding of Lakeshore.

My riding is the most southwesternly corner of Metropolitan Toronto and consists of the southern portion of the township of Etobicoke, part of the town of Mimico, all of the town of New Toronto and the village of Long Branch.

Previous speakers have congratulated the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on his great victory last September and have congratulated you, Mr. Speaker, on your election in our last session. To avoid redundancy I will simply say that I concur in all those remarks.

It would be remiss of me however, Mr. Speaker, if at this time I failed to congratulate all the hon. members of this House on their election last September. Having been, I believe, the only member of this House to take part in two elections in 1963, I know doubly well the time and effort that one must direct to the task of being elected. Having been unsuccessful in April and successful in September, I can only say that in spite of what others have said to me about a loss being good for one's system, it compares in no way whatsoever with the joy of a victory.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Lakeshore have very strong views on the question of amalgamation and metropolitan government. I have received reports from several elected municipal representatives during the past few months on this problem and the majority of them feel that amalgamation at this time for the municipalities in my riding, would not be in their best interests but would in fact cause an increase in taxes and a decrease in services. I have indicated to these representatives that the matters of amalgamation and the metropolitan system of government are at present before the Goldenberg commission and I have instructed them to refer their briefs to this commission. I have also advised them that I will be pleased, when this report is before the House, to speak on their behalf in this regard.

One of the largest mental institutions in the province of Ontario is within the boundaries of Lakeshore riding. The Department of Health is to be commended for the manner in which these hospitals work. One unit in this mental hospital in Lakeshore riding is run in such a way that it appears to all intents and purposes as the outpatient wing of a general hospital. This, I understand, is the ultimate aim and desire of psychiatrists in our province and the steps that The Department of Health has taken in the mental hospitals to this degree are steps in the right direction. The public must be taught, Mr. Speaker, that mental illness must be taken and viewed in the same light as physical illness. A directive from The Department of Health, and instructions from that department to the public, would make the public more aware of this situation and remove, perhaps, the unfortunate stigma that is now associated with mental illness.

Lakeshore riding is also the home of the Mimico Reformatory. Within the reformatory itself there are two rehabilitation clinics. The first is the Alex Brown Memorial Clinic having to do with alcoholism, and the second, a newer centre, is that on drug addiction. Having been involved for the past five years to some degree in the practice of criminal law, I have run across several instances, Mr. Speaker, where individuals suffering from this illness, as it should be described, have had the opportunity to get treatment in these centres and have subsequently come back into society completely rehabilitated.

(Mr. W. G. Noden takes the chair.)

However, I would point out that at present in Metropolitan Toronto, three magistrates courts operate almost exclusively for cases involving alcohol and liquor offences. For this reason, if for no other reason, Mr. Speaker, more such rehabilitation centres and clinics should be set up. A great number of the lesser crimes in our province can be directly attributed to the immoderate use of alcohol.

Previous speakers have made mention of the recent report from the United States Surgeon General, Luther Terry, dealing with the link between lung cancer and cigarette smoking. We have heard from previous hon. members and from the department itself, indicating that our government is going to take steps, in conjunction with the federal government, to make the public aware of the inherent dangers in cigarette smoking. I do not mean at this time to be promoting or be inclined towards complete abstinence but I do say this: that if the dangers are there, as they have been indicated by obvious facts, these facts should be brought to the public attention and, if necessary, the public should be protected by legislation against themselves.

Mr. Speaker, another matter of controversy in Lakeshore riding is the matter of air pollution and air pollution control. At the present time, the matter of policing air pollution is to a great degree in the hands of the local municipalities. This is in many instances a good thing, but I would suggest that ultimately some governmental agency should work hand-in-glove with these municipalities to ensure some degree of consistency in inspections.

In Lakeshore riding, for example, we have a highly industrialized area in the southern part. The people in that area have grown up with the matter of air pollution and accept the smoke as part of their way of life. They realize that if it was not for these same industries, perhaps the employment that we enjoy in Lakeshore would not flourish.

I was pleased to report to the residents of my riding that the Throne Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor indicated that our government was going to bring forward steps—further studies of air pollution and air pollution control.

I sympathize, Mr. Speaker, with the problems of the Ontario Water Resources Commission. I have heard in this House previous speakers indicate that their particular ridings suffer from drought and other such ancillary problems. I would point out, however, that in Lakeshore riding—and I am sure this applies in other urban areas—there is a great danger and a great amount of water pollution. I know in my own riding that the Etobicoke Creek and the Mimico Creek, and even parts of Lake Ontario, often carry "swimming prohibited" signs during the summer. As such, areas of recreation for the use of Lakeshore riding are completely without use because of this problem.

It is my suggestion that the Ontario Water Resources Commission should immediately take steps to ensure that all the industries upstream on these different rivers and tributaries should be obliged to use whatever scientific purification systems are available to them, without, of course, prohibiting their production because of the prohibitive costs of such systems. I would say that this, I am sure, is not restricted to Lakeshore riding and if something is not done immediately we are going to be faced with the problem of having this throughout Ontario. We must act now and we must act immediately with legislation with teeth in it.

Mr. Speaker, I am a member of six standing committees in this House; I am very happy because of that. I would point out that I am a member of the agricultural committee. A member of the press gallery asked why I had chosen to act on the agricultural committee; he asked was it not true that I was a lawyer by profession, and had I in fact ever grown up on a farm? I had to say honestly that, yes, I was a lawyer by profession and proud of it, I might add; secondly, that I had not been brought up on a farm and my days of farm life were almost nil. Much as I would have liked to have said to him that I had an innate desire for the ultimate benefits of agriculture within our province, I had to admit that I was the chosen, not the chooser.

However, there are other committees that I am a member of and I trust that I will learn with the other hon. members of the Legislature as we go along. Some of those committees include education, health and welfare and that of legal bills. As such, I wish to enter a discussion on some matters that will pertain to this ultimate committee work.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) has recently launched an investigation into the present status of the used car business. Something that borders very closely on this investigation is the present system in our province of chattel mortgages and conditional sales registrations. As the legislation stands, Mr. Speaker, the lawyer, or whomever is acting for a person to search a chattel mortgage, is required to attend at the local county-court clerk's office and make a diligent search through several hundred names. To protect the purchaser of a vehicle, or alternately, to protect the lender of the money on the strength of the mortgage, it is necessary to go through the whole history of the used car or other chattel. If one of the previous owners of this vehicle or chattel should be named Brown or Smith—and I say this with all respect to certain hon. members of the Legislature who are named such—the cause is hopeless.

It is almost impossible to protect a purchaser or a mortgagee under the present system. As the legislation now stands, not only is one obliged to search in the local county-court clerk's office, but also he must attend at all the counties in the province of Ontario to ascertain whether in any of those counties a chattel mortgage or lien against the chattel has been registered. Needless to say, the cost of such searches for a solicitor is prohibitive and for that reason many solicitors today will not undertake to guarantee title to a chattel.

Now, it is very easy to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is wrong and that is wrong. It is a different thing to say this is wrong and perhaps we should change it in another manner. I would suggest at this time that there are two ways in which this problem could be solved.

The first would be, perhaps, to have at least a centralized system of registration. In that way a lawyer could make his trip to the registry office, make his search and at least have something to offer the client. And this also is not to protect the solicitors, this is ultimately to protect the purchasers and to have them pay less legal fees.

The other alternative, and one that I am perhaps more inclined to personally, is to have a certificate of title attached to the ownership permit of a vehicle so that when a person wishes to put a lien on his vehicle, a stamp or a certification is made on the document, and in this way whenever a person presents the certificate to another person it is known immediately whether, in fact, there will be good title in the mortgage or to the ownership of the car.

This legislation would avoid the present problem wherein persons buy vehicles, take them home and drive them for some months. Suddenly one morning they awake to find their garage empty and immediately call the police. The first question the police officer directs to them is whether or not there is a chattel mortgage against the vehicle. In most cases, it is ascertained that a bailiff has seized the vehicle by instructions from the chattel mortgagee. This legislation, and I suggest it, would be for public protection and for the ultimate benefit of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, having been associated with several youth programmes in several capacities over the past years, I am quite enthused with the introduction of a youth branch to The Department of Education. In conjunction with this is the proposal that a select committee be formed to study youth affairs in the community. I am sure that the needs and problems of the youth of Ontario will be made obvious to the hon. members of this House. I am quite certain that the work of the House upon the knowledge it receives at that time will be substantial.

The important consideration at the present time along these lines is the fact that The Department of Education has now made an effort, and is making a further effort, to increase technical studies at the secondary school level. I believe, Mr. Speaker, we are all aware that ultimately there are going to be more and more requirements for technically trained people, what with automation rearing its head. With our present system under The Department of Education we are now allowing non-academic students to continue at school and to ultimately enter the employment field with some diploma, making them perhaps semi-skilled or skilled workers. This, then, will lessen the possibilities of unemployment for these people and ultimately lessen the possibilities of delinquency of these people.

Reference has been made, Mr. Speaker, by many previous speakers, to the medical services insurance legislation and the Hagey commission. I received correspondence from, and had discussions with, several representatives of non-medical bodies within the province of Ontario. The most notable of these were the representations by chiropractic and optometric groups. Dependent as I am upon optometry, and since I have received a great deal of relief physically from chiropractic treatment, I am inclined towards their cause and in sympathy with it. I would say, Mr. Speaker, however, that I have indicated to these groups that their representations should be made—and I understand they have been made—to the commission. I have assured them that when this report of the commission is tabled in this House that I will be pleased to speak on their behalf at that time.

In a recent case before the Ontario courts, a district court judge decided that it was in the best interests of an illegitimate child that he be allowed to be adopted by Protestant parents, even though his mother was a Roman Catholic. This case has evoked a great deal of comment for and against the learned judge's decision. Several people have argued that this decision was wrong since the judge chose to ignore the long-established principle that a child is to be raised in the religion of his natural parents. On the other hand, we have those who agree, who state that the Legislature has intended inter-faith adoption because there is nothing in the Act which indicates otherwise.

Perhaps there is a great deal to be said for both of these views. My personal view, Mr.

Speaker, is that inter-faith adoption should be allowed. I think that we have lost sight of the major issue, and those of us who are blessed with children will understand whereof I speak.

A child is not a chattel that can be stored until a certain day. A child is a living thing, a joy, a sorrow, a smile, a frown. It would appear at the present time that there are more adopting parents of the Protestant faith than there are children available. Conversely it appears there are more children of Roman Catholic faith available than there are adopting parents. Do we simply say, well, that is the end of the question; or do we take a few steps forward? Will we say that these children are to be forever denied a home and denied parents; or shall we ultimately decide that these same children will be given the same opportunities that we have been given?

It is not a question of maladministration, Mr. Speaker, because the children's aid society is well staffed with efficient personnel and they are in an excellent position to judge whether the child should be allowed to enter the home. I would suggest that we implement the court decision with legislation that will permit inter-faith adoptions, not to cause any religious controversies, but simply to make happy homes where presently we have lonesome adults and lonely children.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the people of Lakeshore for entrusting this position to me. I will work diligently at the tasks ahead to perhaps better represent them. I am one of several young members in this House and it is certain that our enthusiasm will be a boon to this Legislature. We were elected to do a job for our constituents and our province, and we are prepared to work to that end.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate, I am going to have a privilege that many other hon. members who have risen have not had. Instead of having the opportunity of congratulating the Speaker, I am going to be congratulating you on being elected to the office of Deputy Speaker. I, of course, have known you for many years in this assembly and have always regarded you most highly and have no doubt in the world but that you will conduct yourself as deputy Speakers should, and certainly up to the present time you have caused us no difficulty on this side whatsoever.

While I am in a congratulatory mood, I should also congratulate the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on winning the election last September 25. We have to, in this democracy of ours, accept facts as they are and there is no doubt in the world that he was the victor and beat the pants off the rest of us in most of the ridings in the province of Ontario. I think that as we watch him, there are many of us who are somewhat sympathetic of the many arduous duties that he has. I do not know whether we should be jealous of the high position that he has or not, because certainly he has not got the leisure time he used to have in the years gone by.

I well remember as a private member that fellows like himself and myself used to get together on some occasions and have social times of various natures that were most pleasing. And I often think that perhaps he would like to be able to have a night off, during the various sessions he has been the Prime Minister, to enjoy some relaxation that unfortunately he cannot have in his present job.

I must say, however, though, Mr. Speaker, that I was somewhat slightly annoyed with the hon. Prime Minister during the last election campaign because, probably unwittingly, he ignored me to some extent. When he came to the little town of Wiarton, where I happen to live, to electioneer against me, you should have seen the show that took place, Mr. Speaker. The cars came in through the gates of the town—it was about a mile to the place where he was going, the hotel—and they had the Scottish pipers out in front and several people wanted to know what was going on, if the circus was coming to town or not. I happened to be standing on the lawn just as he went by and waved and called to him most vigorously, but he completely ignored me and carried right on down the straight and narrow path to the hotel where he was going.

Unfortunately, there were not too many people there when he got there, and I am informed from the best authority the telephones were ringing violently to try to get some of the people out to sample the coffee and sandwiches that were being given by the local Conservative association on that particular day. However, I have no doubt that he did not see me and for that reason I was ignored—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I just say, sir, that I looked very closely for my hon. friend that afternoon and I was very sorry I could not see him. His residence was pointed out to me by someone with whom I was driving and I really felt I would have liked to wave to the hon. member. And while I have this small opportunity, I would congratulate the hon.

member on the fact that his was the only name I saw displayed any place in his riding the whole time I was in it.

Mr. Whicher: Well, I accept what the hon. Prime Minister has said, of course.

I also would like to congratulate the many new hon. members that are here in the House. I was most impressed with the last speaker who emphasized the fact that he was a young man sent here to do a job. I remember very well nine years ago, almost nine years ago now, when I gave my first speech in this assembly. As has been said by many senior members of the Legislature in years gone by, this is a most exclusive club, the most exclusive club in the province of Ontario now composed of 108 members instead of 98 as in the last session. As hon. members get to know everybody, this has been my experience anyway, they will find that there are many good people on all sides of the House. All of the Liberals, for example, are not of the bad sort. I have found from experience that the NDP's are very fine people; and, of course, some of my best friends are on the government side. Thank heaven that they are, because whenever I want something, why I can at least ask them. Quite often my request is not granted, but I know where to go when I require anything for my riding.

Now, Mr. Speaker, during the past few weeks there has been much speculation in the press, both in Metropolitan Toronto and all over Ontario, of the possibility of tax increases in the province of Ontario. Indeed, the hon. Prime Minister is on record, at least in the press, in saying that there will be tax increases, and indeed, substantial tax increases, when the budget is brought forth in the next two weeks or three weeks, whenever it may be.

It is the most amazing thing for me, as the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) pointed out so capably a few minutes ago, that we should be talking about tax increases now in this the month of January, 1964, when only in September, 1963, there was going to be no necessity for tax increases whatsoever. Indeed, the economy of the province was flourishing so much that there would be no need for tax increases now, or for some years to come. I might add, Mr. Speaker, I might ask the hon. Prime Minister or the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), whom I see has come into his seat, why we need tax increases in this province anyway, because there has not been a deficit in the province for the last 20 years, according to them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Let me make the budget speech.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, the budget has always been balanced—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Education, the finest in the world.

Mr. Whicher: I heard the hon. Minister describe the inmates of the penitentiary as the finest of the fine only a few years ago, so I would keep quiet if I were he.

Well, anyway, Mr. Speaker, the point is, the people of Ontario were told most definitely that our economy was flourishing and that there would be no necessity for tax increases for this year or for several years to come—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is what Mr. Pearson—

Mr. Whicher: Now, of course, according to the paper, this is incorrect. I have a great suspicion that according to the hon. Provincial Treasurer's budget of the next few days that the people of Ontario are going to be disappointed once more and tax increases are going to creep into the economy of this whole province of Ontario.

Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker, I might say that the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario reminds me, just in this one particular instance, because he does not remind me of the chap I am going to quote too often, but do you remember what happened after a federal election a time or two ago when all was fine with the economy in the Dominion of Canada and then the most pathetic figure, the former Prime Minister of Canada, went before the television screens of this nation of ours and said, two days or three days after the election, they made a mistake and the economy, our financial dealings with—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: —the United States were not as they were during the election campaign, we have to pull up our socks and if we do not do it we are going to be in dire financial circumstances. Mr. Speaker, now we have the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario, who only three months ago said to the people of Ontario, that financially we were on top of the heap—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: So we are.

Mr. Whicher: Next month we are going to read in the provincial budget that taxes are going to have to be increased substantially, I would suggest, and the old tax payer of Ontario has been fooled once more as he has been fooled for many years by the government sitting on the opposite benches.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be the first time that this government has increased taxes in the last few years after saying that the budget had been balanced, that financially we were in fine shape. Almost every year since the war—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Taxes have not been increased at all.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, would you please have the hon. Minister of Mines stop interrupting me because it hurts my feelings so desperately. All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is let them keep on, because I have been insulted by experts before, and I do not put the hon. Minister in that category.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, it will not be the first time that taxes have been increased by the government sitting to your right. And I might go back to show where so much of this money has come from every year, practically, since the war. Certainly during the past half-dozen years, the government of the province of Ontario has gone cap in hand to the Minister of Finance in Ottawa and said that we need more money in the province of Ontario, and with this, of course, I agree. The ironical fact, of course, Mr. Speaker, is that regardless of what government has been in power in Ottawa during the past half-dozen or 10 years, it really has not any money to give to you because it is running at a substantial deficit itself. But nevertheless—

An hon. member: The hon. member did not say that four years ago.

Another hon. member: We give it to them.

Mr. Whicher: You do not give it to them, the taxpayers give it to them.

But nevertheless, they have gone and they have received substantial sums of money from Ottawa, and I certainly feel that these sums that have been given to this government by Ottawa have been entirely justified. I am pleased to see that as a result of his trip there only a little while ago, we are going to get an extra $14 million, I think it is, this year. Certainly, the way you fellows over there spend it, we are going to need it.

Gasoline taxes, of course: I remember just a few years ago—for those hon. members who have not been in this assembly too long and who probably have forgotten this tax—only a few years ago this government increased gasoline taxes from 11 to 13 cents. Licence fees in the province of Ontario for those of us who drive cars, and there are a couple of million of them here now anyway, have been increased several times. Liquor taxes have increased. When I came in this legislative assembly only nine years ago, the amount of taxes derived from liquor was some $39 million. This year, or in the year 1963, the hon. Provincial Treasurer's financial report, abridged, ending March 31, 1963, showed $87,500,000 was taken in in the form of liquor taxes. So there have been substantial increases by this government in the past very few years.

Corporation tax: We are now in the situation—and I am sure that many hon. members on the other side are worried about this situation—where corporation taxes are now 52 per cent. We are not higher than everybody else on the North American continent but we have reached the peak. The government is the champion—it is a tie anyway. There is no one else who taxes the corporations any higher than this government in this province of Ontario. And last year, as a matter of fact, the corporations of Ontario contributed to the hon. Provincial Treasurer $186 million besides the several hundred millions that they contributed to Ottawa. Our sales tax came into force, of course, only two years ago.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Whicher: Yes, I would.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I just wonder when the hon. member is speaking about the corporation tax, in view of the fact that his party has endorsed the New Democratic Party stand on Medicare, and in view of the fact that the New Democratic Party Medicare plan was to be financed by an addition of two per cent on the corporation tax, does the hon. member accept that method of financing along with the plan?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, what we obviously endorsed and would be most happy to do again, was the resolution that was presented on the order paper this year. In the resolution the hon. members of the NDP made no mention of financing whatsoever.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: That is true. It is all very well to laugh if you wish but I am giving you some facts. Laugh all you want to, but this is a fact.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, when I am finished, the government is going to be wondering how it is going to finance all the things it has promised.

Two years ago there was a sales tax presented to this Legislature. Mr. Speaker, you very well know because you were sitting right here, when the hon. Provincial Treasurer told us that this would be the tax to end all taxes—the budget would be balanced, there would be no further debt whatsoever. He estimated there would be an intake in a full year of $150 million extra when in actuality last year there was more than $175 million taken in. In a period of two years with $175 million extra on one tax only, this government is going to stand before us two weeks hence and ask for more money. Indeed, it has asked for more money already. And before I leave this particular question, I am going to remind you that $175 million extra has come in the form of sales taxes, but let me remind you that the debt of this province has increased in spite of the $175 million last year by an additional $75 million.

Now this is not any budget debate; this is letting you know that we know what is going on on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, while the election campaign was going on there was every indication that the status quo as far as taxes are concerned would remain constant. There was no suggestion of tax increases whatsoever. And yet, before this Legislature went in session, we had tax increases in the province of Ontario, given by the government, not debated in this House at all. Already car licence fees have gone up about $4 million and there has been a supposition in the paper that liquor taxes are going to increase. This afternoon, I see that on Saturday they are going to go up 50 cents a bottle or something to that extent. Now I just say this, Mr. Speaker, I am not being critical of the government in raising the tax on liquor at all. But I simply say this to you, some time or other you are going to kill the goose that lays the golden egg. How much money can you get out of this industry? You have decided. I hope for the good of the financial situation in Ontario that it will be as listed in the papers today, but certainly these liquor taxes have gone up and already licence fees have gone up as far as automobiles and trucks are concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I come to the point of where else the hon. Provincial Treasurer—I know he has been working very hard because he has not been in the House too much, I do not believe; undoubtedly he is working on the budget—where else is he going to get the taxes that, according to the amount of money this government is spending, he is going to have to levy among the hard-pressed taxpayers of Ontario? Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely inconceivable, theoretically at least, that taxes should increase in the province of Ontario this year when the United States is cutting its personal and corporation taxes by 10 per cent across the board to the tune of $10 billion this year. It is absolutely, theoretically, I say, inconceivable.

An hon. member: Why?

Mr. Whicher: Because we are in competition with American firms, that is why—stiff competition.

Mr. Speaker, in the Toronto Daily Star, I think it was a couple of days ago, January 27 or thereabouts, there was a story told about a firm, I think it was the McCullough Saw people or a name something like that, which is a subsidiary of an American firm. This saw is now made in Canada, according to the press, and there are going to be a lot of them made. Evidently this is something that not only the firm should be proud of but we the people in Ontario should be proud of, too. The president said this—and I impress this on my hon. colleagues opposite—that the reason this firm got the contract here in Canada was not for sentimental reasons, but strictly for the reasons of dollars and cents. This province is in competition—our corporations are in competition completely with our American neighbours.

Increased taxes will mean increased costs in our province of Ontario, and we are in competition particularly with other corporations in Michigan, New York, and Ohio, those states of the United States which are close to the Canadian border.

While decreased taxes of approximately 10 per cent in the United States are bound to make costs less, if the hon. Provincial Treasurer comes here in the next few days and increases taxes—it is as simple as this—costs will increase in this province of Ontario. Not only has the hon. Prime Minister suggested that taxes will increase somewhat, but he has suggested, according to the papers that I have read, that the tax increase will probably be substantial.

As I said before, car licences have already gone up, the liquor tax has already gone up. Now it has been suggested in some papers, and I would not be surprised if the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Eagleson) would agree with this, that perhaps there might be a tobacco tax. May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the tobacco tax now in Ontario and in Canada is very high indeed.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Whicher: I agree with what the hon. member has just said about the danger it is to the health of people all over the world. Nevertheless, the fact is that this is an important industry in the province of Ontario, and it is in direct competition with the tobacco industry in other areas. There will be $14 million or thereabouts coming from Ottawa this year, as announced in the Dominion-provincial conference in Ottawa and I am certainly glad that that money is going to be forthcoming. I am sure that the hon. Provincial Treasurer will look over the possibility of an additional gasoline tax in Ontario, because it is quite true that in Nova Scotia, for example, I believe the gasoline tax is 17 cents while in Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Nineteen cents.

Mr. Whicher: Nineteen, while in Ontario it is 13 cents. But may I say this quite frankly—I do not want to bring my own riding into this speech too much, Mr. Speaker—but I would think that the people of Bruce county, in looking over some of the roads there that the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton), certainly on one occasion, announced as deplorable—a certain road anyway—I would hate to think that the people of Bruce county would have to have any additional gasoline tax when that particular road is in the condition that it is.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): It will not be for long.

Mr. Whicher: It has been suggested in the various papers that possibly there will be an increase in the hospital insurance premiums. Possibly there would be. May I say this, that there are many people in the province of Ontario who simply cannot afford to pay any additional hospital premiums, any higher than they are now. Hospital costs, I will agree, have become fantastic. Just a few minutes ago, half an hour or so, I called the Toronto General Hospital and asked them how much money it would cost to go into a ward there tonight. This ward, I presume, may have 30 or 40 people in it. The answer is this: $30 and 42 cents per day! Surely, this must be one of the highest-cost hospitals in the North American continent.

In the last two or three years in all of our small towns and smaller cities hospital costs have increased. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. Prime Minister thinks at all of raising the hospital rate, that he have the Ontario Hospital Insurance Commission investigate this cost picture as far as our hospitals are concerned and attempt to get some more economy into them. At least to the layman, it is not financially right that when you have a hospital such as the Toronto General or the Belleville Hospital or Owen Sound Hospital crammed to the doors, 24 hours a day, seven days a week, that these costs should continually keep going up and up.

An hon. member: Look into hospital costs before you make that statement.

Mr. Whicher: I told you what the hospital costs were.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (Humber): I can give you—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: Why don't you? Perhaps if you go and earn your salary as a well-paid member of the commission, you might get some of those costs down.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Whicher: Why don't you? Do not mumble; stand up and speak your piece.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to another proposed tax increase—the prospect that perhaps the sales tax may be increased in this province. As I said before, only two years ago it was suggested by the hon. Provincial Treasurer that a three per cent sales tax would be enough to look after the financial needs of this province for several years to come. Now the papers suggest that perhaps it may be five per cent, because that is where substantial money, of course, can be taken.

All I can say is this, Mr. Speaker, that if these taxes, or any substantial portion of them are increased in this the province of Ontario, then our tax level is going to be very high indeed compared with our American friends, who are right next door to us in this day, this particular day, when the President of the United States, Lyndon B. Johnson, has promised the people that he is going to cut taxes 10 per cent right across the board.

Mr. Speaker, the tragedy of the whole thing is this; that with costs going up as they are in the province of Ontario under the present administration's manner of doing business, the tragedy of the whole thing is that even if we are taxed, as I have suggested that we are going to be, that this is still not going to be enough; because if you will examine the education costs that are suggested are going to take place in the next five or ten years in the province of Ontario, or the highway costs, or the hospital costs, or the welfare costs, or the many other departments of government, then the amount of money that I have suggested here now—here is the tragedy—it is still not going to be enough!

And then, Mr. Speaker, where are you going to go for money? Obviously it means that we are going to have to bring a little bit of business into government.

An hon. member: That would help.

Mr. Whicher: Now I have two suggested remedies. I have no doubt but that the hon. Prime Minister has spent many hours and days, with his associates, in thinking of where are we going to cut costs; because obviously we are going to have to do it. We simply cannot continually keep putting taxes up, particularly when our next-door neighbours are putting them down substantially, 10 per cent.

I have always thought, and I say this most seriously, that there is a great duplication of service in all governments in the Dominion of Canada, and I would suggest that this government here is no exception whatsoever.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): May I ask the hon. member a question? It is not a loaded one, I can assure him.

Mr. Whicher: Well, I wish it were.

Mr. W. B. Lewis: The hon. member is talking of the United States lowering taxes. Is he talking about federal taxes? He should be talking about State taxes.

Mr. Whicher: I am saying that our firms, our corporations and personnel of Ontario, are going to be in competition with people who are going to have a reduction in taxes, whereas we are going to have an added burden.

Mr. W. B. Lewis: Maybe the hon. member should tell this to Ottawa; not to this House.

Mr. Whicher: This is where the taxes are going to be increased. I would be very surprised if the taxes in Ottawa are increased this year. This is where—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: This is where they are going to be increased; I am not asking the government to cut them, I am asking that they stay the way they are, the way they were before the election.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Has the hon. member asked his colleagues in Ottawa to cut the federal taxes?

Mr. Whicher: Ottawa is cutting them; the defence estimates are being cut down considerably and with that I agree. I wish the government had two or three departments over there that they could cut down.

An hon. member: Where are the tax cuts?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, this is what I suggest and I say it most seriously; I am not talking politically, it is going to be four years before there is an election, I am not talking politics one single bit; not one single bit.

In Ottawa we had a report, a commission known as the Glassco commission, which investigated the federal government and they came out with several words of good sound advice. In this particular province of Ontario we have 19 Cabinet Ministers. I am not going to suggest that is too many or too little, that happens to be what the hon. Prime Minister wants and I am willing to go along with it. But the government has 19 Cabinet Ministers and many commissions such as Hydro, water resources, the hospital insurance commission and many others; they are doing more business in dollars and cents than the province is itself. There is bound to be a certain overlapping of services and a duplication of the spending of taxpayers' money. It would not matter whether it is your government or whether it would be ours. These things happen in governmental life.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister consider seriously having a commission, such as the Glassco commission, investigate the government of Ontario to see if there cannot be any substantial savings, to see if there is any duplication of services that might be eliminated so that we can at least attempt to cut costs.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would like to tell the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that the Glassco reports are under study and each section that has come out has been studied very carefully by this government, in order that we may avail ourselves of the research that has been done by the federal government.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear it, but the only thing is that I suggested that this be done here, on this particular level, and the Glassco commission suggested that there could be savings of many millions of dollars in the federal treasury. Now I am going to say this, that it would be a poor commission set-up indeed that could not suggest to you after due study that there could be many millions of dollars saved in the governing of the province of Ontario—a very poor commission, and you would be the first to admit it, if we were talking privately. I do not expect you to do it here.

Mr. Speaker, so much for the present. So much for what we can do with the services we have at the present time. It must be studied, as the hon. Prime Minister has suggested he is doing, and I am glad to hear it. But what about the future, because this is not going to be enough? We are still just keeping the status quo in our province of Ontario. The point is, sir, that the taxes have been increased over the past number of years. They are educating more people, of course, but the taxpayer is still having to pay more and more all the time, and we are just keeping the status quo. It is really doing nothing extra. There may be an attempt, but in fact it is really doing nothing to increase the economy of Ontario so that more money will be funnelled into financial channels, so that more taxes will come into the hon. Provincial Treasurer's coffers. We have to have a real plan for the future of Ontario, and indeed, for Canada.

Much has been said in the past few days, for one reason and another, of statesmen such as Sir John A. Macdonald. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I am one of his great admirers. In mentioning his name, I am sure that my hon. friends on the government benches would not mind if I mentioned the name of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, because here are two leaders who, in the pages of history, as we look back on the various things that they attempted to do, really made Canada what it is today. I had a gentleman tell me several years ago—and I have quoted it several times in dealing with the Canadian National Railways when it is closing various stations around the province of Ontario—that Sir John A. Macdonald started a railway from Halifax to Vancouver, and he did not have any money and he did not have any machinery, but he went ahead and built the railway.

Anyway these are things that we have to think about in this Canada of ours now, because if we do not, if we do not have leadership and statesmanship in Ontario and in Canada and in Quebec, why then there is going to be no Quebec problem, or bicultural problem in 10 or 20 years from now, because we are going to be swallowed up completely and actually by our American friends. Possibly there are some people who would agree with it, but we have to make up our minds, Mr. Speaker, whether we want this to be done, or whether we wish to remain a separate country, as Canadians, or as citizens of the province of Ontario. I would suggest this, that if ever we needed a political moratorium between the parties, that we become friendly in order to make Canada and the province of Ontario greater—

Hon. A. Crossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Want to call that election off, do you?

Mr. Whicher:—that now is the time. What we need, Mr. Speaker, is more people in this Canada of ours, not just in the province of Ontario but all across this country of ours, from Halifax to Vancouver. In Canada, we have approximately 18 million people in half a continent. As a matter of fact, when we were in Moosonee only a year ago last fall, the hon. Prime Minister will remember that Bishop Clark said that this was the centre of the continent—that is, Moosonee—and when you look at the map, he has got something on the ball. Certainly we have in Canada, half a continent with only 18 million people. Our American friends have 180 million people, with approximately the same territory. They have 180 million people to eat their wheat, as an example. They are a market right at their own doorstep. We, on the other hand have only 18 million people to attempt to eat the same amount of wheat, and we must sell on world markets because we simply have not got enough people here in order to do the job.

Every person, Mr. Speaker, who is brought into Canada, creates employment and creates taxes. The funny thing about it, Mr. Speaker, is that if we do not develop it, if we do not do something about it in the next 50 years, somebody else is going to do it for us, because there are 600 million or 700 million Chinese people and 400 million or 500 million Indians and probably 100 million Japanese and 100 million Germans, etc., etc., and only 18 million in half a continent. If we do not do something about the development of it, somebody in 50 years is going to do it for us. I suggest that we set about it now and do it ourselves so we will have some say about it. We need a plan for the future, just as Sir John A. Macdonald or Sir Wilfrid Laurier had when they were Prime Ministers of Canada.

I would suggest that the hon. Minister—I think that his new name is the Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld)—could very well suggest to the people in Ottawa, under whom immigration of course really comes, that Ontario would be most willing to co-operate in having a form of planned immigration. We must have the people. As a matter of fact, a certain gentleman whom most of the other side, not all of them, but most of them, respect greatly, Mr. Diefenbaker, in his speech in Toronto, I think in 1958, said that we must populate or perish. I certainly agree with what Mr. Diefenbaker said at that particular time. We must have planned immigration and we must have thousands and thousands of people brought in each year, not just into Ontario, but across the whole Dominion of Canada, because otherwise, we are going to be swallowed up, financially at least, by our American friends. We have not got enough people in Canada to develop it and pay the taxes. People generate wealth and they must be brought here.

We must do something else, Mr. Speaker. We must do something to keep the people, the Canadians, in Canada. I read an article in one of the papers three or four months ago, about the state of California. In that article it stated that there were approximately one million Canadians now living in California. We cannot do anything about it, of course. They happen to have weather down there that many of us would enjoy and many Canadians move down there. With this, I have no quarrel, but there is one place that I believe we could enter the picture.

At the present time, we have a decided lack of such professional men as doctors, dentists and engineers in Ontario and in Canada. These men, Mr. Speaker, are financed largely out of the public purse, when they go to the primary school, the secondary school, and through universities. For various reasons—perhaps the fact that they get more money in the United States, or the weather is better—there are many doctors, as an example, who leave the province of Ontario, or Canada, as soon as they graduate from university, even though we have invested thousands of dollars through The Department of Education in the education of those professional men. Mr. Speaker, it is not as if we do not need those doctors here in Canada. Certainly we need them and the dentists, too, and we need engineers. But we have really given those people a large sum of money in the form of education benefits and then they have gone away and left us.

I would suggest this, Mr. Speaker, and I want to impress on the House that I am only giving my personal views here. I would suggest that the time has come when the hon. Minister of Education in Ontario (Mr. Davis) and the government could really look at the possibility of making all education free, right through to the university level, for all of those people who have the mental capacity to handle it. But in return for that free education, those people would sign a paper or a declaration that they will stay, preferably in the province of Ontario, but at least in Canada, for a period of five or six years. Those people, Mr. Speaker, are the people who pay the taxes, people like doctors and dentists and engineers. They are the people who are making the money and we need their services, and we need the population that they help to create here in Ontario and in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion may I say this, that to me it is very clear. We have to make up our minds in the very near future whether we wish to remain Canadians or whether we are going to be swallowed financially by our American friends. We must have a plan for the future. And as far as I am concerned, the situation as it has developed in the province of Ontario and in our federal government is this:

People generate wealth, and we must get them here, and we must by some influence try to keep those people, those born and bred Canadians, to keep them here to help develop Canada for the future. Thank you very much.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, as the member for Kingston and the islands, I wish to thank you for the opportunity of making this, my first speech to the hon. members of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario.

Also, I would like to record my appreciation to the people of Kingston and the islands for their wonderful support during the recent election and the confidence they have placed in me, a relative newcomer to Kingston, in electing me to this Parliament.

In this connection, I want at this time to pay special tribute to Mr. William N. Nickle, whose place I have taken. Mr. Nickle was a member of this House for approximately 12 years and during that time made a tremendous contribution as a public servant to the people of Ontario in general and to his constituents in Kingston and the islands in particular. May I thank him here as well for his generous and wholehearted support during the recent election. I am sure his presence here will be missed and I hope that I may justify the confidence of those who chose me to succeed him.

It is my understanding that it is customary for a new member in his reply to the Speech from the Throne, to describe the riding he represents and to comment on conditions there. But before I do this, I thought that as one of the many new members in this House, sir, I would describe some of the impressions I have had during the last two weeks.

As the Speaker of this House, I understand it is your duty to preside impartially over the debates and discussions which take place here. It reminds me to some extent, and I hope you will forgive the comparison, of a hockey referee, of whom I have had considerable experience. A good referee must have a thorough knowledge of the rules, be alert and by his actions and decisions earn the respect and confidence of the players.

I am impressed, Mr. Speaker, with your knowledge of the rules and procedures of this assembly. It is my observation that you are alert as to what is going on and that without question you have gained the respect and confidence of all the hon. members of this House. It appears to me that you have a very difficult role to perform, and I would like to add my congratulations to those of the previous speakers for the dignified and firm manner you have displayed in managing the proceedings of this House.

My second impression is one of admiration for the fluent way in which the previous speakers have spoken and of the research and hard work that they have obviously done in preparing their excellent addresses. The apparent ease of speaking shown by some of the older hon. members, who without the benefit of notes are able to expound on almost any subject, leaves me filled with admiration at their wealth of knowledge and their ability to express it on any and all occasions.

My third impression is one of puzzlement and bewilderment, as to how some of the hon. members of the Opposition are able to criticize the general measures set forth in the Speech from the Throne even before the government has had an opportunity to explain the details of their proposals, which I am sure will be outlined in future bills to be brought before the hon. members. It almost appears to me that they are taking this opportunity of criticizing things in general, knowing that when full details are available they may find themselves agreeing with the proposals and not able to find too much to criticize.

My fourth impression is one of admiration for the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) for his patience and, for the most part, his undisturbed demeanour as he listens to the hon. members of the Opposition trying to state in their inimitable manner how poor his government is, how little it has done and how badly it has done what it has done, when he knows, and I think they know, that the hon. Prime Minister has given the people of Ontario more sound progressive legislation in the few years he has been in office than any other Prime Minister in the history of this province has given in a comparable period of time.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): The hon. member is certainly stickhandling there.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): What is he looking for, a call?

Mr. Apps: I am confident that this government is genuinely interested in improving the lot of the people of Ontario and I am sure that the legislation which will be brought before the House during this session will confirm this fact.

My fifth impression is one of disappointment at the inadequate office space available to the private members of this Legislature, particularly for those who do not live in Metropolitan Toronto. It has been my experience that it is a full-time job to look after the interests of those people we represent and the lack of adequate office space here makes it more difficult than it otherwise might be. I hope the government will see fit to remedy this situation as soon as practical.

My sixth impression—and in case hon.

members were wondering, I am just about out of impressions—is my admiration for the good job that the civil service is doing. My requests for information have been looked after quickly and efficiently, even though I am sure that many times it gives them—and please excuse the expression again—a pain in the neck to explain to new members like myself many elementary things that we should have known anyway. And the same applies to the hon. Cabinet Ministers who, busy as they are, take time out to give us a helping hand whenever it is required.

And now, Mr. Speaker, although I have a few minor impressions left, I would like for the next few minutes to explain to the hon. members of this House about the riding I represent and comment on some of the things which are of concern to my constituents.

First, let me say that I am honoured to represent the old historic riding of Kingston and the islands. Even before 1841, when the city of Kingston was chosen for the first Parliament of Upper and Lower Canada, representatives from Kingston played an active part in the government of Ontario. My riding is composed of the city of Kingston and the three main islands of Howe, Wolfe and Amherst; Kingston being entirely urban, the island almost wholly rural.

The city of Kingston is unique in that it is made up of many things. First of all it is a university city being the home of Queen's University, one of the oldest and most famous universities in Ontario. It is celebrated for its engineering graduates, many of whom have played, are still playing and will continue to play, leading roles in the building of Ontario and Canada. It gives complete courses in arts, science, engineering, medicine, nursing, law, as well as many graduate studies, and is justly proud of its brilliant academic record. Its medical school alone has provided for more than 100 years skilled doctors and physicians, and they have made a tremendous contribution to the health and well-being of all the citizens of eastern Ontario.

Second, it is an army centre, headquarters of the Eastern Ontario Area Command, headquarters of the Prince of Wales Regiment, the Staff College at Fort Frontenac, the site of the Royal Military College with Barriefield and Vimy barracks on the outskirts, as well as the historic old Fort Henry. Also it is a tourist centre, situated at the head of the St. Lawrence River with the Thousand Islands to the east, the beautiful Rideau Lakes to the north and the historic Quinte parkway to the west. It is also the home of the Kingston penitentiary, the Collins Bay penitentiary situated close by and Joyceville a few miles to the north.

It is an industrial city with the large Aluminum Company of Canada, the Frontenac Tile Company, and Canadian Locomotive Company inside the city, and the large plants of DuPont and CIL just to the west, as well as many varied smaller industries.

In addition, the three islands, mentioned previously, form the finest agricultural lands in eastern Ontario. Yes, we the citizens of Kingston, are proud of Kingston and the islands. A great deal has been accomplished there and there is still much more to do. I do not have time to go into all the things I would like to see done in Kingston, such as urban renewal, low-cost housing, subsidized homes for the aged, all of which are most pressing and important, and I will confine my remarks now to only a few of the things that are of importance to the people of Kingston and the islands.

Kingston, as I have mentioned, is the home of Queen's University, and Queen's, like all universities, is faced with accommodating a tremendous influx of new students within the next few years. This means the erection of new buildings, additions to many more, and the building of new residences, because the large majority of Queen's students come from outside Kingston, and strangely enough many from Metropolitan Toronto. The university authorities have, to the best of their ability, provided the government with facts and figures, and it is of the utmost importance that this government help to make available to the university the capital and maintenance funds necessary to complete this tremendous expansion programme on schedule.

I was particularly pleased to see in the Speech from the Throne that a new department of university affairs will be set up, and I quote, "to act as liaison between the government and the universities, and in conjunction with the advisory committee on university affairs to deal with grants and other university matters," and also, that a new Crown corporation will be established to assist universities with their capital financing problems.

I hope that this will mean that all universities, as well as Queen's University, will receive the capital and maintenance grants they require to complete their expansion on schedule, and provide in fact more boys and girls with the opportunity to obtain a university education, which is so vitally necessary in this ever-changing world.

Another source of concern is the supply of qualified teachers that will be needed to look after these additional new students. As the demand for highly qualified professors is increasing by leaps and bounds all over North America, it is very important that the Ontario graduate fellowship programme be not only continued but be expanded, and that additional grants be made available to the universities to enable them to expand their own graduate facilities. It is a tremendous and challenging task to expand university facilities rapidly and at the same time make certain that the quality of our teaching is maintained and even improved. May I once again stress to the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) the importance of this over-all university expansion programme and particularly as it applies to one of Canada's oldest and finest universities, Queen's.

Kingston, as a tourist centre, is ideally located at the eastern end of Lake Ontario with the St. Lawrence River and Thousand Islands to the east, the beautiful Rideau Lakes to the north and the historic Quinte parkway to the west. It is my firm belief that a concentrated advertising programme by The Department of Tourism and Information would make the area surrounding Kingston the greatest tourist mecca in Ontario.

Do the hon. members know that the Rideau Lakes are more accessible from Toronto than many areas of Haliburton and Muskoka? That in less than 2.5 hours via Highway 401 the people of Toronto can reach many lakes in the Rideau Lakes chain, and the traffic, I might say, is not nearly as bad as it is in some other tourist areas. The fishing is good, the hunting exceptional and the whole area has only partially been developed. May I recommend it all to you. Come down and have a look at it. I think you will be very much impressed.

I would also like to suggest that the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission begin now to take a good look at the lakefront between Kingston and Adolphustown. The city of Kingston, due to inadequate planning years ago, may now have to spend millions of dollars to clean up its lake and river frontage. Let us not have the same thing happen to this historic part of old Lake Ontario. The commission has done a wonderful job at Fort Henry, Upper Canada Village, and the parks and picnic grounds along the St. Lawrence, but is it not now time to do the same thing along the beautiful shores at the eastern end of Lake Ontario?

I was pleased to see in the Speech from the Throne that a comprehensive minimum wage programme had been brought into full operation in the Oshawa-Toronto-Hamilton area, and that The Department of Labour is engaged in further studies and wage surveys to form the basis for further steps in the minimum wage field. I would respectfully suggest that the city of Kingston is one area where this minimum wage regulation should be implemented as soon as possible. I believe that the wages paid in Kingston in the great majority of cases are considerably higher than the minimum wage as laid down, yet there are some places where this is not necessarily so. Therefore, it is very important that there be no delay in expanding the scope of this minimum wage law and that the city of Kingston in particular should be one of the new areas covered.

I want to commend the government and the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) for their realistic approach in increasing the grants for hospital beds to the $3,200 per bed basis from the previous $2,000 grant. This has been of great assistance in the recent year to the two general hospitals in Kingston, the Kingston General Hospital and the Hotel Dieu Hospital. Because of these additional grants the Kingston General Hospital has benefited by an additional $37,788 for its school of nursing bringing the government assistance to a new total of $121,176. The Hotel Dieu Hospital, just beginning a major addition, has benefited by an additional $376,000, bringing the new total of government assistance to $1,004,046. The new hospital accommodation now in the process of being provided will go a long way in solving the hospital space problem in Kingston. I thank the hon. Minister of Health for his assistance to the hospital needs of this Kingston area and I hope he will keep up the good work.

Two weeks ago, during the Speech from the Throne, the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario mentioned that July 11, 1965, would be the 150th birthday of the father of Confederation, Sir John A. Macdonald. It is also slowly becoming apparent that on July 1, 1967, Canada is planning to celebrate the 100th anniversary of Confederation. We in Canada have always tended to play down the important mileposts in our history and we seem to be almost ashamed to commemorate the memory of those great men who made this country possible. The time is away past due for us to assign the greatest of these men the honour that is due him and to indicate for all to see that we are justly proud of the man, who more than anyone else, will make the celebrating of our centennial in 1967 possible. I mean, of course, Sir John A. Macdonald, the first Prime Minister of Canada, who should mean as much to us Canadians as George Washington means to the people of the United States.

And so we are planning to honour this father of Confederation. How should we do it, is the question being asked everywhere and I would like to make a suggestion. Sir John A. Macdonald, although born in Scotland, was brought up in Kingston and represented the Kingston riding for many years in the federal government at Ottawa, and so the people of Kingston feel that he means a little more to us than perhaps to others. Therefore, I would like to commemorate this citizen of Kingston and Canada by building a bridge. I would like to call it the Sir John A. Macdonald Memorial Bridge. I would like to build it in the area in which he lived and which he represented so well. I would like to build this bridge between Kingston and Wolfe Island.

This bridge would do many things. First, it would pave the way for a new access route to northern New York State, for I am sure once our government indicated its intention to build this bridge, it would not take long for the Thousand Islands Bridge Authority to get started on the bridge between Wolfe Island and Cape St. Vincent on the American side. It would be of tremendous advantage to the people of Wolfe Island, who have suffered for many, many years from inadequate transportation.

Let me tell you for a moment about Wolfe Island. It is an island approximately two miles south of the city of Kingston at the eastern end of Lake Ontario, at the head of the St. Lawrence River. It is about seven miles wide and approximately 21 miles long. It, along with the islands of Howe and Amherst, has some of the finest agricultural land in eastern Ontario and I was very happy to see not too long ago that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) took time out from a very busy schedule to look at this Wolfe Island agricultural land. I think he was very impressed by the potential there. Its chief products are cattle, milk, corn, cheese, also ducks and fish; because it is one of the best duck hunting grounds in Ontario and is one of the best fishing areas in the whole of Ontario.

Its chief drawback, of course, is lack of continuous transportation to the mainland. At one time this island controlled the lake traffic to and from the St. Lawrence River and had over 3,000 inhabitants. Now its permanent population has dwindled to just under 1,200. Transportation to the mainland up until now is provided by one ferry boat and is inadequate in the summer and almost non-existent in the severe winter months. So much so, that about 60 high school students must get accommodation in Kingston for almost two months of every winter in order to continue school and the children, as they grow up, tend to leave the island because of the poor transportation between there and the mainland.

I have been very much encouraged in the last two weeks in that The Department of Highways have now seen fit to greatly improve the ferry service between Kingston and Wolfe Island and I know that this is going to be a tremendous help temporarily to the people of this island. With adequate transportation the market for its farm products will be increased. It could also become one of the finest residential areas in eastern Ontario and a tremendous tourist attraction besides.

The ready access to the Rideau Lakes, the Quinte Parkway, the historical parts of Kingston, and old Fort Henry, would give a tremendous impetus to the tourist industry of Kingston and the whole surrounding area. The industrial development of Kingston would be tremendously accelerated. Above all it would be a fitting memorial to the father of Confederation, Sir John A. Macdonald. Whenever anyone went over this bridge it would be a continual reminder that here was the place where Sir John A. Macdonald lived, and that we are proud of it. It would show to every American who entered Canada by this bridge that we Canadians are proud to commemorate this great man.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. Prime Minister and his Cabinet to seriously consider this bridge, because it is badly needed. It would give a tremendous impetus to the economy of Kingston, Wolfe Island and the surrounding area. It has been talked about for 20 to 30 years. What better time than now to build this bridge, and as I mentioned before, it would be a living tribute to the memory of Sir John A. MacDonald. I can think of nothing more appropriate to honour the memory of this great man than to have the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario officially open the Sir John A. MacDonald Memorial Bridge between Kingston and Wolfe Island on July 1, 1967.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to make a few comments on a subject that has been very important to me for many years. I was particularly impressed in the Speech from the Throne to see that the government has set up a department of youth and that plans for a select committee on the problems of youth are being formulated.

I would like to say that fundamentally, the great majority of the young people of Ontario are fine upstanding young boys and girls. At this time I would like to pay a tribute to the many hundreds, and even thousands, of people who have given so much of their time and their energy and their money to provide facilities, equipment and guidance to the hundreds of thousands of young girls and boys that are growing up in Ontario at the present time. The government has helped to some extent in providing facilities, but the ever-increasing numbers of these young people mean that much more help must be given.

This help can be given by many people in many ways, because it seems to me that it is very important for all of us to make sure that those men in charge of our young people will teach them, not only how to play hockey or football or baseball, but at the same time will teach them the lessons of good sportsmanship and good citizenship at the same time. So it behooves all of us to make sure that the people who look after these boys and girls are people of that calibre.

I would also like to point out that the professional athlete of today has a great responsibility that he must carry on his shoulders. Because of television, the newspapers, the radio, so many of our young boys and girls look upon these athletes as real heroes and try to copy their actions in any way they can. So it is up to them to realize that they must conduct themselves on and off the ice or playing field in such a manner that they will not let down these young people—who think so much of them.

Now, finally, I come to what might be classified as our second-class boys and girls. I know that this is a very poor way to describe them, but it is about the only way I can think of at the present time. These are the boys and girls that are born in some of the blighted areas of our cities—and every city has these areas—through no fault of their own; usually coming from broken homes, from homes where the incomes are very low.

I can give hon. members an example of what can happen sometimes, and I am sure that it often does happen. Take two boys, 15 years of age. One of them brought up in the downtown area in the midst of broken-down homes and poverty, and the other brought up in some of the better areas in our community. The one downtown, because he gets no sympathy at home, he is not welcomed there in many cases, his family may be broken up, they do not have any money; sometimes in a sense of frustration, goes out and literally throws a brick through somebody's window. The policeman comes along, he picks him up and he ends up where? Down in the juvenile court.

In contrast, the 15-year-old boy coming from a better class home, he also has his frustrations from time to time. He, too, may throw a stone through a plate glass window. He is picked up by the police, he is taken home, his father gives him a lecture, pays for the window and then in two or three weeks' time it is forgotten.

Both these boys are very similar, there is nothing wrong with either one of them. The one ends up in juvenile detention, the other grows up normally and becomes a useful citizen.

Both of them could do that.

So what are we going to do about these boys? How can we overcome the fact that there is no point in sending this lad downtown back home, because his parents do not care too much about him? What is the solution?

These are some of the problems that must be solved.

Maybe we can solve them by instituting a system of boys' homes where a couple might take under their wing eight or nine boys of this calibre, who are not bad enough to send down to the Ontario Training School, but cannot be sent home because nobody is going to look after them there. To put them in such a house where they would receive adequate care and supervision, where they have a good environment, where they can go to normal schools, and where they can gain a little bit of self-respect, accept a little responsibility; might be a lot better than sending them to a training school where maybe they are going to learn some things that are not going to be of much help to them.

Then again, someone might say, "Well, let us clean out all the slums; let us build nice high-rise apartment buildings". Which is a good idea, and which is being done all over Toronto and many other cities and towns in Ontario. From the physical aspect it certainly looks a lot better than it used to, but are we sure that the people that we throw out of their houses in order to build these high-rise apartments are the people who will live in them? Or are they just moving out to the perimeter of these new buildings and starting another blighted area on the outskirts of these fine buildings? So I think that when we decide to build these housing developments in these blighted areas, we should also look at the social aspects and endeavour to have the same people who lived there take advantage of living in this new accommodation.

Perhaps we should look at it in a different way, perhaps we should say to ourselves: "Well, let us try to fix up these homes these people live in, maybe we can subsidize them a little bit." Maybe we can say: "All right, they are paying $50 a month rent to somebody who does not care what the place looks like, maybe we should try to buy these places and subsidize them, subsidize the people who are living there."

In that way, keep their monthly payments as low as possible and at the same time give them some self-respect in that they are paying for their own homes. Help them to improve their homes, giving a better environment which will be a much greater advantage to the children that they are trying to bring up.

The problems of youth are very complicated and this just scratches the surface of some of the things that might be considered.

I read an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail, I think it was, some time last week when they were talking about this select committee on youth. I was very disturbed to see towards the end of the article some skepticism from people who say: "Well, this is just a rehash of something which has been done before, where they are going to spend a lot of money for nothing when it could be better spent trying to look after the boys and girls themselves".

I hope that this will not be the case, and I hope that now the government will realize that they can do a lot for our young people that they will come to grips with this problem and endeavour to make sure that every boy and girl in the province of Ontario—whether he comes from a low-income family or a high-income family—has the opportunity to grow up to be a useful, employed, well-educated citizen of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity of addressing this assembly today.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE CROWN ATTORNEYS ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Crown Attorneys Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to provide for Crown attorneys at large in the province of Ontario who will act as special prosecutors in difficult and important cases, special Crown prosecutors. In addition it provides that per diem magistrates, those who are employed on a purely temporary basis, may continue their practice of law in the magistrates courts.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I wonder if the hon. Attorney General could tell us how many he proposes to appoint under this bill?

Hon. Mr. Cass: No. I have not any information on that, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) begs leave to present to the House the financial statement of the Settlers' Loans Commissioner for the fiscal year ended 31 March, 1963 and a certified copy of order-in-council No. 3784 dated December 5, 1963, concerning sundry loans of the Settlers' Loans Commissioner.

THE KILLARNEY RECREATIONAL RESERVE ACT, 1962-63

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, this amendment will provide for the name "North Georgian Bay Recreational Reserve," but will retain the name "Killarney" for the provincial park itself, which ultimately will be a part of the reserve.

THE TREES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Trees Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this amending Act will empower a council of a county to agree to pay annually to the council or municipality in which the county owns land acquired for forestry purposes in an amount not exceeding the taxes on the land concerned, if they have not been exempted from taxation otherwise.

THE CROWN TIMBER ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Crown Timber Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this bill I think will go to the appropriate committee in due course for consideration and consists chiefly of a number of amendments of a routine nature.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that I would like to direct to the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall).

Has the women's division of The Department of Economics and Development been abolished, and if so, then what is the status of the Ontario Conference of Women and its plans for another meeting this year?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for notice of the question. The answer is no, the women's division has not been abolished.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask, Mr. Speaker, what the reply is to the second question?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. A civil service competition has been held and an appointment will be made shortly for a new candidate for that job.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to which job is the hon. Minister referring?

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can clarify—my question was: What is the status of the Ontario Conference of Women—I am not referring to any job—and the plans for another meeting this year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The conference of women is under the chairmanship of Mrs. L. Lymburner and is still active. A programme is planned for 1964 and 1965.

Mr. L. M. Hodgson (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have an inquiry of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), as follows:

What action does the government plan in providing the air pollution department of the Metropolitan government with the necessary powers to control dangerous fumes of diesel buses and can the hon. Minister inform the House if the new Toronto Transit Commission buses, which are now being tendered for, will be equipped with stacks to carry fumes to a level above the air intakes of automobiles or pedestrians?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): I appreciate notice of this question given to me by the hon. member for Scarborough East. In answer, I am of the understanding that Metropolitan Toronto has already passed a by-law under The Air Pollution Control Act, 1960. The Act empowers the municipality to take whatever steps it chooses in the control of air pollutants of any kind.

Diesel engines produce less carbon monoxide and other noxious materials than internal combustion engines. Good maintenance and proper selection of fuel, and oil can keep this problem to a minimum. At the present time, diesel engines are used underground in preference to internal combustion engines because the diesel engine, when properly operated, produces less carbon monoxide fumes and other noxious materials as already noted.

We are not in a position to know if the new buses to be purchased by the Toronto Transit Commission will be equipped with stacks to carry fumes to a level above the air intake of automobiles or pedestrians.

In urban centres such as Metropolitan Toronto, again I am advised, it would be preferable not to have stacks on buses, otherwise exhaust fumes will be blown upwards and then come down on people.

Just stop the hilarity and listen for a change.

Mr. Singer: Come down—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, the hon. member is so ready to criticize yet he does not listen to the information that is given to us by the experts in the area.

Mr. Singer: All right, go ahead. Touchy today!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The only advantage of stacks is in closed areas, such as garages, to assure that total ventilation in the garages is easier. It is, therefore, more desirable that stacks are not used on city buses since the regular type of exhaust tends to keep the gases close to the ground rather than widely disseminating them. For example, it is recognized that stacks on diesel powered farm units placed ahead of the driver can be dangerous under certain conditions and some fatal accidents have arisen therefrom.

Up to the present time no device has been invented which will satisfactorily eliminate irritating or dangerous motor vehicle exhaust fumes. The large manufacturers of motor vehicles are engaged in extensive research directed towards the design of such a device.

Since 1963, with the exception of some European imports, all new motor cars are equipped with a blowby recycle device by means of which crankcase fumes are re-circulated to the carburetor or to the intake manifold for re-burning. It is estimated that this device will result in a 25 per cent to 40 per cent reduction in irritating and harmful exhaust fumes, depending on the general efficiency and maintenance of the engine, and proper control of fuel-air mixtures.

Mr. Singer: Is it better to come up and down or down and up?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It will not come up, it goes down to the ground. Does the hon. member know anything about physics?

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), notice of which has been given. Is the hon. Minister in a position to tell the House what steps he proposes to take to protect the interests of the small slaughter houses in the province with regard to standards required by the federal government for meat inspection?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the notice of the hon. member who asked this question and in reply I would say that the regulations relative to the operation of the small slaughter houses in the province of Ontario have been under discussion since the introduction of The Meat Act earlier in the year.

We are in a position to present the regulations to the small slaughter house operators for their consideration and in doing this we have called a meeting and it will be, I believe, the first meeting, Mr. Speaker, of the agriculture committee of the Legislature for February 5 at 10 o'clock in committee room No. 1. These arrangements have been completed by the Clerk of the Legislature and at that time we will have the opportunity of discussing these regulations with the slaughter house operators.

We want as far as possible to protect the interests of the small slaughter house operators in the province recognizing, of course, the fact that we want to have the very best product available for our consuming public that it is possible to provide. We have asked the federal officials, who will be carrying out these regulations, to attend this meeting, in order that we may have their interpretation, as well as our own, as to what regulations we feel are important in this aspect of meat inspection. Thank you.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, might I ask a supplementary question of the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: I noticed a press report, sir, that said the hon. Minister of Agriculture had indicated that there were some instances where special circumstances would warrant his requesting the inspection branch to carry out inspection in premises that did not come up fully to the regulations at the federal level. Is this so?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have not seen this paper report that you refer to, referring to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): One of your officials actually—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, this is not the question.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, yesterday during my speech the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrobe) asked if he could put a question. I said I would answer it later. I forgot about it. Is it too late now?

Mr. Speaker: I would like to inform the member that he has to have his question of any Minister in my office before 12 o'clock.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: It is vice versa.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) if he is able to indicate to the House when the budget will be presented as yet?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if present plans come to fruition it will be presented two weeks from yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY RESOURCES ACT

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources) moves second reading of Bill No. 19, An Act to amend The Department of Energy Resources Act.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources): The bill before the House today is designed to create a new department within the Ontario government for very specific purposes. This province is a very fortunate area of the North American continent with respect to the abundance of its natural resources. While many feel that this abundance will continue to provide the people of Ontario with a continuing high standard of living, there are, however, many who feel that this standard can be attained and, in fact, increased only through the proper management of the province's resources.

In the initial stages, the new department will deal with the management of two of these resources, they being, power and water.

The bill under discussion proposes changing the present Department of Energy Resources to The Department of Energy and Resources Management. The present Department of Energy Resources, its programmes and staff, will be continued, and the relationship of the Ontario Energy Board to the Minister will remain unchanged. Added to it will be the Conservation Authorities Branch, at present in The Department of Lands and Forests. Two commissions, the Ontario Water Resources Commission and the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission, will report to the Legislature through the Minister of the new department. Heretofore, these commissions have been responsible to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Economics and Development respectively.

A brief review of some of the work of the various programmes under the department I feel is in order.

The present Department of Energy Resources was established in 1960 by an Act of this Legislature. Under legislation, it has been engaged in the development of the gas and oil resources of the province. While Ontario's production of natural gas and oil is relatively small, compared with its consumption of these forms of energy, nevertheless, sir, it has been the policy of this government and will continue to be, where possible, to give aid and direction to the exploration, drilling and production of gas and oil. These are being done in the hope that more and more of our increased demands on the petroleum industry can be produced close to the consuming market in Ontario. For an industrial province in a competitive position in Canada and in the commerce of the North American continent, it must always be our policy to ensure that insofar as provincial authorities can help and determine, there will be a continuing supply of energy on a long-term basis and at a price as attractive and competitive as possible.

In recent months The Department of Energy Resources has seen increased activity in the development of large underground natural gas storage reservoirs in southwestern Ontario, and in the proposals now being considered to increase the pipeline capacity to join these reservoirs to the large industrial and residential natural gas consuming areas of Ontario. These are so very vital since most of our natural gas must come to this province from other areas.

To meet the need for public safety, the department has had a continuing and expanding programme dealing with the utilization and inspection of natural and liquefied petroleum gases. It is encouraging to note that gas and oil are being used as fuels in increasing applications in Ontario with increasing records of safety.

The Conservation Authorities Branch had its beginning in the former Department of Planning and Development in 1944 as a conservation branch. It had the responsibility to organize general conservation work in southern Ontario, using as its perimeters for development and management the natural drainage basins surrounding the province's major rivers. This Legislature passed The Conservation Authorities Act in the spring of 1946 requiring all municipalities and watersheds to be included in the body corporate. This far-reaching legislation wisely foresaw the development of watersheds or river valleys as the most logical unit for conservation and resource development, and management work. The type of organization, involving as it does the active participation of the municipalities, has grown and increased in importance since that time. As of now, there are 33 river valley authorities in Ontario, covering 22,000 square miles and involving 468 municipalities.

Following the reorganization of government departments in 1961, Mr. Speaker, the branch was transferred to the jurisdiction of the Minister of Lands and Forests. Now, for the purposes of developing a co-ordinated water management programme, it is proposed that the branch be brought within the new department. I will discuss its functions in the new department a little later.

A third important arm in the resource management programme of the Ontario government is the Ontario Water Resources Commission, established under The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act in 1956. The commission's objectives are designed to ensure maintenance of adequate water supplies in a safe condition for domestic consumption and other uses. Its programme is designed also, to make sure that all wastes are properly treated before being discharged into our streams and lakes. It is empowered to assist in the construction and financing of water and sewage works which any municipality may not wish to undertake on its own. Approval of the commission must be sought before municipalities can proceed on any works of similar nature even under their own financial responsibility.

May I make mention here of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission. I feel it is significant that the Minister of the new department will have legislative responsibility for this commission and its transportation and communications network in northern Ontario. The development and management of the north's agriculture, forestry and mining resources, and indeed its human resources, have depended almost entirely on transportation facilities. As in the rest of the world, resource management has always followed adequate transportation facilities. With the expanding programme of the commission about which I spoke briefly in this House recently, new avenues of resource development and management in northern Ontario will be opened up.

The new department will give priority to the management of two of Ontario's natural assets and resources—power and water.

The present programmes in effect in The Department of Energy Resources will be continued under an energy branch of the new department. Likewise, the present programmes of the Conservation Authorities Branch will be continued. Natural resource development with specific attention being paid to water management programmes will be expanded.

Mr. Speaker, it will also be the policy of this new department to decrease the incidence of pollution through expanded programmes under the Ontario Water Resources Commission. The commission will also be co-ordinated with other branches in the department and with other provincial and federal government agencies to take action wherever large-scale supplies of water are required for concentrated residential and industrial areas.

Because the water requirement in Ontario is so widespread, affecting as it does the potential production of both our industries and our soil, and because the adverse effects of water shortages are felt by agricultural producers in many cases in advance of other kinds of users, it will be the policy of the new department to expand the government's efforts so that rural areas will have continuing and emergency supplies of water to meet their growing needs.

There are many needs for water and each need can be separated. However, to tackle each need and problem individually would, in the opinion of the government, be a mistake. It will therefore be a requirement that overall planning and action on a co-ordinated basis be taken by municipal, provincial and federal government agencies at present concerned with water resources. Water for use on a multi-purpose basis will be the aim in a province such as Ontario, where natural resources, industry and recreation must develop together for the common good of all.

Complete water development on a watershed basis envisages three separate types of programmes, yet these programmes can be co-ordinated in their planning and complementary to each other in their final use by Ontario's population.

First are the large water control mechanisms protecting our built-up areas from flood destruction and providing large areas for recreation close to our residential communities. As well, these control dams provide summer flow of water in our rivers so essential to our towns and cities during the drier summer periods.

Further upstream and representing the second phase, can be created the smaller reservoirs covering an area less than 2,500 acre feet, impounding water for rural use, irrigation, and downstream flow. These reservoirs also assist to recharge the ground water supply. It will be from this type of development that much of the emergency supply of water will come in periods of drought such as Ontario experienced over so much of its land area in 1963.

The third and no less important programme in watershed development will be the acquisition and retention of land at the head waters of our rivers and major streams to improve vegetative cover for ground water recharge. The many swamps and marshlands of Ontario which heretofore have been considered by many as nonessential or of low economic value, will be of primary importance. Sub-marginal agricultural land found also at the head waters of our rivers, so often considered a waste in our economy, will be brought into useful participation in the province's natural resource development and will be closely related and bear economic importance to our residential and industrial water requirements.

So that no area of Ontario will be deprived of these advantageous programmes, the government will give consideration to enter into agreements with any area of sufficient size lying outside organized conservation authorities. It will be the intention to work with municipal councils, to bring about an over-all water development programme in these areas.

In addition, ways will be sought to work in close co-operation with rural and urban residents so that full expression of their need in a water management programme can be effectively considered by municipal and provincial bodies.

There is at present considerable legislation affecting a water development programme. Two examples I have mentioned previously—The Conservation Authorities Act and The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act. A third is The Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act of Ontario, passed at the 1962-1963 session of this Legislature. In addition, there exists two Acts of the Parliament of Canada—The Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act administered by the water resources branch of the federal Department of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources, and The Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act at present administered by the federal Department of Agriculture. Both of these federal Acts are designed to complement resource management programmes, similar to those under way or being contemplated in Ontario today. It will be the policy of the government through this new department to make use of the financial resources available through these Acts, and to formulate continuing programmes with beneficial intent under ARDA legislation. Finally, it will be our aim also to work in the very closest of co-operation with the present ARDA directorate of Ontario.

Should the need arise, the government will establish an Ontario water resources management council. One of the terms of reference for this council will be to assist in the total management of the money and manpower resources, federally, provincially and municipally.

It is the intention of the Ontario government to commence this programme in the coming fiscal year and to support it with monies which this Legislature will be asked to approve in due course. The monies to which I refer will be in addition to those required for bringing together the normal programmes of the existing agencies in the new department.

This department also foresees the need to work in complete co-operation, without overlap, with those officials of other departments of the Ontario government concerned with our major and established natural resources.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Speaker, I want to make some remarks in support of the principle of the bill that is before the House, but before I make these remarks, I want to pay my respects to you, sir, and to your deputy and to offer my congratulations on your appointment to the high office of Speaker.

It has been my privilege to sit in the Legislature for some years. I have always valued your wise counsel and your efforts to be fair, and I am sure that the Legislature is in good hands with you and your deputy occupying the Speaker's chair.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the government on this forward step, a step that I believe will be regarded as a milestone in the development of our resources and in the management of the same.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): You did not think that at election time.

Mr. Root: The creation of this department makes it possible for the government to co-ordinate the programmes of various groups and organizations—groups and organizations that are working with the same objective: the wise use of the valuable resources with which Ontario has been richly endowed.

Mr. Speaker, I am by nature a conservationist. One of the reasons that I am keenly interested in the matter of conservation is the fact that my riding of Wellington-Dufferin is known as the highlands of Ontario. Situated in my riding is the height of land in the township of Melancthon, just northeast of Dundalk where the elevation is at some points over 1,750 feet above sea level.

Some of the early conservation efforts in the province were made in the area that I have the honour to represent. I am referring to the development of the Shand Dam and the creation of the Belwood Lake on the upper waters of the Grand River. This project was carried out by the Grand River Commission and it was the first major flood control project in the province. This was designed for flood control and to maintain constant flow in the Grand during the summer months.

Another project of a similar nature was the damming of the Luther Marsh area. Previous to the erection of the dam, efforts were made to drain the marsh, but it was found that this effort was going contrary to the best interests of the area, and a dam was constructed creating a large storage lake, which is of perhaps much more value to the economy of the Grand River basin and to the province of Ontario than the draining of the marsh would have been. Perhaps through this new department we should take a good look at our policies re draining wetlands in areas where ground water tables are falling.

Later, a third large flood control dam was erected at Glen Allan known as the Conestogo Dam. I mention these three projects that have been carried out by the Grand River Commission, which is one of the original conservation bodies in the province as far as water is concerned. Since these reservoirs have been constructed in the riding I have the honour to represent, I am very much aware of the importance of conservation practice.

Water has played a key role in Ontario's development to date and I suggest it is the key to the future development and expansion of our province. A map of Ontario indicates that we have a tremendous supply of surface water lying on our borders and within our boundaries.

As Ontario developed, water provided the main traffic arteries. Water was the main source of power, turning the wheels of the early industries. Water, because it was in such abundance and because nature has its own methods of purifying water, was convenient for the disposal of wastes. The waters of Ontario, in addition to providing traffic arteries, sources of power and convenient areas for the disposal of waste, provided the water for domestic use, for agriculture, for industry, fish, wildlife and recreation.

Water is still used in ever-increasing quantities for all of these purposes. We think of the Seaway, which carries the shipping of the world into the centre of the North American continent. We think of the great power developments that have been brought into being by Ontario Hydro, power to turn the wheels of industry. We think of our lakes, rivers and streams, receiving the treated or untreated waste of a domestic population that has grown from about four million to approximately 6.5 million in the last 20 years. The same lakes, rivers and streams are receiving the wastes of the major industrial developments in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if we are going to feed our rapidly expanding population, agriculture is similarly going to expand its flocks and herds, and will be turning more and more to irrigation to produce more produce from the same or even a lesser number of acres.

Our tourist industry brings to the province of Ontario millions of people annually. They come to our lakes and our resorts and they pour hundreds of millions of dollars into our economy. If we do not maintain suitable water for fish, wildlife and recreation, this industry will decline instead of expand.

I mention these facts to indicate to the Legislature the importance of water to our economy.

Let me also remind you of several things that are basic. With all of our growth and expansion, and the tremendous increase in the use of water, there has been no increase in our source of water, which is precipitation, rain and snow. In fact, in recent years, in some parts of Ontario, precipitation has been away below normal. For example, the average annual precipitation in inches in the Guelph area for a 44-year period was 29.26 inches. In 1963, the precipitation in the same area was only 22.07 inches, or a decrease of 7.19 inches.

Another example is the London area where the average rainfall in a 54-year period was 38.17 inches. That is the annual rainfall. In 1963, the rainfall in the London area was only 21.02 inches, or 17.15 inches below the average. I might say that for the four-year period between 1960 and 1963 in the London area the average rainfall was only 29.48 inches, or 8.69 inches below normal, and for a six-year period the average rainfall was only 30.75 inches, or 7.42 inches below normal.

Another example is the Chatham area. There, the average annual precipitation in inches over a 60-year period was 29.19 inches. In 1963, the rainfall in the Chatham area was only 20.72 inches, or a deficiency of 8.47 inches.

Mr. Speaker, when you realize that every inch of rainfall amounts to 14.5 million gallons of water per square mile, or approximately 23,000 gallons per acre, you can realize what effect this drop in precipitation has had in the areas where rainfall has been short for one or more years.

At the same time, we should not panic because there has been a variation from year to year in the amount of precipitation. We should keep in mind that we have tremendous quantities of water that are running off every year. For example, in Ontario, the average annual run-off in inches is 11.2 inches, which is equal to 160 million gallons of water per square mile. This tremendous quantity of water, if wisely managed, can be a tremendous asset to the economy of our province.

Mr. Speaker, with the tremendous increase in agricultural production that is keeping pace with our expanding population—and we will have to keep pace if we are to feed our population and not import necessary food-stuffs—we should keep in mind that there are no more fertile acres in the province. In fact, many acres of good land are disappearing under urban sprawl, under highways, and other projects that we feel are important to our way of life. Having said this, I would remind you that increased production will depend in the main on better farm practices, and on water for irrigation.

Mr. Speaker, let me give you some indication of what is happening in this matter of irrigation. To give you some idea of what is taking place in the province I could remind you that, I believe it was in 1960-61, legislation was passed making it necessary for people using more than 10,000 gallons of water per day for irrigation to secure permits from the Ontario Water Resources Commission.

In the first year, I believe some three permits were issued, the next year, something like 37, and in 1963, or at the present time, a total of 2,851 permits for the taking of water for irrigation purposes have been issued. This will give you some idea of the rapid increase in the number of people who are using water for irrigation purposes.

The total authorized taking of water for irrigation this year was 855 million gallons of water per day. I have been advised by farmers who are using water for irrigation that in a dry year, irrigation could mean the difference between a crop and no crop for the tobacco farmer.

I have been advised that water for irrigation in a dry year could mean the difference of harvesting a crop of potatoes at 200 bags to the acre, or increasing it to 400.

With these facts known, it is only natural to assume that we will see a continued expansion with regard to irrigation for farming purposes of all kinds if we are to keep up our production on the same numbers of acres.

Mr. Speaker, we are aware that industries require tremendous quantities of suitable water. I have been told that it takes from 50,000 to 80,000 gallons of water to make one ton of paper, and I think we are all aware that we have mills in this province that are producing up to 1,000 tons of paper per day.

I have been told that it takes 100,000 gallons of water to produce a ton of steel; 70,000 gallons to produce a ton of beet sugar. It takes great quantities of water to produce a gallon of gasoline. It takes hundreds of thousands of gallons of water to produce a ton of rubber.

It is estimated that the average consumption of water per person, that is the average over rural and urban, amounts to about 100 gallons per day.

Mr. Speaker, I give these statistics to indicate the importance of water to all phases of our economy. This leads to the next question: how do we secure sufficient quantities of suitable water to ensure continued growth and development?

I suggest that our objectives can be achieved by sound conservation practices. We can build up our ground water table and have adequate supplies of water available in most parts of our province by checking and storing the run-off of the water that has been purified by the organisms in the water itself and by evaporation or distillation, water that nature has carried inland and deposited on the ground where it filters into the underground aquifers or reservoirs which, when filled to capacity, overflow in springs and running streams of pure water.

I have already given some statistics showing the annual run-off in Ontario, run-off that is equal to 160 million gallons of water per square mile. I have mentioned the three reservoirs that were constructed on the head waters of the Grand River in my own area. In addition to the three flood control and storage dams that have been built by the Grand River commission, a number of surveys have been carried out by the Grand River authorities and the commission. I believe 13 major sites have been considered that, if the dams were constructed, would store something like 82 billion gallons of water. This water, if used only once, would provide 100 gallons of water per day for some 2.25 million people.

What has been done on the Grand has been done by many of the conservation authorities.

I have records of over 100 sites that have been surveyed by various authorities. If the dams are built and the reservoirs were filled once, the sites that have already been surveyed would store enough water, if used once, to supply approximately six million people with 100 gallons of water each per day and this would only be part of the run-off.

In addition to the water that would be available in the reservoirs, these reservoirs have a tendency to recharge the underground water reservoirs and bring up to normal the ground water tables.

Under the ARDA programme and under the conservation authorities we could be building many farm ponds. Some of the authorities have done a lot of this type of work, but when we think of the potential that is available in the 160 million gallons per square mile that is running off, I think we realize that we can do a lot towards building up ground water tables where they may be falling by the construction not only of large reservoirs, but by the construction of farm ponds and smaller reservoirs and recreation lakes.

Ground water is the most generally and readily available, and in most cases is the safest water that one could use. And I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that if an emergency were to develop such as nuclear war or excessive radioactive fallout, ground water would no doubt be the only large source of safe water. In the interests of our people, and in the future of our province, I think we should keep that in mind and do everything in our power to build up the ground water reserves in the province.

Where it is not possible to secure sufficient ground water or not possible to build suitable reservoirs, then we could build pipe lines to bring water from the lakes or reservoirs or sources of ground water to the areas that are in need of supplementing their ground water supplies.

Mr. Speaker, another phase of the programme that has been pursued by the Ontario Water Resources Commission in its efforts to provide suitable water for all phases of our economy in recent years has been the all-out drive to bring pollution under control where pollution may exist.

With Ontario going through the greatest period of expansion and development that we have ever witnessed in our history, a period of expansion and development that has not been equalled in any other part of Canada, this programme has won the commendation of many other jurisdictions and people interested in preserving our waters for re-use.

Since the commission's programme went into effect, approximately $900 million has been spent by the commission and by municipalities with commission approval, to supply suitable water and to bring pollution under control in the province.

The programme to control pollution, whether it is domestic or industrial, will continue as long as pollution exists.

Mr. Speaker, you might want to ask me why do I feel that the creation of The Department of Energy and Resources Management is an important step. I feel that it is important because it brings together under one Minister the various groups and organizations that are working with a common purpose, namely, the wise use of water for the benefit of our people and the development of adequate supplies of water in the areas where shortages may develop from time to time.

The Ontario Hydro, reporting through the Minister of this department, has constructed many large reservoirs that store tremendous quantities of water.

The conservation commission and authorities have developed various types of projects that play their part in the building up of the ground water reserves and in restoring water levels. We think of their construction of some reservoirs and of the surveys they have made of many areas that are suitable for reservoirs.

Some of the authorities have constructed numerous farm ponds and other larger ponds or lakes that can be used for recreation purposes. They carry out their reforestation programmes. All of these projects help to build up and restore water tables. I think we are all aware that the authorities operate on a regional basis. Their programmes are related to their regional budget and the voting power of the member municipalities.

They have their programmes for land use. These bodies will be reporting through the same Minister as the Ontario Hydro.

The Ontario Water Resources Commission will report to the Legislature through the same Minister. I have told you, sir, something about our programme to control pollution and to provide suitable water for the various municipalities. With provincial financing we are in a position to help in the construction of reservoirs where reservoirs may be needed.

We have our division of sanitary engineers in the Ontario Water Resources Commission, we have our branch that carries on research programmes, we have laboratory facilities that will be available for various groups; we have our division of construction that is capable of carrying out construction programmes and our division of plant operations that is in a position to operate projects after they have been developed. These are but a few of the facilities that have been provided by the various organizations that will be reporting through, and that make up part of, The Department of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. Speaker, with all of these groups working together, it will be easier to co-ordinate the policies that are of a provincial nature with more efficiency and more economy than if they are handled at the merely regional level.

With the co-ordination of programmes it will be possible to eliminate duplication in the fields of research, surveys and construction.

Mr. Speaker, with this co-ordination that will come under this new department it will be possible to adopt a better system of priorities with regard to the areas of construction and the multiple use of reservoirs that may be developed in the days that lie ahead.

At the present time, there has been an emergency in southwestern Ontario with regard to adequate supplies of water. This has been brought about largely because of factors over which we have no control, and I am referring to the lack of precipitation, in the area.

Let me repeat what I said earlier in my remarks. In 1963, the precipitation in the London area was 17.1 inches below normal. Keep in mind that every inch of rain adds up to 14.5 million gallons of water per square mile. This situation has not only existed this year, but over a six-year period. The precipitation in the London area has been 7.42 inches below normal, annually. Multiply that by six, and you come up with a figure of 44.5 inches deficiency in rainfall in that part in the past six years. Translate that into gallons of water, and you will find that in the London area, in the past six years, the deficiency has amounted to some 645 million gallons of water per square mile or more than one million gallons per acre.

Mr. Speaker, the river authorities have done a tremendous job in the field of conservation, but when an emergency of this kind develops in one part of the province, in my opinion it is beyond the scope of any one river authority to deal with, and can be best dealt with at the provincial level. So,

Mr. Speaker, I feel that with this new department able to co-ordinate the work of all the various bodies such as the authorities, the Ontario Water Resources Commission, and able to work with The Department of Agriculture through the ARDA programme, much can be done with regard to solving these emergency conditions and to develop long-range policies.

Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that if we are going to develop our water resources to keep pace with an expanding economy and to supply water for the many uses for which water is needed, we must establish a system of priority. We must put ourselves in a position to move into the areas where there is need of development and expansion of the water resources and the conservation of water today that is running off into the lakes, water that could be stored or could recharge our ground water systems.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that priorities must be established, and this can best be done at the provincial level for the use of the water that may be impounded in reservoirs. I think of the need of water for domestic use, the need of water for industrial use. I think of the need of controlling flooding. Large reservoirs can control flood waters and can provide water for domestic and industrial use.

Mr. Speaker, when we think of the tremendous expansion of population and industry, and the great amount of wastes that people and industry create, we must have water available to maintain a constant flow in streams, if our inland towns and cities are to develop and have some method of disposing of their sewage.

When sewage leaves a treatment plant, if it is chlorinated, many organisms in the water will have been destroyed. If water is to come back and be fit to be used farther downstream, it is very necessary that we have adequate amounts of good water for the dilution of sewage effluent in our streams, rivers and lakes. As our flocks and herds expand and as we increase production by irrigation, we must have water in the areas where irrigation practices are carried out.

Wherever practical, water in reservoirs could be used for recreation purposes until it was needed for purposes that might be higher on the priority list. With thousands of fresh water lakes in Ontario, recreation should not take over the available water where available water is limited. Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Water Resources Commission has been carrying out extensive surveys that indicate there are areas in the province where ground water is not as readily available as in some other areas. These are areas that might be high on the priority list for the construction of surface reservoirs and farm ponds.

There are other areas where irrigation is already being practised extensively, such as the tobacco-growing areas and the fruit and market gardening areas. These areas are spotted here and there in various parts of the province. I mentioned earlier in my remarks that this year there were more than 2,800 permits issued for irrigation purposes. I could tell you that 891 of these permits were in the Big Creek area, 389 in the Big Otter Creek area, 262 in the Grand River basin, 108 in the Lynn River Basin, and 121 up in the Nottawasaga River basin. You find these areas where water is needed for irrigation, scattered here and there in various parts of the province.

The same is true of areas that would benefit from reservoirs supplying water for dilution of sewage effluent, and for water supplies. I might mention that areas that could benefit from increased flow in streams and constant flow throughout the year are the areas north of Metropolitan Toronto, and in the Brampton, Georgetown and Streetsville areas. Another area that could benefit from increased stream flow is the Grand River system from Elora south to Brantford. I have mentioned earlier in my remarks that some 13 reservoir sites have been surveyed in that area. Three dams have been constructed. The construction of additional dams will go a long way toward correcting the problem in that particular area.

Another area that could benefit from reservoirs is the Norfolk area, where I mentioned many permits are out for tobacco irrigation. I have been told that in three days of the spring run-off in the Big Creek area, enough water goes into the lake to irrigate all the tobacco in Norfolk for 13 years. Another area that could benefit from increased flow from reservoirs is the area along the Thames, from north of London, on down to Chatham.

I have brought these areas to the attention of the House to indicate why I feel that if we are going to make wise use of the water that is available, if properly managed it can be best handled by setting up priorities and allocating the necessary works to the various bodies and organizations that are carrying out projects that fit into the programme that was enunciated in the Throne Speech.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to give to the hon. members some information or statistics re the importance of supplying water, perhaps from reservoirs, to maintain stream flow, and for the dilution of sewage effluent in some of the areas that I have mentioned. For example, in the Toronto area, and this includes Streetsville, Port Credit, Ajax and Oakville, there has been a population growth in 1951 to 1961 that amounted to more than 50 per cent, a growth of from 1,210,000 to 1,824,000. The town of Brampton in 1951 had a population of 8,400, and in 1961 it had 18,500, or a growth of 120 per cent.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That is where that fine fellow the hon. Minister of Education comes from.

Hon. W. C. Davis (Minister of Education): Yes, sir.

Mr. Root: The Kitchener-Waterloo area, and this includes Galt, Hespeler and Ayr: In 1951 there were 107,000 people. By 1961 that population had grown to 154,900, or 44 per cent. The London area, which includes London township and Westminster township, in 1951 had 129,000, and in 1961, 181,300, or a 40 per cent gain. Chatham in 1951 had 21,200, and in 1961 29,800.

I think these figures indicate why it is important to increase the flow of water in the streams and rivers in these areas. This can be accomplished by the erection of storage reservoirs and by setting up priorities for the use of the water from the reservoirs.

Mr. Speaker, I have talked perhaps longer than I should have on the principle of this bill, but I do feel that the setting up of this Department of Energy and Resources Management is a great forward step, since it brings into one area, co-ordinated under one Minister, all of the various bodies that have been endeavouring, within the limits of their authority, to provide suitable and adequate amounts of water to take care of all of our needs.

There is no doubt in my mind that with the amount of precipitation we have in Ontario, and with the erection of reservoirs where it is feasible and economical to erect reservoirs, with the construction of farm ponds and larger ponds holding back some of the 160 million gallons of water per square mile that run off annually in Ontario, it will be possible for us to supply the future needs of Ontario for many years to come.

If there are areas where it is not practical or economical to build the necessary reservoirs, then we have the larger lake system from which water can be piped. The Ontario

Water Resources Commission has already constructed a number of lines to serve various municipalities. For example, a pipe line was built to Harrow; another pipe line to Dunnville; a third line to Watford, Wyoming and Plympton townships, taking water from the Petrolia pipe line. The largest project to date is the union system that serves the towns of Leamington and Essex, and the townships of Maidstone, Mersea, Gosfield North and Gosfield South. We are about ready to call tenders to expand this system to the township of Rochester.

Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude by saying that, in my opinion, sound policies can be developed through this department, which will co-ordinate many groups and organizations that are dedicated to the welfare and health of our people, and to the prosperity and the continued expansion and development of our province. I am sure that all hon. members of this Legislature will want to support this bill.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin has convinced those of us on this side of the House at least that we should now be in favour of water. He has taken an hour to do it and he has done it in the speech that usually he reserves for the estimates when the Ontario Water Resources Commission comes forward at the appropriate time.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister before him spent some considerable time in telling us about water resources and about conservation authorities.

Now I have read this bill through and I have had ample opportunity listening to those two speeches to read it through perhaps 15 or 20 times. It is a very short bill, it runs only a page and a quarter and through some six sections. And as carefully as I have looked in the bill, I have found no reference either to water resources or to conservation authorities.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, what really is the purpose lying behind these wonderful orations that we have heard this afternoon. The government must feel that it has a very bad case to sell and it sold it very badly this afternoon. Its record over the past 20 years, that required so much explanation by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin, would certainly indicate that there is a lot that has to be done that has not been done.

Mr. Speaker, the government has been playing a little game called button, button, who's got the commission, because these commissions have bounced about from department to department for no explainable reason over the past few years. For instance, the conservation authority has been in the old Department of Planning and Development, then it moved into Municipal Affairs, then it had a short stay in Lands and Forests; now it is going to an old department with a new name, or a new department with an old name—Energy and Resources Management. And listen as I might this afternoon I can see no reason for it.

Water resources has had a similar history. It has been bounced around from time to time as the ping-pong ball bounces backwards and forwards, and we, at least, on this side of the House, have been completely unable to follow what logic there is in the thinking of the government.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, my colleague from Wellington South, advises me that during the recent campaign which concluded last September, he was making some intelligent suggestions about the handling of these commissions and unifying them into one department. He further advises me, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) came into his riding—and I think this is important—the hon. Prime Minister came into his riding some time in the month of September and indicated there was no necessity for these changes that the hon. member for Wellington South was advocating. What has caused the change of heart?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Worton: Oh, yes, he did!

Mr. Singer: Yes, indeed. We will get the hon. member for Wellington South to recite chapter and verse what happened. The hon. member for Wellington South is an honourable gentleman, he said the hon. Prime Minister came into his riding and said there was no necessity for this type of change, as recently as last September.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I do not recall saying that, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps the hon. member for Wellington South would give me the document—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The tea was too strong!

Mr. Singer: Well, that matter will take care of itself.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon my colleague, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), was talking about the advisability of having a Glassco type commission investigate government and administration in the province of Ontario. Surely the jumping about that the government is doing this afternoon in connection with these two commissions provides no better possible argument for the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Bruce. The government obviously cannot make up its mind from day to day or week to week, from month to month or year to year, in which direction it is prepared to move.

About a year ago, when the estimates of The Department of Municipal Affairs were brought forward, and at that time the water resources commission was the responsibility of The Department of Municipal Affairs, I spent some time in analyzing the growth factors in their personnel. I have forgotten the figures—they do not come readily to mind—but it seems to me they have expanded by many hundreds of employees in the very short time that this commission has been in existence.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): I would draw to the attention of the hon. member that, of course, that was inevitable as the great number of projects were completed and placed into operation. We have to have people to operate them.

Mr. Singer: Well, if the hon. Minister will not get too excited too quickly, I will make the point that I started on.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: May I also correct the hon. member on something else? He was referring to the conservation authorities branch a while ago—we might just as well get it straight. He said that the conservation authorities branch was started in The Department of Planning and Development and then went to Municipal Affairs and then to Lands and Forests. The hon. member's information is incorrect. It went from Planning and Development to Lands and Forests.

Mr. Singer: It paused on the way by. Did it not pause on the way by in The Department of Municipal Affairs?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: It did not pause.

Mr. Singer: Well, I am glad to have this clarification. I made a mistake, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize for having made a mistake. Instead of going through four departments, it has gone through only three departments. I am sure the House will bear with me in this grievous error that I have just committed.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): It may get to The Department of Municipal Affairs yet.

Mr. Singer: The point, Mr. Speaker, that I was about to make, that apparently gets the hon. Minister so excited, is that as soon as you remove this rapidly expanding commission away from Municipal Affairs you are bound to run into trouble. This government seems more and more determined every day to remove things from the control and the investigation and inspection of this House. The logical thing, surely, Mr. Speaker, would be to have water resources in Municipal Affairs where it can work in immediate conjunction with the control and organization of this department. The obvious thing reasonably, Mr. Speaker, would seem to me, to have water resources as a branch and not as a commission, as a branch of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Notwithstanding all of the high-sounding phrases that came from the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin, sir, we know that water resources comes into municipalities which have serious problems with water and drainage and sewage and that sort of thing. We also know that the substantial problem is the financing. The municipalities need more water supply, need more sewage supply, so that they can attract more assessment, so that they can expand. The problem has been, and we still have not had an answer to it, the municipal board says unless you have more assessment we are not going to give you any more money, we are not going to let you borrow any more. So along the way, we are now making this more difficult to bring these two groups together, we are making it much more difficult by removing it into this Energy Resources Management Department.

In the question of conservation, the substantial dealing of the conservation authority—at least in southern Ontario and there may be a different argument that would apply to northern Ontario—but at least in southern Ontario it is with municipal councils. We are setting up a new empire here which can only cause very substantial confusion in the management of municipalities. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it makes good common sense that the municipal affairs of our province should be in one department at least, responsible to one Minister and under the control or direction of his civil servants. Surely it makes good sense and reason when water resources, or a water department as I would suggest, of The Department of Municipal Affairs, has a municipal problem, that because of all the knowledge and all the great training that the civil servants in The Department of Municipal Affairs have, they can best deal with the municipal councils.

It's the same thing with sewage problems and the same thing with conservation authorities. Surely where it is important that there be complicated expropriations and overall planning, and when this infringes on jurisdictions of various municipalities, one against the other, it makes good sense that all of these responsibilities should gather together in one department and under one jurisdiction and under the direction of one Minister who will come into the House and report.

But there has been a new tendency with this government, and I suppose this is part of the new image this government has created, that it wants the House to know less and less of what is going on. Apparently it does not want these things to be discussed and questioned and criticized in this House, and so we are getting more commissions, bigger commissions, spending more amounts of public money and treated in such a fragmentary way that it is impossible to know whether there is any reasonable co-ordination in these fields or not.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I would inform the hon. member that the water resources commission will, as always, appear before the committee on commissions. This is an old ploy to try to paint us as the villains who hide everything under the table and will not allow anybody to know what the government is doing.

We have two hon. members here who are on the water resources commission, who take part in the debates and explain what the commission is doing. The commission will appear before the committee on government commissions.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a substantial difference. The hon. Prime Minister gets up and soothes the troubled waters and spreads his palms quietly over the front of his desk and says this is an old ploy used only to embarrass the government.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: You have never scored with it, either.

Mr. Singer: The hon. members of this House know full well that there is a real difference between setting aside a commission that appears for a couple of hours in a committee room downstairs once a year, which does not really allow the proper investigation of its affairs to the hon. members of this House, and having it responsible and part of a department so that it can be properly dealt with during the normal proceedings of this House. Yesterday morning, the head of the racing commission appeared for a few hours before the committee on commissions. The head of the racing commission is a very astute gentleman, and he was able, in a couple of hours, to make a nice little speech which got him useful publicity and painted the government in a pleasant light. The head of the liquor licensing commission does this and heads of half a dozen other commissions. The government, to give it credit, appoints very clever men on these commissions and they handle their two-hour appearance before the committee in a very exemplary fashion. But the fashion is so exemplary, so glib, that the hon. members of this House are unable to get reasonable information—the information they would be entitled to get if these commissions became departments or sub-departments of a Cabinet portfolio and if they were a part of the regular inquiry of this House.

Sir, I have the information now that the hon. Prime Minister queried a few moments ago, and I am quoting now from the Guelph Mercury of September 6, 1963. There is a paragraph on the second front page, under a heading:

ONTARIO PREMIER CONFIDENT
PARTY RECORD IS SUFFICIENT

Opposing a suggestion made recently by MPP Harry Worton that the conservation of natural resources warranted the setting up of a separate provincial department, he—the Prime Minister—felt such a step was not needed.

As I say, if the hon. Prime Minister felt—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I confirm that, I still feel that way.

Mr. Singer: Well, if he felt on September 6 that such a step was not needed and he confirms it now, what is he doing this afternoon? What is the purpose of this bill? I do not know if the hon. Prime Minister read the bill. I thought I made that clear at the beginning of my remarks. I did read the bill and I read it carefully many times while the hon. Minister of Energy Resources and the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin were speaking. There is no mention there of water resources and there is no mention in there of conservation authorities, and yet the two of them saw fit to take up a substantial amount of time this afternoon explaining why this was a great thing.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It is a great thing.

Mr. Singer: Well, I am certain it is a great thing. It must be a great thing this afternoon, but they are not too convinced of it. That is why they had to run two such long speeches on it, and they were not awfully convinced of it on September 6, at least the hon. Prime Minister was not convinced of it on September 6.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: You can read and understand it.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Well, look who is talking.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the tempers of some of the hon. members on the front benches are so easily aroused this afternoon, and it only indicates more convincingly than ever that they are not at all sure of what they are doing in this regard.

The question of land planning is a most important problem facing the province of Ontario. I would like any one of the hon. Ministers—the hon. Minister who brought this bill in, perhaps the hon. Prime Minister, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs—to get up and explain to this House how successfully land planning is going to be carried on in Ontario when the responsibility for planning is with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the very important part of planning dealing with conservation and the use of water resources is set into yet another department. This is the crux of the problem and there is no answer for this, Mr. Speaker, and the government knows it.

I suppose having created a new Minister they have got to give him something to get up and make a speech about. This is the only answer that I can understand. They have got to give him a couple of commissions that he is not going to have very much to do with, so that once a year he can get up and make a speech saying the water resources commission is important and conservation authorities are important. Certainly they are important. The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin convinced us beyond any doubt that we are in favour of water. But, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to get some co-ordination of our planning, then surely to goodness all of these agencies of government, all of these arms of government must be in charge of one Minister for a considerable enough period of time that we are going to make some advances.

The depredations on the Niagara fruit belt are well known to all of us, and they are going to continue again because there has been no co-ordination in government. What has been added here this afternoon, I do not know. This is a further excuse for inaction.

To get down to this business properly, the government should accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for Bruce, Mr. Speaker, because obviously it is not able to do it for itself, and let us get a Glassco-type commission to determine how these things should be run. Let us have a clear research into the methods of conducting government and not play this continual ping-pong game, batting a commission from one Minister to the other.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there is obviously some validity in the basic contention of the hon. member for Downsview that many of these commissions have been shuffled around as though they were the little wooden plugs on the shuffleboard. But, I must confess that somewhere along the way, I began to lose the logic of the argument that he was advancing. I would think that the kind of bringing together of these elements, that obviously have something to do with resources, within one department, might bring an end to the shuffling that has gone on in the past. It may well be that other things, such as land which could be defined as a resource, could conceivably be brought under this department, too, but it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the problem is this: You name it, and it could be in some fashion or other described as a resource. You could end up with everything going to this department and it seems to me that this is just carrying the argument to a point of absurdity.

The hon. member for Downsview, for example, speaks of the need for a Glassco commission. I do not know what kind of a Glassco commission he wants. We had a commission that did essentially the job of the Glassco commission on this government—a man by the name of Walter Gordon. We had the report and we had a select committee that looked into that report. Unfortunately, the benefits of that select committee were never brought back to this House because it was under the chairmanship, sir, of a Minister of the Crown who was deeply preoccupied with so many other things that the committee just disintegrated and disappeared.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Which side are you on?

Mr. MacDonald: I am dealing with some facts and if the facts place me here, then I will support the Opposition, but if the facts place me there, then I will support the government side.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure it is elementary, but apparently it was beyond the capacity of the hon. gentleman who has interjected there. In other words, I think we have had the Glasco commission investigation. Conceivably, there are some more recommendations of that that should be implemented, but I should like to come back to the issue that is under debate here this afternoon.

It seems to me the proposition of expanding the department that was The Department of Energy Resources into a Department of Energy and Resources Management is obviously the kind of thing that we should have had many years ago, Mr. Speaker. The suggestion of the hon. member for Downsview that water resources, for example, should never be taken away from The Department of Municipal Affairs—well, sure, it will have relationship to municipalities but, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that water resources are going to have relationship to a lot of things beyond municipalities. Therefore there is a case for lumping it together with resources and their management, from which we need a much more co-ordinated approach across this province.

On the basic principle of this bill, we approve it. I must say, Mr. Speaker, before I go any further, that I am a little puzzled as to what are the limits of the debate this afternoon. Here I find myself somewhat in the position of the hon. member for Downsview. We have ranged so far in the hon. Minister's survey of the activity of his department and in that dissertation by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin, sir, that I think you would find yourself a little hard put to call anything out of order this afternoon. However, I will try to exercise a little self-discipline and deal with the principles of the bill and the relationship of resources to it.

May I, at the outset, Mr. Speaker, say this. There was one omission, unless I missed some comment of the hon. Minister, that puzzles me. Surely one of the major resources in this province is Hydro, and I am curious to know whether, for example, this is the Minister through whom Hydro is going to report to this House now? He nods his head affirmatively; well, fine. I think there is logic in this. Maybe we will get the Siamese twins up there to divide the responsibilities.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): I am going to speak next.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member for Muskoka is going to speak next. Fine!

Well, clearly, to have left Hydro as a public corporation and all its influence and control over a basic resource of this province and the need for co-ordinating that with other forms of resources, to have left it out of this department would have been a serious mistake and I appreciate the hon. Minister's nodding to the effect that it is included.

Now let me comment, for example, with regard to two of the commissions that are now coming under this new department, or this enlarged department. First, the case of the Ontario Northland Railway. I would hope that the hon. Minister is taking over the ONR and that in some fashion or other he can remind himself, and never forget it, that the ONR is a public commission and not a private business. Now this he conceded in answer to a question from the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) a day or so ago—that the ONR is not an ordinary business.

I suggest to the hon. Minister that there is something else that flows from the fact that this is a public commission, and that is if this commission comes to the conclusion that there are changed financial factors in the operation of the ONR that would make it necessary for it to seriously alter the operations of the railway, as now appears to be evident, that it becomes the responsibility, in fact I think it would be common sense from the point of view of public relations, for the hon. Minister, or for the ONR itself, to publicly proclaim and have some opportunity for discussion of this kind of a development instead of what apparently has happened.

As I understand it, what has happened is that the people throughout the whole of northeastern Ontario, from North Bay through to Moosonee, have suddenly been faced, first with rumours, and then announcement confirming them. They are faced with a fait accompli which is going to seriously affect the whole economy of that part of the province.

I want to suggest that, as a public corporation now coming under a Minister, that this is not the way to operate.

Indeed I would go one step further and then leave it for the appropriate debate when the ONR comes up under the estimates of the department. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that just as the hon. Minister said a couple of days ago that the ONR is not a regular business, that it is a development railway, that it is serving a public need, its sole criterion of operations is not the balance sheet, that I would like to have the hon. Minister make a case as to whether this principle has really guided some of the decisions that have been made.

When you get up into northeastern Ontario, and find now, for example, that passenger service is going to disappear and many people are going to be shifted onto buses, this is the kind of thing that is going to alter, perhaps even destroy, a lot of the convenience of travelling up there as we have experienced it in the past. I suggest that there should have been much more public discussion rather than announcements from appropriate sources, instead of the ONR acting as if it were a private corporation and all it has to do is say this is what our plan is, we have done it, and whether you like it or not you have to live with it. That is not the way a public corporation should operate.

Now on the instance of water resources. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Downsview at one point in his case said that the government had spent so much time talking about water resources that it almost suggested that there was a guilty conscience, that it thought it had a bad record to sell. I think in this connection he has a valid point. Indeed, ten years ago we had a select committee in this province that studied the whole question of resources. They brought in a very comprehensive report and one of the most startling and alarming features of that report was the whole problem of the impending shortage of water and the effect it would have upon the economy of the province of Ontario.

If I recall correctly, Mr. Speaker, in this report it stated that there was hardly a city in southern Ontario whose future industrial expansion was not pretty seriously limited by the shortage of water. As a result of that, some two or three years later—I have forgotten the exact year in which the water resources commission was established—this new body came into being, to come to grips with the problem. Last fall we had an emergency, as the House has just been reminded, an emergency which was concentrated in the agricultural area. Farmers' wells went dry, there was no water to water their cattle and so the government had to take emergency measures.

But it is interesting that when the government brings in, or at least unveiled its prospective programme in the Throne Speech, it acknowledged that the new tackling of the water resources problem was not concentrated solely on the agricultural front, it was also going to bear on the industrial front. Rather slyly they concede that the clear warning of a select committee ten years ago —of the desperate shortage of water and the restrictions that this was placing upon industrial expansion—has not really been met by the water resources commission. And now, belatedly, the government is going to try to co-ordinate the commission with other aspects of this new department's work—with municipalities and conservation areas to really do something about the problem.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn now to other aspects within this department's concern and jurisdiction, and comment on them in terms of the future and the kind of jobs that I think this department should do.

The first is that of natural gas. I think we in this province should take cognizance of the fact that, if my information is correct, within about two years' time the capacity of the trans-Canada pipeline bringing gas down from western Canada is going to be completely exhausted. They will not be able to build up pressure and put any more gas through a single line. In other words, Mr. Speaker, they are going to be forced to loop this line.

There is a considerable body of opinion that since we have only one line wholly on Canadian soil and this has assured us of the possibility of industrial development through the use of gas in northern Ontario, that there is no sense in looping the old line. Rather there would be greater sense in bringing the new line from western Canada, looped as far as they could throughout the prairies but then to cut south of Lake Superior, coming to Canada in the Sarnia area and lead directly, Mr. Speaker, into one of the incomparable resources that we have in this province and that we, I submit, are toying with instead of using it in a co-ordinated fashion to its full potential.

I am referring to the fact that in the Lambton area we have underground storage areas, almost without parallel in the world. Indeed I think I am wrong, they are without parallel in the world in terms of their capacity to hold gas with no leakage. You can put gas in and I think you can take out roughly 99 per cent of it, so that there is virtually no loss. They have a capacity that used to be, according to figures that I was getting years ago, 100 billion cubic feet. Now it is estimated the capacity is in the range of 125 to 130 billion cubic feet.

In other words, if we were to bring a pipeline from western Canada and it were tapped directly into this capacity of 130 billion cubic feet, some of which is now in the hands of Union, some of which has been or is going to be given, I would judge, into the hands of this new company, Tecumseh, a subsidiary of the Imperial Oil and the Consumers' Gas, then we would be able to use the full potential of this storage area.

We would be able to bring gas down in an off-peak period when it is cheaper. We would be able to store it in the areas, we would be able to take it out of these storage areas into the distribution system in southern Ontario during the peak period.

Mr. Speaker, I just mention this in passing, but here is one of the tragedies of the past few years, that if this government had not been so doctrinaire free enterprise in its beliefs, if it had at least recognized the validity of public ownership in certain public utility fields to the extent that Tories a couple of generations ago had done and established public ownership of Hydro, this government would have moved to establish public ownership for the distribution of gas. If they had done so, they would have been able to have built a grid distribution system throughout the whole of southern Ontario, they would have been able to have integrated into this grid this incomparable resource of 130 billion cubic feet of storage capacity. And, Mr. Speaker, the net result of this, and we can get back to this in more detail later in the year, is that in the areas of Hamilton, Toronto and east of Toronto we could be supplying gas to the consumers of this province at some 25 to 30 cents less per thousand cubic feet than we are doing at the present time, because we are not fully using that storage capacity.

Indeed, I remember two or three years ago when Consumers' Gas needed a storage capacity to meet its peak period and they entered into an agreement with Ontario Natural Gas Transmission and Storage Company, a subsidiary of Union, to use their pipeline running from Oakville through to the Don township storage area, and the comment that was made, both privately and publicly by the spokesman for Consumers' Gas that this was too expensive. It cost them something like 25 cents per thousand cubic feet for this transmission and storage.

Now the interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is this: what was too expensive when they had to pay it out to Union Gas has become tolerable when Consumers' gets together with Imperial Oil, a company that is not in the gas distribution business at all but happens to have certain limits in this area because of its oil leases down through the years, these two companies have gotten together and established a subsidiary, Tecumseh, and apparently they are now going to be happy.

They are going to be happy because the excessive cost is going to be channelled into a subsidiary from which they will reap the benefit and the consumers in Hamilton and Toronto at least are going to be paying 25 cents per thousand cubic feet more for gas from now into perpetuity, in the fashion that they are doing at the moment—as compared with the area in southwestern Ontario.

I mention this, Mr. Speaker, more by way of a lament, because obviously this government is not going to move now to rationalize this whole set-up. If they are not going to do it as a publicly owned system integrating the storage area, then even I would concede that there is value in having another private company in there to compete with Union. But this is just making the best of rather a bad situation, certainly not a perfect situation, not the best situation in terms of the interests of the people of the golden horse-shoe area and east.

There is another aspect of this picture, Mr. Speaker, that I think we should take a look at. Some of the people in the Lambton area, who are interested from the point of view of ratepayers or the local labour council or the Lambton gas storage association, have been pressing now for a number of months. Mr. Speaker, they have been asking this question and I would like to put it to either the hon. member for Muskoka or the hon. Minister of this new department. Hydro is contemplating the building of a new plant in Sarnia. As I understand it, the plans for this plant are going to be another of the steam generated plants which will be using coal. The figure I have gotten, and it may or may not be correct, is that the plant to operate will be importing some $8 million worth of coal a year from the United States, within the context of a trade situation in which we have been striving for years to get a better balance in our trade.

My question is: has the proposition of using natural gas been explored fully rather than coal, because if it were and if it were co-ordinated with a pipeline from western Canada that was tied in with the great storage area and the storage areas used for what necessary reserve of gas that you might require to operate a plant and its great needs, here you would be using a Canadian product, and you would be making economically feasible overnight this second pipeline from western Canada. You would be using this great resource of storage areas in Lambton county, you would be doing it now instead of postponing its full use for a generation or whatever time it will take to integrate with the expanding consumption of natural gas.

There is a final point, Mr. Speaker, that I want to raise, and I direct this to the hon. Minister—indeed, I was going to ask him a question before the orders of the day tomorrow or the next day and I can perhaps put the question to him in the context of dealing with it here. I think that if there is one area—and this is maybe relatively small but it deals with human beings and their problems—that The Department of Energy Resources in the province of Ontario has been playing around with for about six or seven years and leaving people who have been asking for the answer still waiting, it is the problem of coming up with a rational answer to the leasing arrangements that the farmers have with the gas and the oil companies, to the appropriate royalty that they should be getting and related problems of this nature.

Now the hon. Minister is new in this department and I do not know to what extent he has had time to acquaint himself with it. If he does not know now he will learn very soon that it is an exceedingly complex problem.

In fact, if he sits down with the deputy Minister of Economics and Development, Mr. Clarkson, he will find that he, along with a lot of us, has been trying for years to grasp the infinite complexities of this problem. Essentially it is a problem of people who got leases a generation, two generations ago, signed often by their father or their grandfather, with an oil company or with a gas company at a time when nobody really realized the value of these. Now these companies, armed with sharp legal advisers and spokesmen, are treating these leases as though they were sacrosanct and cannot be changed.

I want to submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is nonsense, this is one of the myths of the legal profession. If we have a situation in which the basic factors have changed as greatly as they have in this whole field, I think it is appropriate to do as has been done, for example, in the province of Saskatchewan, to establish an appropriate arbitration board or tribunal that reviews leases and brings them in accordance with justice. I think it is appropriate, for example, that the government should come to a conclusion on what is an appropriate royalty which the owner should get for the storing of gas under his property.

In the United States, I understand, it is one-eighth. Why cannot we get this established, so that these farmers, who cannot hire a lawyer of the kind with capacity to cope with the sharp legal operators that the company can have, to protect his interests? The result is that the companies are playing one farmer off against another farmer and ultimately they have their own way. In fact just today I had a man come here and present me with the details of a case that goes back to 1917. It is typical of the kind of exploitation of these people of which these companies have been guilty. If the former member for Lambton West were here, even though he was an awfully good Tory and he did not kick over the traces very often, even he could not take this issue any longer and on a number of occasions was pretty forthright in this House on the issue of the way in which Union and the other companies have been treating these people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me get back to the hon. Minister and his department, because I first began to raise this in the House back in the year 1958. The former Minister, the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay), was organizing the new energy department which ultimately came into being in 1960 or 1961. He said until the department is really organized they could not come to grips with this, so that killed a year or two or three. Then they set up the Langford commission, headed by Professor Langford, to look into the problem.

For the first year they did not bring in a report because the commission was side-tracked on a new problem that emerged, the question of drilling for gas and oil under the Great Lakes and the pollution that resulted. So they brought back that report, but these other problems were shelved. Lo and behold, a year ago, after all of this delay—I am almost tempted to use the word procrastination, because I do not think it is inaccurate—the Langford committee's final report came in and it in effect bowed out on these issues. So the Minister handed the whole problem, six years later, with all these people waiting the six years for their reply, to the energy board. In effect, the energy board was established as a continuing commission to look into these problems and bring back reports.

Now my thought to the hon. Minister is that I hope that before this session has gone on much longer that the hon. Minister is going to be in a position to come into this House and assure us that the energy board has that report ready. I do not think this House and the people who have waited as long as they have now should be treated to any more delay. If there is any possibility that the energy board has not that report ready, since it is likely we are going to be sitting until some time in April, I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he should communicate with the energy board and say that we want that report as of April 1, before this session concludes, so that we can consider it and bring in the appropriate legislation and do something to correct this situation. I think these people have had to tolerate injustice for too long because of the government's neglect, for reasons that I have just spelled out.

However, Mr. Speaker, I just want to reiterate in conclusion that there may be a degree of validity in the suggestion that we are lumping some things in this department that would more appropriately go into other departments. But from what I can see of it, I think all of the matters that have been brought together under the jurisdiction of this department are matters that deal with resources. I think this is sensible—it should have happened years ago—but that is the way a Tory government operates, so let us be thankful that we have it now.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: We always get things done.

An hon. member: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to take part in the debate on The Energy and Resources Management Act. I take from the remarks of the previous speaker, the hon. member for York South, that he is prepared to vote for the second reading of this bill, and I think indeed that the entire House will feel that way inclined.

May I say that I think this has been up to the present moment a very good debate, and has brought out many of the important facts having to do in particular with the water conservation and management policies as set out by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources in moving second reading of this important legislation, and by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin as he spoke of matters having to do with the Ontario Water Resources Commission. As he spoke, the hon. member referred to the many uses of water. Particularly with respect to recreation for the people of our province, I could not help but feel pleased therefore as a representative of a riding—the riding of Muskoka—which is well known as a lakeland recreational area, that there is to be this greater emphasis on the importance of water, and not only for recreation but for the many other purposes to which water is required in our province.

Today I want to speak more particularly of the use of water and our problems having to do with the current water situation, as these relate to the production of electricity and to Ontario Hydro. I believe that my remarks may serve to indicate the advantage of the proposed inclusion in this department of commissions which are more closely related than may have generally been realized.

May I say, for myself, that I am most anxious that this House know more and more about Ontario Hydro and the vital part that it plays in maintaining and extending the economy of our great province. And I know in this respect that the hon. Minister for this department, who reports to this House for Hydro, would certainly share that wish. Accordingly, at later periods in this session there will be opportunities for discussion of Hydro. I might say now that it is our intention, if Ontario Hydro is called to report to the standing committee on government commissions, that the fullest possible time will be given to answering questions that hon. members may have with respect to the operations of the commission.

Today I would like to speak about water and its use in making electricity, and share with hon. members some of our present problems in this respect. As the word Hydro in the name Ontario Hydro implies, water is the vital factor in the production of electricity in this province.

In a predominantly hydro-electric system such as ours, fluctuations in river flows and in water storage levels have a major effect on our operations. Low flows and storage mean less water to produce electricity at our 65 hydro-electric stations. This deficiency normally is replaced with power generated from coal-fired plants or purchased, which raises the cost of providing electricity during a poor water year.

While it is impossible to control the weather, Hydro does have a means of absorbing the short-term higher-cost production during the year of poor water conditions without passing them directly on to the customer. A reserve fund was established some years ago. Money is put into it during years of better-than-average water conditions and withdrawn during poor ones. Last year served as an illustration of the effect of low-water conditions on the Hydro's east system. There was a severe shortage of water in southern and northeastern Ontario from spring until the end of the year. As a result, flows on the Niagara, St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers, which are the main sources of hydro-electric power in the province, were below normal for the second year in a row. For example, the flow of the Niagara River in October, 1963, was the lowest recorded for any October in 103 years.

Although water storage conditions on inland watersheds were 20 per cent below normal, at the end of 1963 they were somewhat improved over 1962. Hon. members know that electricity cannot be stored directly, but by building up water storages in river and lake systems during the spring run-off it is possible to accomplish the same effect by drawing on these reserves of water during the rest of the year.

As a result of low-water levels, the output of our hydro-electric plants dropped by 2.7 billion kilowatt hours in 1962 and declined another 2 billion kilowatt hours in 1963. This reduction, since 1961, of 4.7 billion kilowatt hours almost equalled the annual consumption of the municipalities of Toronto and Sarnia.

To replace this loss and meet the growing needs of customers, our thermal electric plants burned almost $27 million worth of coal in 1963, which was $24.4 million worth more than in 1961.

In mentioning Ontario Hydro's coal purchases, may I take note of certain recent suggestions in the province that in our sale of energy, and particularly in residential electric heating, our rates are not sufficient to pay the cost of fuel used at our generating stations. This is not the case. Coal is only part of the cost of thermal electric power and I am able to assure the House that all costs are recovered in the electric heating rates. Even if all the electric heating requirements were met by generation at our coal-burning stations, the cost of coal would still represent only a third of the electric heating rate.

But the economic impact of lost hydro-electric production in low-water years is not limited to Hydro. It also means lost revenue to the government. For the privilege of using water to produce power, Ontario Hydro pays water rentals to the federal and provincial governments. Since less water was used in 1963, water rental payments were a little more than $6 million, which is 4.5 per cent less than in the previous year.

The trend in power development is now to thermal electric stations. Even though these plants use fuel instead of water to produce electricity, water is vital to the operation of these plants. Large quantities of water are required to condense steam in these stations, which must be built at sites where water is available. Hydro's thermal stations are situated on Lake Ontario, Lake Superior and the Detroit River. This water is used for cooling purposes and is returned to the lake or river in a purer condition than before.

The hon. member for York South, Mr. Speaker, raised another matter but I see that he has been obliged to leave the House. I would prefer that we would discuss this particular matter on another occasion; there will be other occasions.

So in conclusion, sir, may I say that I think that the House has heard in some detail the plans of our government through this department for a greater water programme throughout the province. These plans are part of the work of the new department to which Bill No. 19 refers and these plans, I think, will commend themselves to all hon. members and gain their approval of this bill now before the House for second reading.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, as a lowly back bencher, representing a riding that has not been heard from the floor of this House for four years, I feel I must say a few words on this very important matter that is of dire consequence to the riding of Essex South.

I was one of the few members in this House today that listened to every word of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin, and finally my attention was rewarded in the last few sentences when he referred to projects in Essex South. However, I would point out to him that he did omit the proposed Anderdon-McGregor pipeline.

The other day as our leader, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) was speaking, I was very surprised to hear the hon. Prime Minister of this province interject: What about Essex county? Well, I would say this about Essex county: I feel that we have just been teased in the matter of water and possibly this is one reason why the previous member is not sitting in this House today.

Referring back to the preamble by the hon. Minister from Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Simonett), I would like to draw to the attention of this House a problem that has existed off the shores of the riding of Essex South, fronting the township of Colchester South. This problem has been drawn to the attention of the hon. Minister and I would hope that with new regulations being planned for the drilling of oil and gas in the Great Lakes that very stringent regulations are put in force to ensure that this problem of oil pollution in our waters does not continue.

I would say to the hon. member for Muskoka—who comes from a tourist area such as myself—we, too, are a tourist area, the garden gateway to Canada and we feel very deeply in this area. We are going to be very displeased if an oil and gas drilling company is to be allowed to erect permanent obstacles close to our shore line. I do hope by drawing this to the attention of this Legislature, that something can be done to stop this desecration of our beautiful landscape. Thank you.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The member for Oxford has the floor.

Mr. Troy: Is this a debate or just statements?

Mr. G. W. Pittock (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to address the hon. members in this my first speech in this House. I would like to discuss for a few minutes the subject of conservation of our renewable natural resources of soil, water and trees.

It will be 27 years in April since the floods of 1937, which many hon. members will remember, when disaster struck the area of the Thames watershed. On that day, April 26, there were 2,400 homes in London West under water, most of them to the eaves. It was only by grace that many people were not drowned. For this we can be thankful, and the fact that the total evacuation from these homes was made during the daylight hours. On that day, the CNR noon passenger train jumped in the river near Beechville and three lives were lost, in addition to the drowning of one of Ingersoll's prominent doctors in an attempt to reach that wreck. That day, all quarry operations in the area were completely flooded; roads, bridges and rail lines washed out over a wide area.

I would not need to remind hon. members that it will be ten years this October since Hurricane Hazel struck the Toronto area with the loss of 88 lives in one night.

The rain that caused those floods was a part of our normal annual precipitation which fell in a comparatively short time in each instance. There was no snow or ice to cause flooding on either occasion. It was a part of the normal 30 inches of precipitation we generally receive in this area of southern Ontario.

May I also mention, Mr. Speaker, as a reminder, the summer of 1936 which preceded the flood in 1937, was one of the driest on record.

It was following the flood of 1937, the people of London formed a committee of representatives of the municipalities of the counties of Middlesex, Perth and Oxford to study what might be done to prevent a recurrence of the miseries, suffering and damage that occurred at that time. Included in that organization were such outstanding conservationists as the late Dr. J. Cameron Wilson, the first chairman of the Upper Canada Authority; Dr. Watson, the first secretary; Mr. Jim Smith, then engineer of the county of Middlesex. To this original committee and others must go all the credit for the addition of the conservation branch to The Department of Planning and Development in 1944.

Today we have in Ontario 32 authorities covering an area of 22,000 square miles, including 468 municipalities represented by 745 appointed delegates to carry out the programme of general conservation of our watersheds. On these watershed areas, 50 per cent of the area of southern Ontario, live 3.5 million citizens, three-fifths of the population of the province.

In co-operation with the Dominion of Canada and the province of Ontario, we have completed four major flood control projects at a cost of $12,603,000, with a total storage capacity of 142,000 acre feet. These are known as the Shand Dam, Fanshaw, Conestogo and the Luther Dam.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, we have, under agreement with the two senior levels of government, a total of 21 projects in the group of major flood control structures. Fifteen of these are in the Metro area to store 81,000 acre feet, five are on the Thames to store 72,000 acre feet, one on the Aux Sable at Parkhill with a capacity of 9,600 acre feet; making a total of 162,600 acre feet which will cost approximately $39 million. In addition, the conservation branch of The Department of Lands and Forests has investigated and recommended to the authorities of southern Ontario another 380,000 acre feet of storage at a cost of approximately $50 million. They have also investigated sites which have not as yet been recommended to store another 330,000 acre feet. With the cost increasing we can be sure this additional storage, if ever required, will cost at least another $50 million.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to now mention that portion of our programme which the citizens of our watersheds have been able to accomplish with the assistance of the province of Ontario on a 50 per cent cost-sharing basis. We have completed 17 channel improvements at a cost of $4 million; three river diversions costing $5 million; 44 small dams or community pond sites, $2,150,000; ten projects of stream bank erosion control $150,000; seven mappings of flood plain land $134,000; five miscellaneous items, such as flood warning systems and stream gauge recordings, and things of this kind, $93,000.

We have engineered and assisted with the task of constructing 3,000 farm ponds. We have planted a total of 41 million trees, six million on private land and 35 million in the 70,000 acres of the authority forests. These forest areas are located in the main floodlands of water storage areas, where nature will deliver water for storage, for use as required, without any cost of pumping. These areas are generally in the headwaters of the branches of our streams and therefore the discharge from these reservoirs has a direct effect on the underground water tables over the whole area of the watershed.

We have heard and read much about a grid for water distribution in Ontario. Nature has provided us with this grid, not only provided the grid but also the pumps and the power to make this water available to all the people of each of the watershed areas. All that is necessary for us is to stop the draining of these wet-land areas and return them to the use which the Creator intended. If we will build our major flood control projects to take off the crest of the run-off and return the wetlands to the use for which they were intended, we will provide the most economical supply of water it is possible to secure—underground water. We will have ample water for all purposes of all the people for the foreseeable future.

I would like to talk for a moment about the Upper Canada Conservation Authority which recently passed a resolution which is now in the hands of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) requesting arrangements be made to purchase the 19,000 acres of wetland remaining on our watershed. This acreage, in addition to source water areas, will include 50 mill-pond sites where restoration or repairs to the structure are necessary. Our authority is looking forward to a start on this purchase in the near future. We are sure when this programme is completed the flow in the streams of our watershed will be in excess of ten times the normal average flow in the low-flow period in the average year. Must we be reminded water is a restorable resource?

Ontario Water Resources Commission since 1956 has been doing an outstanding job in cleaning up the pollution of the streams of the province. A major portion of this effort has been in the design, erection and operation of municipal sewage treatment plants. It is my belief every municipality has the responsibility to discharge effluent into the stream which is suitable for the use of his neighbour, regardless of the purpose for which he wishes to use the water.

Please let me be understood. No watershed authority in this province will condone the providing of water to dilute pollutants. However, many millions of dollars can be saved in the design of plants if the designers have a guaranteed constant flow in which to discharge effluent from the plant. It would be interesting to know how many less dollars would be required if the treatment plant could be designed to treat sewage discharge effluent at 15 b.o.d. count, rather than at b.o.d. count, in all of the municipalities of Ontario where sufficient flow in the streams that receive this effluent received the required design for the third or tertiary treatment stage.

The hon. members, I am sure, will be interested in progress of the projects of the Upper Canada authority where the storage capacity is 72,000 acre feet, which I have recently mentioned. These projects along with the Fanshaw Dam reservoir will complete our flood control requirements of 110,000 acre feet of storage to prevent flooding in all the municipalities on the three branches of the Thames River. The recommendations of our report for the flood control portion of our programme was 40,000 acre feet at Fanshaw, north of London, completed in 1952 at a cost of $5 million; 15,000 acre feet at Wildwood on Trout Creek southeast of St. Mary's—this is under construction now with a designed capacity of 20,000 acre feet of storage; 12,000 acre feet in the Woodstock area—the engineering is completed on this one and awaiting approval for call of tenders to construct a dam and reservoir with a designed capacity of 13,885 acre feet. To complete our agreement, and yet to be considered, are the Glengowan Dam north of St. Mary's, with 27,000 acre feet, and Thamesford on the middle branch of the river at 17,500 acre feet storage capacity.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not at this time refer to the outstanding efforts of the representatives of the municipalities under conservation authorities in this province. I also want to pay tribute to the staff of the conservation authorities branch which has never exceeded 55 in number since the branch was added to The Department of Planning and Development in 1944, and this includes both the field staff and the administration, including a total of three engineers. To all of the dedicated and energetic members of the branch, our sincere thanks and appreciation for a job well done.

Before I discuss something of the records we have accumulated in the past years in our watershed, I would like to mention another project that I feel is worthy of consideration. We have read of the future planning of the use of power from the nuclear plant at Point Douglas. Because this plant will be under continuous operation, power during the low-flow period will be used to pump water from Georgian Bay to the top of the area of the Blue Mountains near Collingwood. This water will then flow down to the generators to make power during the high demand periods of the day.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that consideration be given to this water flowing down the opposite side of this drainage divide and into the headwaters of the rivers and returned to Lake Erie rather than being discharged into Georgian Bay. This water could be put to many uses between Georgian Bay and Lake Erie. This, I feel, is a multi-purpose use of a renewable natural resource.

Mr. Speaker, when I mention multi-purpose use this brings up a subject for which I feel we are sometimes criticized by some and blessed by others, in connection with our park development at the site of our conservation projects. This is a multi-purpose use of the same property. We need to acquire these areas in which to store water at the time of the spring run-off period. This may be for only three or four days in the spring or it may be for a longer period, depending on the purpose of the structure and the reservoir which it creates. If the purpose is to store the flood crest to remove the damage of flooding downstream, and after the crest is past and the reservoir has returned to a normal conservation pool level, I can think of no better use of this land than to allow our citizens to use it. It matters not whether this land is developed for recreation of golf, swimming, picnicking or any other form of recreation, or whether it is a wilderness area planted to trees and used as arboretum, or for wildlife interests such as naturalists' groups, hunters and anglers or by the many citizens of this province who have varying interests.

In Ontario the average run-off is about 11 inches of our average normal precipitation of 36 inches per year. The remainder, of course, is used in evaporation, transpiration, and infiltration to the underground water table. This run-off is equal to 4.7 million gallons per person in this province. Calculated on the average daily use of 100 gallons per day per capita, you will find this run-off is more than 128 times our requirement. We use less than one per cent. It is recognized that if we can conserve three-quarters of one of those 11 inches that run off, we will have ample water for all our needs.

And so in Ontario, and on the upper Thames watershed in particular, we have some glowing examples of the fact that we have been provided with ample water, if we will take the necessary action to store and prevent a portion of the run-off which occurs annually.

During 1963 we had many instances throughout our area. This to a large extent has been attributed to the lack of rainfall or precipitation in general. During the 12-month period we experienced a serious reduction in our normal amount of precipitation. Records show that we received 16 inches less precipitation, or only 22 inches compared to the normal 38 in our area. However, of this 22 inches, approximately seven inches run off into the streams, down the river and out to the ocean. In 1963, the run-off of our watershed was equal to the requirements of 10 full years.

Let me give the hon. members something of the records for several days in late March and April. The flow measured at the automatic recording gauge at Bryon Bridge, this is downstream from the forks in the city of London after all three branches of the river are joined together, the flow at that point measured 23,000 cubic feet per second. This rate of flow represents enough water each 24 hours to supply all of the needs of our watershed for a full year, and this flow is continued for several days.

Mr. Speaker, this is not unusual. Another period which I would like to mention is the spring of 1961. In the previous winter there was a heavy fall of snow. However the melt was gradual and under ideal conditions and the threat of flood passed without any instances of flooding anywhere on the watershed. However during the ten-day period of March 29 to April 8, by actual measurement with the same automatic recording gauge, the flow amounted to 336,000 cubic feet of water, or 92 billion gallons. That is enough water to supply all the needs of our watershed for seven years and four months. This went by in the ten-day period and there was no flooding in any municipality on our watershed.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. members if there is any doubt about the fact that we have been provided with ample water; if we will arrange to store and conserve what has been provided.

I would like to refer to one or two projects which I have visited within recent years in the United States. The most convincing manner that I know of is to talk to the natives of such areas of Lelong dam in north Texas. This dam is built on a creek which went absolutely dry each summer after having caused damage to market garden land each spring freshet. Today this reservoir, with 83 miles of shoreline at permanent conservation pool level and 130 miles of shoreline at flood crest is one of the most beautiful recreational areas anywhere in North America.

In addition, the North Texas Municipal Water District, comprising ten municipalities in addition to a part of the city of Dallas, utilized the reservoir for water supply purposes.

Or take another spot that is worth a visit, the trip to Lake Tascoma in the area of the border of Texas and Oklahoma, 80 miles north of Dallas, where the fight to prevent the purchase of that marginal farm land was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States. Today they have a lake 40 miles long behind Dennison Dam. The dam was built for flood control for hydro-electric power, little or no thought was given to recreation. The counties affected have already received more than $1.25 million as a share of lease payment, considerably more than they would have received in taxes on the 20,000 acres of land which was taken from agricultural production.

In Woodville, Oklahoma, one of the communities in the area had two banks. Both had been closed for some time. Few roads in the area were paved and it was a rare village that had a sewage system or paved roads or sidewalks. Today they have five new school buildings, both sewage and water systems and both banks have been expanded three times. Today people are paying $2,000 per acre for land which formerly sold for $35. Within recent months plants have been built by Pillsbury Company, Johns-Manville, General Cable Corporation and International Business Machines. This area can be compared with the Muskange conservation district in Ohio where one of the most outstanding conservation projects has been completed over an area of 8,000 square miles in east-central Ohio.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make mention of an edition of a magazine published in 1961. This issue was given over entirely to the great outdoors. Many hon. members may recall in that issue the statement of the late President John F. Kennedy when he said: "We must have distance in our eyes, we must be sure we do not sacrifice long-term goals for short-term advantages." May I suggest that we take a look at what we have. If we like it, we had better do something about it.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support those hon. members who today have spoken so eloquently in supporting the second reading of Bill No. 19 in the establishment of the new Department of Energy and Resources Management.

After listening to these speeches this afternoon one cannot help but be impressed with the fact that, if we did not realize it before we must surely realize it now, that water is our most vital natural resource.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: And for once I am delighted to know that my hon. friends in the Opposition are in complete agreement with us.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister brings out a platitude and we will have to agree with him.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not think I will talk about platitudes today at all. I want to talk about something that is of vital importance to everyone of us in this province of Ontario, because I have looked forward to the bringing of this bill before this House and speaking in defence of it.

We have, as has been mentioned this afternoon on numerous occasions, experienced quite a severe drought in this province this year. Those of us who have had the misfortune to have had to live within the very worst area of that drought recognized the drastic consequences that were brought about by it. The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin here this afternoon, sir, mentioned the drop in rainfall which has taken place this year in the London area. It has been something like 20 inches below normal.

Now if there is anything good that one can say about this drought that has taken place this year in the province of Ontario, it is the fact that it has made us aware of our vulnerability to the elements. Regardless of what may have happened or what may not have happened, we cannot help but appreciate the fact that farming is one of those kind of occupations that depends so much upon the whims of the weather that we have little control over. But I think we should recognize as well the fact that many of the problems which we faced in southern Ontario this year, as well as in other parts of the province of Ontario, have been created by the expanding population that we have, the rapid advance of industry and agricultural production and the modernization of life both in urban and rural Ontario.

There are few, I believe, in this province, who would have recognized the enormous advances that have been made in both of these, in fact in all of these factors in the last few years, even ten years ago, as the reference was made a while ago.

I have been concerned, Mr. Speaker, in listening to the debate this afternoon and listening to the references that have been made by hon. members of the Opposition to criticism of no action when we consider the fact, and all of the statistics that have been made here this afternoon, that the Ontario Water Resources Commission in the six years of its operation has completed or has underway, a total of 276 water and sewage projects costing $110 million in the province today. We have in this province 185 municipalities that are benefitting because of the establishment, Mr. Speaker, of the Ontario Water Resources Commission. These are projects that could never have been undertaken unless the Ontario Water Resources Commission had undertaken them.

Indeed, when I hear the fun that is being made of this statement that I have made, that is of such value to the people of the province of Ontario, I am reminded of the shades of C. D. Howe when he said one time, "What is a million?" Our hon. friends this afternoon have said, Mr. Speaker, that we have done nothing, that we have been dilatory in all of the things that have been accomplished. C. D. Howe said: "What is a million?" These people in effect have said: "What is 110 million to the people of the province of Ontario?"

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the province of Ontario has led the nation in water conservation measures. The new hon. member for Oxford, Mr. Speaker, has referred to the conservation authorities. I want to reiterate again some of the statements that he has made when he says that 74—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think it is something we should talk about because you people have not yet grasped the significance of what we are saying. Seventy-four essential water control projects have been completed, costing $19 million, and 90 projects are under way totalling $52 million, on which in most cases this provincial government is paying 50 per cent of the grant. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, does this sound like a government that has not been accomplishing things for water in the province of Ontario?

The Opposition talk about the things that we have been doing and the things we have not been doing. I want to refer to a conservation authority in my own riding known as the Ausable Conservation Authority. It is the smallest conservation authority in the province of Ontario, but it has done more per capita of assessment, Mr. Speaker, for conservation than any other authority in Ontario, having contributed to the building of nearly a third of all the farm ponds for water conservation that have been built by the total 31 conservation authorities in Ontario. These are the things that have been done, and we in this government have contributed 50 per cent of the cost of all this work.

And then the hon. member for Oxford, Mr. Speaker, referred to the Fanshaw Dam at London, built at a cost of $5 million and also located in the riding of Middlesex North that I have the privilege to represent. I want to say here and now, and say it quite sincerely, that I very well remember the flood of 1937, and I very well remember the fact that since that dam has been built, in my humble opinion, that dam has saved the city of London from floods on two successive occasions. If nothing else has ever been accomplished by that dam the safety of the city of London is well worth its cost.

Mr. Singer: We cannot do away with the city of London.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, indeed, no indeed, and the hon. member would agree that we have to look after our urban areas as well.

The Municipal Drainage Act is something that to me, Mr. Speaker, has been used to develop agricultural lands most successfully, but I would think that it is time for us to take a very good look at the fact that in some instances it may have been used to affect water storage areas adversely. I think quite often, we who are associated with the further development of agriculture, and I am as guilty of this as any farmer in Ontario, particularly in those areas where there has been a very positive approach made to drainage of farmlands, have recognized in The Municipal Drainage Act, a means whereby those areas of our farms, in fact, whole farms, could be drained, and in some instances, swamps have been drained. I must confess we have perhaps been negligent in not recognizing sooner, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we have said to those who want to establish reforestation areas on their farms—and I believe our Assessment Act states that a maximum of up to ten per cent of the total land owned by a farmer can be put into reforestation projects and exempted from taxation or from assessment by the local municipality—that we have said to him, we indeed endorse what you are doing because this is a conservation measure and we would have no quarrel with that. It may be the best ten per cent of all the land he owns, still it is exempt from assessment if he so desires it should be set aside for such purposes.

But what have we said to the farmer who has a swamp on his farm, or whose whole farm may be under swamp land? Have we not said to him, use The Municipal Drainage Act and those Acts that are connected with drainage in this province, to drain this area and then you can pay taxes on it and it will become useful agricultural land? In many areas this has been done and has been done to great satisfaction of the farmers involved. But it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is time now for the hon. Minister in his new department to take a very good look at the activities of the drainage Acts that we have here that have been now consolidated under The Drainage Act of The Department of Municipal Affairs, and say to some of these farmers who want to drain their land because of the assessment that is levied against it and the taxation that they are paying, perhaps it is time you should be exempted from assessment and use this land for the intention that nature had for it as a water restoration area. If we were to do this, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we would be doing something to assist in the rejuvenation of the water table levels in this province. These are matters that must be taken under consideration, and I would think that the water co-ordination committee, that the hon. Minister referred to in his opening remarks this afternoon, might very well recommend to the government of Ontario that steps along this line should be taken to restore, if necessary, to Crown land, these areas of swamp land that nature intended as water restoration areas.

It seems to me that we must do everything possible—and I think in this new department we can now consolidate all the efforts that we make—to raise the water table and maintain and recharge the wells and the receding water tables that we have in this province. I would be in complete agreement with those statements that have been made this afternoon, that there may well be areas in this province, where pipelines may be necessary, in fact they have already proven their worth. The hon. member for Essex South, Mr. Speaker, referred this afternoon to a pipeline. I can think of no better typical example of a pipeline serving a municipality than that in Essex. I refer also to the one in Lambton that serves many communities as well as the area of Norfolk county, where a pipeline comes in from the lake and serves municipalities there.

But we must recognize the fact, Mr. Speaker, that it is not as simple as it sounds to put a grid system of pipelines up and down the province of Ontario and its concessions and side roads, because those farmers who are fortunate enough to have an adequate supply of water would be unlikely to buy water off that pipeline. It seems to me that there are two sides to the coin and one can argue in favour and they can certainly argue against, but I believe, knowing the practical nature of farm people, that we will be unlikely to accept that type of philosophy.

I want to say a word, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon in connection with the application of ARDA in the establishment of the new department. To my way of thinking, we have in The ARDA Act, I should say The Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, it is known as ARDA, a short form, established in this directorate as was explained in the House last year, the consolidation of effort directed to the rejuvenation of our natural resources in this province, as far as the limitations of our Act will permit.

We have in this directorate representatives from The Department of Agriculture, and it is administered under The Department of Agriculture but only, I must say, Mr. Speaker, because it deals primarily with rural problems. We also have representatives of The Department of Lands and Forests, The Department of Municipal Affairs, the Provincial Treasury, The Department of Travel and Publicity and The Department of Economics and Development.

I strongly urge the hon. Minister of the new Department of Energy and Resources Management that he might give favourable consideration to the appointment of representatives from his department and from the Ontario Water Resources Commission to the ARDA directorate. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have in the ARDA directorate the arm whereby we can put into application many of the things that we propose to do under this new department and through the means of this new department.

I had the assurance, Mr. Speaker—on our last visit to Ottawa last fall, at the time of the agricultural Ministers conference that was called by the federal Minister of Agriculture, in discussing in some detail the application of The ARDA Act to the water programme that we propose here in the province of Ontario—I had the complete assurance of the federal Minister of Agriculture, the hon. Harry Hays, that the federal government would go along completely with this programme as we had explained it to him, under The ARDA Act.

Now I do not know what the thinking will be of the new hon. Minister who has now been appointed at Ottawa in charge of rural development, but I have confidence enough in the government at Ottawa that they will recognize the importance of the projects that we are proposing under the ARDA legislation and that they will accept them as did the former Minister under whose department this was administered.

Under The ARDA Act, the federal government will provide up to 50 per cent of the costs of any money that is provided by the government of Ontario in ARDA projects. I think it is significant for us to recognize that we now in the province of Ontario have an Act that will allow us to gain for ourselves and for the people of Ontario money from the federal Treasury that previously had gone, and is still continuing to go, to the people of western Canada under The Prairie Farm Assistance Act and to the Maritime provinces under The Maritime Reclamation Act.

While we in Ontario had our conservation authorities and we designated certain funds for their development, we nevertheless were short of many of the things that other provinces were using under the federal legislation relative to the Acts applicable to those other sections of Canada. But today we have this Act and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the hon.

Minister of our new department will in his wisdom co-ordinate all of the activities whereby our conservation projects, our water restoration projects and all of those things that are associated with anything that will do with the rejuvenation of water in this province—recognizing it to be our most vital commodity—will designate to the ARDA directorate as to how best he feels this should be carried out. It will be their prerogative then, on application to the Treasury and to the Cabinet, to deal with these matters as they come before it. I feel, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, that we have taken a very major step forward in the life of the province of Ontario in bringing co-ordination to all of our activities in this government having to do with this precious commodity—water. Thank you.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I happened to catch the eye of the Minister of Highways.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, you perhaps knew he was going to speak.

Mr. Troy: All government speakers this afternoon.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Of course, there are more government speakers.

Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin concluded his remarks, he recommended, of course, the unanimous approval of the bill that is under discussion here today and of course I concur with that recommendation.

I want to make reference to a few recent observations made by the hon. leader of the Opposition a few short days ago on the Throne Speech Debate. He had this to say:

We had in this province, Mr. Speaker, a conservation committee, ten years ago, that told this government in no uncertain words that unless they made adequate provision for an ample supply of water immediately it was going to run into very grave difficulties. For ten years the government sat across there and did nothing at all.

Well now, in the light of that, Mr. Speaker, I would just point out and re-emphasize that eight years ago a committee on water resources was established, in the year 1956, so at that point we had waited two years to get the committee of investigation under way and the following year the Ontario Water Resources Commission came into being. Now then, when we go back a few pages, Mr. Speaker, and look again at the Throne Speech, the hon. leader of the Opposition has this to say:

If there was any doubt as to the position of this party in relation to any particular subject then that doubt will be removed. If there was an area in which there was a lack of clarity, then clarity will be restored and maintained so far as this party is concerned.

Further, he goes on and says:

And I would say this too—

this is really priceless, Mr. Speaker:

—consistency will become a jewel of great worth as we proceed in our deliberations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, going back in the Hansard of former years, and only a few short years ago, I was privileged, as a new member of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, to address the House. I am going to read a few brief observations and say:

These again serve to amplify the need for not only intensified continuance of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, but also a very obvious need for co-ordination of the many and varying influences bearing on the water supplies of this province. It would appear that greater liaison between all interests and agencies or departments dealing with the various aspects of these interests, should be implemented as soon as possible.

These, Mr. Speaker, happen to be my own remarks.

At the government level, Mr. Speaker—the remarks of the day go on to say:

—such departments as The Department of Planning and Development—as it was known at that time:

—with its conservation authority branch;
The Department of Lands and Forests with respect to timber management practice and location of woodlots; The Department of Agriculture and the relationship between land use and cultural practices; as well as The Department of Health and others, are all involved in water problems to the extent that their influences in this respect might well be co-ordinated under one central authority.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we proceed just a few pages further, we find the present hon. leader of the Opposition commenting as follows:

I think I would say to the hon. member for Huron that his remarks in respect to the Ontario Water Resources Commission I thought were well told.

And he emphasized the growing appreciation of the water resources commission for the grave problems that the commission has to face.

We will have the opportunity later on in the session of debating a resolution, but I am glad today that the hon. member spoke as he did, because it seems to me that out of his mouth come words that I could use as those coming from my chief witness, because things he said I agreed with entirely and I want him to say them again.

I am saying them again, Mr. Speaker, I am saying them again today.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the hon. members of the House to the comments of the hon. member for Downsview. Contrast them, if you will, with the remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition a few days ago, and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to every hon. member of this House, consistency is a jewel of great worth indeed.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, in adding my comments to the debate on second reading of this bill, I would like to say first that I consider the leadership given the House this afternoon rather odd, to say the least. It is evident that it was planned this morning, or some earlier date, that we would be treated to this 100 per cent undiluted effluent from well prepared speeches—most of them read word for word—when it was indicated that we would proceed with the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

Nevertheless, it is a good thing to discuss this important subject in the House. The importance that has been given to it by the government, having some of their very best and influential speakers give their opinion on this, would surely indicate that they are trying to camouflage the fact that during the last 20 years there has been grave mismanagement of our water resources.

When the hon. Minister of Agriculture lists the expenditures carried out by this commission during the past few years, he himself must realize that the commission has been acting like a fire brigade going from one emergency to another. When one branch of the government opens a recreation park north of Toronto one day, another branch closes it down because of pollution the next. We have only to look at our lakeshores and our river valleys to see that this 20-year-old government—and before they return to the people again I suppose 25 years old—has in fact done nothing to preserve these important natural resources. Far be it from me to suggest that this party would oppose the collection of these commissions and authorities under one Minister. We have been advocating this for a good long time, but I do want to say to the new hon. Minister that his troubles and worries are going to be great indeed. At least two previous speakers from the government side have pointed with pride to the developments in the Grand River valley, and I would like to tell the new hon. Minister that he is going to be faced with working with and enforcing the co-operation of at least six different agencies in that area who are, in some cases, almost at a state of war with each other.

We have in the Grand River valley the Grand River Conservation Commission, the Grand River Conservation Authority, the division of whose authorities is very much in doubt, and who are in mutual suspicion of each other. The difficulties dividing these two were about to be settled under the administration of the hon. Minister from Cochrane South (Mr. Spooner). Those who are involved in this felt they were just beginning to get the ear of the Minister when he was superseded by the hon. Minister from St. Patrick (Mr. Roberts).

They had to begin the education again and before any action could be taken the responsibility for conservation in that branch has been moved once again. I am sure that the hon. Minister from Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Simonett) will be quicker than those who had the responsibility before, to see that this difficulty is removed.

As well as the commission, and the authority, The Department of Lands and Forests itself has a branch right in the valley and has a great deal to do with the direction of conservation affairs. We have, as well, the Niagara Region Development Association, NRDA, which has taken upon itself considerable responsibility for conducting inquiries along these lines. When it approaches ARDA for some support in this matter it is turned down by a normally co-operative government for reasons that have not been made clear. Certainly, even beyond this, we have a number of tourist associations which are fine for certain responsibilities in the development of parks and other conservation and recreational matters, and so the Grand River authority and the conservation commission that I have already mentioned have really been able to do less for this great magnificent river valley than they might have. It is headed the same way—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Would the hon. member permit a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, he may ask a question.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member aware the first water conservation project under ARDA is operating in his own constituency, that he represents so ably, at a cost of more than $1 million?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would say that I am aware of this and I am delighted that ARDA is taking part in this important project. I would also ask the hon. Minister if he is aware that the Niagara Regional Development Authority has requested support from ARDA for certain investigations that it wishes to make and that it has been turned down?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My understanding is that it cannot qualify. It has never reached me but I am sure it may have come before the ARDA directors.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the information that has come to me is that the hon. Minister of Agriculture himself forbade this assistance to take place, and I would feel that for a man who has spoken so strongly in support of co-operation, it sits very poorly with him.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, if that information has come to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, it has come to him ill-advisedly.

Mr. Nixon: Does the hon. Minister mean by that it is incorrect?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Absolutely incorrect.

Mr. Nixon: I would certainly accept the hon. Minister's assurance in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I think, perhaps, the members will have to stick to the debate on the principle of the bill. This applies to both sides of the House. Please avoid asking each other questions back and forth across the floor.

Mr. Nixon: I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I accept the statement of the hon. Minister of Agriculture with delight, and I am sure that it is so and his information will be accepted in preference to what I have received from other sources. But I would also like to say, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the collection of these important commissions and authorities under one Minister, it is obviously a good thing, it should obviously have been done years before, and it is perhaps at the present time the very extreme limit for decisive action that must be taken along a number of lines beyond simply the preservation of our water resources. It has much to do with the conservation of our agricultural lands, it has much to do with the provision of parkland and recreation.

We have all read with interest in the past year the series of articles in the Globe and Mail about the desecration of the Credit valley and there is no doubt that this desecration by private development will go on in other river valleys unless this hon. Minister has enacted statutes on pollution with teeth in them. He must select the authority that is going to act in the river valleys so there will not be overlapping and multiplicity, and I submit to him that there is more room for assistance to the people of Ontario in this new department than any other. He has his work cut out for him. I wish him luck.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The chair recognizes the member for Niagara Falls. He has tried to rise several times, but I would like to suggest to him if he intends to speak more than a minute or two, to adjourn the debate at this time.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House I will just say what we are going to do tomorrow. There have been some remarks here which have led me to believe that perhaps I was not understood yesterday. I said yesterday that we would go on with second readings on the order paper and then go to the Throne debate, and I repeat that for tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the hon. Prime Minister, is it his intention tomorrow to complete the discussion of this bill on second reading?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, I will call this debate as the first order when we reach the orders of the day. We will complete it, no matter how many speakers there are who still wish to speak.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

Introduction of bills.

THE TERRITORIAL DIVISION ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Territorial Division Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the amendments contained in this bill are to bring the Act up to date with the changes made in the corporate status of municipalities by reason of dissolutions, amalgamations and annexations.

THE GAME AND FISH ACT, 1961-62

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Game and Fish Act, 1961-62.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, this bill is routine in nature, making certain amendments to sections of the bill relating to game and to licensing and will, I anticipate, go to the new committee on resources, game, mines and so forth.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question that I would like to ask of the hon.

Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) that might clear up some difficulties that arose in the debate yesterday.

Has the Niagara Regional Development Association requested assistance from The Department of Agriculture to carry out any part of its work in the region; if so, what was the disposition of the request?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, the director of ARDA, the agriculture rehabilitation director, was asked for an opinion by telephone as to whether a regional economic and resource development study proposed by the Niagara Regional Development Association would be eligible for ARDA assistance, this is assistance under The Agriculture Rehabilitation Development Act. The Niagara Regional Development Association was advised that such a proposed study would not be considered eligible, because the information requested is already available in reports that have recently been completed or are in the process of survey, by the government of Ontario and various agencies; for instance, the economic survey of Niagara region, 1963, that was prepared by The Department of Economics and Development, dealing with this very matter.

There is a land use and geographic survey or study that was completed on Louth township in 1957, which I believe was completed under the auspices of The Department of Agriculture. I believe it was Professor Krueger of Waterloo University who did that study on Louth township. Right now there is a study underway and a report pending for the Niagara Region Conservation Authority on resource development programmes for that region, and it is being prepared, I understand, by The Department of Lands and Forests. The land capability for agriculture study is being conducted by the soil science department of the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph for the counties in this particular region in 1964; this is a proposed study.

Now we, I think, would agree with our ARDA director when he advised the people, when the inquiry came to him by telephone from the Niagara Regional Development Association, that in view of the studies that he knew had already been completed or were underway, that it would be inadvisable to consider a further expenditure for a study that had been proposed by them. I think this is a very reasonable reason why he turned this down.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks.

Supplementary to that, is there any thought that ARDA, the responsibility for ARDA, will be moved from The Department of Agriculture?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, to my knowledge there has been no thought given to that.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Travel and Publicity): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to make a short statement about the Ontario souvenir industry.

My hon. colleague, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) and I wish to announce the holding of an Ontario souvenir industry exhibition, sponsored by our two departments at the Canadian National Sportsmen Show in Toronto from March 13 to 21. My hon. colleague will have something to say about the economic effects of the domination of the Ontario souvenir market by imported goods. I would like to point out to the House the importance from the point of view of tourism of developing a sound domestic industry in the souvenir gift field.

I and my department are constantly receiving complaints from travellers about the difficulty of buying authentic souvenirs in Ontario. These complaints are well founded. Many stores catering to the tourist trade do not bother to stock the Ontario-made items which are available. Some manufacturers have tried and failed to enter the field on a commercially successful basis. The industry in its manufacturing, distributing and retail aspects is a confused one. Many of the problems may be due to lack of communications between the different levels in it.

In any case, the result is really a ridiculous situation. We want people from outside the province and Ontario people travelling in our own province, to take home with them souvenirs which mean something and which have some connection with the province, our history, our character, our beauty and our life. Last year, an Ontario souvenir handicraft competition and exhibition was held.

While it was not entirely successful—the problem goes quite deeply and will not be easily solved—it accomplished a great deal in arousing and focusing public attention on the situation. We found that the people of the province had strong feelings about the need for Ontario souvenirs. Press, radio and television support was overwhelming.

This year's exhibition has a different name from last year's and places greater emphasis on commercial aspects of the industry than last year's did. Our intention is to bring the Ontario souvenir gift industry in all its phases to the attention of the public and the trade and thereby correct the situation which is a cause of annoyance and disappointment to travellers and to all who are proud of our province.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, the reason for my department's participation in the Ontario souvenir industry show at the exhibition is easy to understand.

Every year $33 million are spent in this province on souvenir gift items imported from other countries. That is three-quarters of the total amount spent on such items. My department is deeply and successfully involved in a programme of increasing manufacturing in Ontario in all fields and this is a field where the opportunities are indeed great.

We realize that trade is a two-way street, but surely it makes sense that souvenirs of the province should really originate in this province. If they do not, it means that manufacturers and craftsmen in Ontario do not have a firm grip on what should be their natural and logical market. It means that the province has missed the economic benefits which greater sales of Ontario-made souvenirs could have generated.

We expect to show hundreds of items made by manufacturers, craftsmen, skilled Indian workers on remote reserves, from companies and individuals across the province who are active in the souvenir field.

The talent and capacity to produce good souvenirs exist in this province. Problems of price, supply, distribution and attitudes have to be met and solved.

The souvenir industry divides logically into two segments, large-scale manufacturing and small-scale handicrafts. Both are very important. Last year handicrafts had the greater emphasis. They will be prominent again this year, but greater emphasis will be placed on souvenirs that can be produced in quantity. There is a need for larger quantities and greater varieties to satisfy the tourists who want to take home something inexpensive, but representative of this province. Prizes will be offered at the exhibition in order to stimulate design, craftsmanship and manufacturing.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. members here today will avail themselves of the opportunity to visit this show.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a statement regarding Grade 13.

During recent years, very considerable study has been given to the increasingly difficult problem of having the Grade 13 examination results announced at a date early enough to enable the candidates, their parents and the admitting officials of universities and other institutions of higher learning to make their plans for the following year.

With the concurrence of the university matriculation board and the co-operation of the teachers who participate in the marking, the department has introduced a number of changes which have made it possible to maintain approximately the same release date for the examination results, despite the fact that the number of papers has more than doubled since 1956. This year, 1964, will see an estimated 236,000 papers, 28,000 more than last year. It is obvious that the programme of changes in procedure which has been introduced gradually over the years must now be considerably accelerated. At this point I should like to make three comments which are relevant to the problem.

First, an examination which calls for mainly essay-type answers, rather than so-called short or objective-type answers, gives good emphasis to the organization and presentation of ideas and to good writing in general. A great many, indeed I believe the majority, of Ontario teachers feel that complete dependence upon the short answer questions would produce an adverse effect upon teaching in our schools.

Second, it is important to retain the close supervision and careful checking of the marking as it progresses in order that the answers of all candidates may be treated in an equitable manner. Where so many scholarships and bursaries and admissions to institutions of higher learning frequently depend upon the difference of two or three marks, it is important that everything possible should be done to ensure uniform marking standards. This necessity for uniformity in marking adds to the time required for the work.

Third, it should be kept in mind that while the number of Grade 13 teachers is increasing at a rate somewhat comparable to the increase in the number of candidates, it does not necessarily follow that there is a comparable increase in the number of teachers who are available for marking duties. Many of the highly competent teachers are required for the staffs of departmental summer courses, of college of education courses, and of the summer schools operated by the various teachers' federations for their members and by school boards for their own pupils.

Other teachers take advantage of the opportunity to improve their own academic and professional standing during the summer months. The departmental committee on Grade 13 examinations has been responsible to a large degree over the past five years for the measures that have kept the release date of the examination results within reasonable bounds. The changes made as a result of the committee's recommendations include: the limited use of the more quickly marked objective-type questions on some of the papers; greater use of clerks for some of the clerical operations formerly carried out by teachers, who thus have more time for actual marking; the use of electronic data processing equipment for the tabulating of marks, the preparation of certificates and the sending of lists of results direct to the universities.

In addition, the university matriculation board in 1960 appointed a committee comprising representatives of the universities, the department, and the secondary schools to study the examination system with a view to earlier release of the results. This committee received submissions from several organizations and from over 400 individuals who were directly concerned with the instructional programme in the schools and the universities.

A major result of the committee's work was the decision to reduce the number of papers to be written by each candidate. This will not only reduce the time required for marking, but also will bring about certain educational advantages. It has already been announced that in 1965 there will be one three-hour paper, instead of two two-and-one-half hour papers, in each of the languages excepting English and Français. The plan includes measures to safeguard the time allotment for the study of languages in the schools and to keep teachers informed regarding the relative emphasis to be placed upon the various aspects of the course.

In 1966 there will be one three-hour paper in biology, based on the revised combined course, in place of the present two papers in botany and zoology.

In 1967 two papers are planned in mathematics in place of the present three, with the problems paper being retained as an extra paper.

While departmental and university matriculation board's studies have been progressing, numerous studies of a somewhat similar nature have been carried out by various organizations which are concerned with the problems of Grade 13. It will be recalled that in 1963 the Grade 13 departmental examinations began a week earlier than usual and the marking of the papers began about the middle of June. This plan enabled the department to release the results as early as the first of August.

However, neither the principals nor the school boards were entirely satisfied with the arrangement as it interfered to a degree with the existing programme within the school. Accordingly, the early writing and marking is not being used this year.

For the examinations of 1964, the committee on Grade 13 examinations presented several proposals for consideration. The principal suggestion was that part of each answer paper be marked in the schools by the Grade 13 teachers, who would use a uniform marking scheme prepared under the direction of the department. This marking would be subject to checking in Toronto during the regular marking period in July.

The committee was of the opinion that if Grade 13 examinations continue in their present form, some local marking will be inevitable and that for several reasons this is a good year in which to begin.

A further suggestion for two-hour papers instead of two-and-one-half hour papers was not considered possible for 1964.

These proposals were presented for consideration and comment to five organizations: the Association of Directors of Education, the Association of Secondary School Superintendents, the Ontario School Trustees' Council, the Ontario Secondary School Headmasters' Association, and the Ontario Teachers' Federation. While some of the groups expressed their willingness in the circumstances to have the plan of local marking the part of each paper tried, others were quite reluctant to support this radical change which might endanger some of the traditional safeguards of the examination.

I should say at this point, Mr. Speaker, that all of the recent Grade 13 studies of which I have heard, none has dealt with examinations alone. It is obvious that in Ontario there is a large body of informed opinion which believes that while a good deal can be said in favour of Grade 13, it is urgent that consideration be given to a review of this particular year of secondary education. A special committee of the university matriculation board, to which I referred earlier, summed up much of the current thought when it said in part:

There is much evidence at our disposal that the senior matriculation year should be not only a better liaison between secondary school and university than it is but also a richer educational experience for all students, whether they propose to go either to university or directly to some form of employment. This experience might be provided by the incorporation of a less restrictive prescription of courses, by the encouragement of wider reading, and by more exercise in analysis and synthesis. The examination should be such as to measure intellectual power and the understanding of a subject rather than detailed factual knowledge.

After consideration of the whole situation, I have come to the conclusion that the time is opportune for comprehensive study of the nature and function of the Grade 13 year in our educational system. Accordingly, I am naming a committee which will be representative of the department, the schools, the universities, and the school boards, to look into this question and to recommend for my consideration any changes which appear to be necessary and advisable in the Grade 13 year, including the examinations.

Since the study is to be made and since, consequently, some change in the future nature of the examinations might easily result, I have decided not to introduce local marking this year. Accordingly, the main body of markers will report for duty on Monday, June 29, which is the usual date.

Since this plan avoids the shortening of the school year and the problem of double pay, which caused some dissatisfaction last year, I am hopeful that the school boards, the directors, superintendents, principals, heads of departments, and the teachers will feel disposed to do everything they can to make available a sufficient number of markers for this year.

The appointment of the committee to study this very important phase in the education of our young people, gives promise of providing a permanent solution to many of the problems of Grade 13. Consequently, I hope that all concerned, particularly the candidates, the parents, the registrars and other admitting officials, will accept with some tolerance the fact that the release date for the results is not likely to be as early as it was last year.

It is my hope that the committee will be able, with the assistance of the excellent studies which have been made in the past four or five years by departmental curriculum revision committees and other groups that I have mentioned, to make a report to me by June 1 of this year.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased that the hon. Minister has taken the subject of Grade 13 in hand. However, I am most disappointed he has mentioned that they are not going to be marking locally.

Mr. Speaker: Would the member like to ask the Minister a question?

Mr. Newman: Yes. Has the hon. Minister taken into consideration the marking locally of the papers of those students who are not applying for scholarships? In that way he would find that the burden in the Toronto area in marking would not be as heavy; and the marks could possibly be presented to the students that much earlier.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this proposal, among many others, has been taken into consideration by the department. There are several others that are of some interest but, as I said in my statement, I felt in view of the fact that this study is being made—and it is a study that I think is very necessary—and with the possibility of some changes in Grade 13, that this is not the year to introduce measures which may or may not solve the problem we have in Grade 13. I would like to look forward to something of a more permanent nature.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The fourth order. Resuming the debate on the motion for second reading Bill No. 19, An Act to amend The Department of Energy Resources Act.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon when Bill No. 19 was presented to the House, I took it for granted that because only two words were changed in that particular commission there would be no debate whatsoever. I felt that, at that time, I would not interject with what I had to say. However, I might say that it has been changed from The Department of Energy Resources to The Department of Energy and Resources Management. So you had added “and” and “management”.

We spent all afternoon discussing that bill. The government took it on themselves, Mr. Speaker, to present two papers, and well prepared too, I might say, by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Simonett) and the hon. member representing the water resources commission (Mr. Root). Then we had the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) step in during the dying moments of the afternoon to pick up some press, too, and also found the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) getting involved. Finally, as you kept barbing us over here, I felt that as one who knows a little about water resources and the Hydro commission, as well as your regional development group—having sat on that commission for nine or ten years—I should interject, for what they are worth, my comments.

Now then, I might say I am not going to prejudice this government because the people gave it a good majority, Mr. Speaker, but there has been a discussion here whether it is a 20-year government or a two-year government. I have not determined which. If you bring it down to a two-year government, there are times when I think you treat us as a group of two-year-olds over here, who know no more than just that. But then again we must reverse this thing, Mr. Speaker, and I know I am off the subject for a moment, but I want to clear the wind a bit. When you make reference to a two-year-old, are you making reference to a horse or an egg? I am willing to reserve my decision on that, but before this session is out we might determine that in our own minds.

However, the hon. Minister of Agriculture got to his feet and said that this government spent $100 million on 112 projects. Am I right on the figures? Do you want to correct me on that?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): I will check on that.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): That is pretty good, anyway. The hon. member should go ahead.

Mr. Bukator: One hundred and twelve projects and $100 million involved. I know of four of these projects. In the first instance, when the water resources commission was established, I was the reeve of Chippawa at that time and we came to it for financing of the disposal plant we built. We felt it was necessary to clean up pollution, so we presented our proposal to Dr. Berry, who said it was a good idea. The commission was just starting out. However, rather than get it logged with water resources, we felt it would have been much cheaper for the municipality to issue its own debentures and build its own establishment.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Why did you not?

Mr. Bukator: We did.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, that is the answer.

Mr. Bukator: That takes care of number one. Bertie township built a waterworks plant and I am awfully sorry, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member from the waterworks commission, who gave the submission here because maybe he could put me on the right track. I can assure you, gentlemen, if I am wrong, I can easily admit it. I am not beyond making mistakes too.

It is nice to see the hon. member back.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Glad to oblige.

Mr. Bukator: We were there. It reminds me of that TV programme, This Was The Week—

An hon. member: Now, now, That Was The Week That Was.

Mr. Bukator: That Was The Week That Was. Now you have put me right. We have finally got to it. The year that was. I believe the chairman of that committee, at that time, oh no, the representative of the government, Mr. Snyder, attended an opening in Bertie township. The waterworks plant there was financed by the water resources commission. Now then, if the hon. Minister of Agriculture is right, you would take from what he said yesterday afternoon that this is paid for by the province.

Let me put the record straight, if you will. The commission comes into the picture after the municipality hires the engineer, or picks the engineer that it wants, because the government does not want to be dictatorial. However, the commission approves the engineering firm that lays out the work. The job is completed and the commission pays the bill. The municipality issues the debentures and gives them to you and, in turn, buys them back. In other words, the taxpayers of that municipality pay for that operation. After they have paid for it, then you hand the reins over to them, in 20 years or whenever the debt is paid. But that is not paid for by the province of Ontario.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That is right.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did not say it was.

Mr. Bukator: Well, we have cleared two points. We have cleared one with the hon. Prime Minister himself, and have cleared one with the hon. Minister of Agriculture. He says I did not say that the government paid it. Now then, you need not take the credit for something that you did not do.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is right.

Mr. Bukator: Point number three. The city of Niagara Falls built a large disposal plant. Now I do not know whether it was through the water resources commission or not, but I think it involves a figure of something like $5 million. However, I can assure you that the taxpayers of that city will be paying the bill, not the commission.

I remember the hon. Minister of Energy Resources getting to his feet here in the House of Commons some four or five years ago and saying that we built some 16,000 homes, by way of comparison, Mr. Speaker. We built some 16,000 homes in this province and I, before I was elected to the Legislature, built my own home, made my own down payment and was fortunate enough to get someone to take a mortgage on my place—even a politician—and I was paying my own bill. Finally I came into the Legislature and I find out that the province of Ontario built me a house. Now I was not in a position to get my hand into the pork barrel, if there is a pork barrel—I have not seen it yet.

An hon. member: Oh, there is one.

Mr. Bukator: But I did not have anything from this province to thank it for and I tell you that the village of Chippawa, the town of Fort Erie, recently, Mr. Member of the water resources commission, built a lovely establishment, and we were there again for tea and biscuits and publicity and pictures in the paper. The only thing I feel sorry about is that they did not have our picture in on that one. I do not know what happened.

Mr. Root: We were sabotaged.

Mr. Bukator: They wanted to keep the politicians out. However, the town of Fort Erie is paying the shot there. Now then let us come down the river a little farther.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Going over the falls there.

Mr. Bukator: No, down the river. We have got out of the lake and are coming down the river. The beautiful Niagara River that was, until Hydro got tangled up with it and now it is no more—that is in certain areas. If you have an east wind that pushes the water back up into the lake so that the Niagara River naturally recedes, and with your new treaty where you can take all of the water that you want into the tunnels for the United States and Canada to develop power—and rest assured we need it, you have come to the place where you have taken the water off the bottom. The wind pushes it back up the lake and you find that many homes which are ordinarily taking water out of the river, Douglastown being one that gets water out of the Black Creek, find themselves within the last week or two without any water whatsoever. You can blame it on the records—they claim that the water has never been so low in this particular province for 130 years—you have the necessary gadgets that you can prove that by. But I can remember before Hydro built those tunnels that we were never short of water in that period.

It is only natural that if the good Lord sends the water one way by an easterly wind and you take it off of the bottom, then the water will recede, and these are established facts. Below the Horseshoe Falls the water receded some 18 feet—that is about the figure I think—sometimes less than that. Now, sir, where we had the mighty turbulent waters, where we had the beautiful whirlpool, today you have a stagnant pool.

According to this treaty in the summertime they must allow to go over that beautiful Horseshoe Falls 100,000 cubic feet per second—that is during the summer months, after April. And when you sit there and watch that water finally tumbling over those rocks that are exposed through the night, you find there is sufficient water to make it look like a falls again, and the whirlpool begins to do what it ordinarily did for hundreds of years. You have ruined one of the finest tourist attractions in the world by taking these waters on your second treaty.

You have built a control dam on the Niagara River to control the water. You ought to see the ice jam we have there now. If ever the ice reaches the point where it floods out the people of Chippawa, where I happen to live, it may make some people happy. But you can rest assured that that particular condition was brought about by Hydro.

So we do not have quite as much fresh water as you said we had yesterday. You have destroyed the natural beauty of the Horseshoe Falls, you have ruined the rapids of the great Niagara River down to Queens-ton—mind you, when the water comes back, since the hon. member seems to be interested, into the lower Niagara again it comes to its natural level; naturally, the water comes in, develops its power, goes down in by Queens-ton and Lewiston and continues on in its natural form again.

However, I wanted to make the record straight on the disposal plants. This government should not take any credit for them at all. I can say that water resources are doing a good job, yes. They are assisting; they are bringing their experts in; and they finance when a municipality cannot get sufficient money because its credit has deteriorated to the stage where it cannot borrow any more; so the water resources steps in. But, mind you, if that municipality could afford to run its own show I assure you it could run it far cheaper than it does through water resources.

For all this damage you have done there should be some compensation—and I speak to the new hon. Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker, but especially to the hon. Prime Minister himself. I would believe that of all the tourists who come into our area, by the many avenues that they can come into the country, by the three or four bridges in our area, from coast to coast you may say, many eventually wind up at Niagara Falls.

In view of that—as a matter of fact they are moving the water so that if you are bird watchers, please come to Niagara Falls; we want you. The rocks are exposed and we have thousands and thousands—yes, I would say hundreds of thousands—of sea gulls. We have gull islands only until they let the water over again and the poor things have to go up the river and swim. So if you like birds bring your binoculars along and look over the mess of these islands that you have created; man-made islands; and of this the hon. members should be proud.

What I am going to draw to the attention of the hon. Prime Minister is that internationally controlled water dam—waterworks, call it what you like—that was built up in the Niagara River by the American corps of engineers—I believe that is what they call themselves in the United States—and your people. They have done an excellent job. This was a job that I would think would be unbelievable; to get into those fast waters and establish this control dam, which is a fine looking structure. See, I give the government credit; it is a fine looking structure.

If you are going to name that particular dam—because at the moment it is called the international control works or control dam—one of the greatest men that ever lived in this world of ours was John F. Kennedy, so I ask the hon. Prime Minister to consider the possibility of naming that the John F. Kennedy Control Dam. It is an international dam, a dam that was built by two great nations, by engineers who know their way around, and have proved that by the very fact that they could establish it in those turbulent waters between two countries which have lived so close together for 150 years. Mr. Speaker, they should be recognized.

This government has built something here that even I give it credit for; and that is something, coming from the Opposition. That should be, and I wish the hon. Prime Minister would take this into his consideration. I was asked to write to the hon. Prime Minister. I felt, however, that by writing a letter, with all the letters that he gets, there may be a chance that he would not have noticed it, for a while that is; and I do have the opportunity of presenting it to the House. I do believe that particular control dam should be named the John F. Kennedy dam, named after one of the greatest presidents the United States has ever had.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kent West.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my comments to the principle of the bill which is before the House now. When we ended up yesterday there was some discussion with regard to consistency and consistency is somewhat akin to constancy, and far be it from me—a bachelor member of this House—to dwell overlong on constancy. But I would say this, Mr. Speaker: yesterday we had a further example of the lack of consistency from the Liberal Party in which the hon. member for Downsview started off the debate by saying that he thought that the Ontario Water Resources Commission should remain under the supervision of The Department of Municipal Affairs; and towards the end of the afternoon the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) said that his party would support this bill as he thought it was a good move.

I think the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) should, somewhere along the line, straighten away this matter of inconsistency so that we all may know just where the Liberal Party stands on this bill.

I come from the riding of Kent West, which is an agricultural riding, and which is vitaly concerned with the principles of this bill. I have been a member of a conservation authority and I take particular interest, not only because I am from an agricultural area, in this bill. It seems to me in particular that we are dealing with the matter of water and we are dealing, I think, in this area with two particular fields. We are dealing, Mr. Speaker, with domestic water supply and we are also dealing with farm water supply, and I think that the two areas are somewhat separate.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that neither problem is as yet critical in my riding. It was dealt with at some length by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin yesterday afternoon in the House. I do not propose to elaborate on his comments, but I am pleased to note that the Ontario Water Resources Commission has made this House fully cognizant of the problems of the lack of water and the falling water table in Kent West.

During the debate yesterday there were a great number of suggestions as to how we can retain the supply of water and, in particular, cut down the spring run-off. I would endorse a study of all these suggestions. Also mentioned were small dams, the continuing programme to reduce the pollution of the water, the increased acquisition of conservation areas, woodlots and in particular, the suggestion which was advanced by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin, the retention of swamp lands.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that in my riding, if we are to accomplish these things, I think the government may have to give consideration to increasing assistance, if we are to have a continuation of the acquisition of woodlots and/or swamp lands.

Land in my riding and the riding which adjoins me often sells for in excess of $500 an acre. The farm people, whom I have the honour to represent, are very loath to turn this land over to woodlots or to leave it as swamp land, and it may well be that the government will have to consider, or may have to consider, increased assistance so that this very desirable programme will be achieved.

I was very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to see the hon. Minister of Agriculture taking part in the debate yesterday. It seems to me that if this new approach by the government, the co-ordination of the work of the water resources commission and the work of the conservation authorities branch, is to receive its fullest benefit, then The Department of Agriculture and, in particular, the ARDA section, must play a very full part in this programme. These people in The Department of Agriculture are the people who are most familiar with the farm water supply problem. I would hope that the hon. Minister of this new department would see fit to consult often and closely and work with the officials of The Department of Agriculture.

In brief, Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in congratulating the government on this switch in government departments and in bringing them together.

Mr. Singer: Why?

Mr. McKeough: I think it is a good step and it has been endorsed in part by the hon. member's party. I think that the bringing together of these two departments of government and placing them under The Department of Energy Resources will continue the strong leadership which the government has been giving in the field of water resources management. And I would again point out that this may require from the government increased assistance of one sort or another, most of all it will require continued leadership.

This is a big problem, it is a serious problem, and this move by the government would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, to be another step in the continuing effort of this government to meet this problem, and meet it head on.

Mr. Speaker, this is my first speech in the House and I close by congratulating you on your election to your high office.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the hon. member for Niagara Falls, has pointed out in his address, it seemed to me a very simple bill and should not have taken all the time and effort that was spent on research by the other side. It would seem to me again, in this labour of getting out this bill, the elephant brought forth a mouse.

In my address to this House earlier I referred to that very basic resource of water, and we have just heard about the very wonderful job that the Ontario Water Resources Commission has done. But it seems a strange thing to me that on May 18 we find in the Globe Magazine an article by the former general manager of the water resources commission, Dr. A. Berry, in which he talks about squandered water, and the article goes on that we must do things, we must store water, we must consider pollution, and all these things. After seven years, we find it is now a must!

But there is one thing that hon. members very well know, in northern Ontario many of our watersheds are denuded of forest life and we frequently get flooded conditions. How in heaven's name are we going to get conservation authorities—for example, in the Nipissing watershed, the Sturgeon River watershed, where we have had floods from time to time, and very serious ones in 1960; and the river flows through an area where there are about 90-odd unorganized townships? How then, if the government sets up a conservation authority where many of the projects will be built in unauthorized townships, how is the government possibly going to finance them when these do not contribute anything? So I seriously suggest to the hon. Minister that he consider some legislation so that not only in my own area, but in other areas of northern Ontario, if one wants to set up conservation authorities they will not be an unnecessary burden on the municipalities.

Finally, as hon. members very well know, I was going to read a long article here following the government side on more water and particularly the scheme of the Kierans brothers. It seems fantastic now, but a few years ago space travel was considered fantastic. I strongly urge the hon. Minister and the Cabinet to consider very closely the scheme of the Kierans brothers, so that the water that now flows to James Bay and Hudson Bay eventually may go through—I do not want to argue with my hon. colleague from Niagara Falls, Mr. Speaker, but I think we might call that grand canal the J. F. Kennedy canal—when the waters from the Hudson Bay and James Bay will flow down into Lake Huron there will be control dams at Mattawa and then through the height of land in the vicinity of North Bay and down into the Georgian Bay and on to Lake Huron.

An hon. member: How about Lake Superior?

Mr. Troy: Well, the hon. member's lake is controlled and the area at Sault Ste. Marie does not lose as much, it can be controlled there; but Lake Huron, for example, I understand last year was 18 inches below its normal level. Any time there is a reduction in the level of the lake it is certainly going to affect the transportation industry, the shipping in the Great Lakes. As hon. members very well know, there is a tremendous amount of water being drained off by Chicago and American cities, so that eventually some day, maybe not in my time, there will be this grand canal and we will be able to sell the water to the United States. So I think if the hon. Minister has not already done so—we got short shrift last year from the former Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) when we made this proposal and when the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) had made it in other years—I think serious consideration must be given, with the federal government, with the province of Quebec and with American authorities in regard to this grand canal scheme of the Kierans.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I am rising in this debate on two points. The first was that with the avalanche of speakers after the Parliament had adjourned, I talked to one of them, perhaps I was a little uncharitable in my commendation on his speech. I understand that the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin had got all those statistics about the precipitation, or whatever it was that he was talking about, speaking about the 1800's and many other things, that he dug these facts out all himself.

The other point, sir, that I wanted to mention is that, we are for water. I would say that we are consistent in this, and I would suggest Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for Kent West, who spoke previously, that where the government has shown consistency is in their inconsistency. He suggests that this new change of name was a good step. May I tell him that they have walked and marched a long way. There were many steps until this water resources has finally found a home. Our concern, mainly, is that this should be the last step in connection with the place that water resources should be.

As I listened to the speeches I noticed that —am I being corrected with respect to this—that the hon. Minister from Huron (Mr. MacNaughton) read us a speech, in his modest way, that he had made in 1959. I think that in this he was pointing out that he was a sort of modern Noah, in that he was suggesting at that time that there should be amalgamation of resources. I do not know what his point was in this except that he wanted to stamp himself as the author in finally, in 1964, getting a home for water resources.

I would also say that the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker, as I heard him speak I could not help thinking back to the debate I listened to when the hon. Mr. Bill Nickle stood up at that time. I think, and in the empire which he had then, water resources was included, and he spoke with the same fluency and desire to keep an empire. I always felt with the hon. Bill Nickle he was a man with a great deal of charm, I felt when I came to the House first, Mr. Speaker,

I saw here an empire that he had and when I was sitting in the House at that time that the empire was gradually vanishing, like the Roman empire. Among the vanishing parts was that of water resources.

However, we have another partition taking place and I congratulate the hon. Minister who is in charge of water resources that he is building up this new empire. I hope it will be more permanent than the hon. Billy Nickle's empire was in water resources.

But I say this, the point that we have been consistent about is that we do not want to see this constant shuffling of departments; and this is the point that the hon. member for Downsview was making.

The second point which he was making—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: The second point that he was making—

Interjection by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Thompson: The second point that he was making, and which I am trying to make, sir, was that we are concerned about the role of commissions. Now the hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, has said that this is an old argument of the Opposition to bring up the idea that commissions do not report to the people through the Legislature. He said that we bring up an argument with respect to commissions that they are not as democratic as if they were in the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Roberts. Mr. Speaker, I really said that it is an old ploy on the part of the Opposition to try to give the impression that this government is always hiding things. Now that is what I said, and I followed this by saying that the affairs of this commission would be studied by the committee on government commissions.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I had been interested in that we have talked about the Gordon report that has been made with respect to the organization and I was interested in the previous Prime Minister's, hon. Mr. Frost's remarks when he introduced the findings of the Gordon report. If I can read from that, sir, it was on February 1, 1960, and the Prime Minister of that time said and I quote:

Mr. Speaker, the problem we have discussed in this House, and the problem with which we have been very much concerned over many years, is the matter of making boards and commissions—which I say are inevitable—responsible to the assembly, to the people and to the government.

I also say this, that perhaps one of the weaknesses of parliamentary government—and I am not saying anything new, I have often said this before in this House and elsewhere—one of the weaknesses of parliamentary government has been the tendency to concentrate powers in the executive in the Cabinet without regard to the membership of the House. That is something we have often heard discussed.

May I say, sir, that the Prime Minister of previous times is really saying what my hon. colleague, the hon. member for Downsview, was saying. We are concerned that there should not be an increasing growth of these commissions. We are concerned that such things as the resources of our province should have to report to the Legislature and be thoroughly examined by the Legislature and, as he suggested, perhaps they should be a branch rather than a commission.

I want to again say the two points that we were making were: one, in connection with the constant shuffling that is taking place with respect to government departments I could, sir, just mention that a couple of days ago we had a situation of a lonely orphan, the apprenticeship branch, illogically placed in The Department of Labour instead of being within the ambit of The Department of Education. Similarly we see many other situations of departments moving around and being illogically placed.

This was the concern of the Gordon report. The Gordon report was suggesting the principles of administration and when I am talking of the Gordon report, the hon. leader of the new party (Mr. MacDonald) had suggested that—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Is that Walter Gordon?

Mr. Singer: That is the man.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): He certainly indicated how feeble was his grasp of those principles when he brought his first budget in, all right.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I should say that in connection with the report, the Gordon report—I could again read, for I happen to have the complimentary introductions with respect to Mr. Gordon and his report on the part of the former Prime Minister—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I would say the purpose of this report and the principles that it laid down was that we should have some co-ordination in administration and the Gordon report, when it was introduced by the Prime Minister of former times, was said by him not to have gone into detail. It was not expected to and our point is this that if you had something like a Glassco report now—surely when we see the way departments are shuffled around, surely we can reach further and go into detail, and I think it could save the taxpayers a great deal of expense as well as get some logic into the whole operation of government.

The purpose of the Gordon report, sir, had been to give logic to government administration and I notice that an hon. Minister over there says with pride, we did not follow the Gordon report. In other words, he is suggesting we have not brought logic into this administration. Those were the points that we are making, sir. May I end again by assuring the hon. member who spoke before me that the Opposition is for the principle of water.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, those of us who are new in the House are learning somewhat rapidly that we can expect the unexpected and in this debate I think we are learning that lesson.

There are some remarks I want to make on this subject and I might as well make them at this time.

Since the dawn of history water has been of primary concern to mankind. Drought has always threatened his economic existence if not his very survival. And so in time of water shortage man has turned to the supernatural, either to blame or in supplication, or both. Rain-making through a variety of incantations has been one of the functions of the tribal chiefs and of the high priests who hoped that with enough volume of supplication they might persuade the deity to show favour and open the heavens to the parched earth beneath.

I notice by the morning paper that witchcraft is not ended in Ontario. A charge has just been laid in Hamilton, which harks back to what one would think would be a by-gone age.

Yesterday afternoon we saw the spectacle in this House of the chiefs of the Tory tribes, one after the other, utter their incantations on behalf of the water table. They called upon the water gods to fill the wells and the reservoirs and bring relief to the dusty fields in this their province.

Well, sometimes incantations in the past were occasioned by a simple act of God. No rain came. At other times the carelessness of man was responsible. Man has an infinite capacity for plundering natural resources without any thought of the future. The Tigris and Euphrates Valley, as well as the northern border of the Sahara, are all too clear examples of what can happen when the forest cover is removed, and the swamps are dried up or drained. Then man wonders why the gods have withheld the bounties of the rain from his parched land.

We have a similar situation facing us today. Because over the years we have done the job here in Ontario of clearing the forests and removing the cover, the watersheds run the water off much more rapidly than they should—or did in the early days. Then we started to drain the swamps, and we even paid people or loaned them money to do it. As the cities grew and streets were paved, the run-off became even more rapid. Any engineer can tell us about that.

As this process went on measures should have been taken—we know what they are—to compensate for the swamps and the land that would soak up the water, and for the lack of forest cover. More than ten years ago this government was warned of this fact, the fact that danger was threatening.

The hon. Minister of Highways said yesterday that something was done after that report. Whatever it was, it certainly was not enough. The water table continued to recede and the danger increase.

Then came last summer and the usual thing happened. Having failed to do the things necessary to compensate for the run-off, having failed to build fast enough—to supply the dams, the farm ponds and water-works to arrest the rapid run-off—we raised the incantations. What we heard in this House yesterday was the rain gods being blamed for our plight, and effectively blamed. Three times we heard the figures.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: It is better now, it was raised by the tears—

Mr. Young: Fine, fine! We will add that and maybe it will bring up the water table. But the fault was not ours, we were told. What happened was simply that the rain god withheld his bounty. We heard that over the past few years precipitation was less than usual and last year things were pretty bad. The gods were to blame. Not enough rain came to satisfy the parched earth, and so dust began to blow, and desperation was seen in the lush farming areas of Ontario.

But the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Pittock) punctured this illusion, so carefully built up by the chiefs. After he too had blamed the rain gods, he did something that is often done in the stables of the province, he kicked over the bucket, in this case it was a water bucket. He pointed out that actually enough rain had fallen to look after our needs, that the gods had not in fact withheld their bounty, but that our incredible lack of good conservation practices had really been responsible. This is what he pointed out to us, and I quote from the morning Toronto Globe and Mail:

Ontario uses less than one per cent of the rainfall that runs away at the rate of 100 gallons a day for each person in the province. If we can conserve only three-quarters of an inch from our average run-off of 11 inches of precipitation a year, we would have ample water, he said.

So it comes down to this: The water is falling, not as much as in previous years it is true, but more than enough if we had not removed the protective features that nature had provided. But there is still enough if we had substituted other devices for the protective covering that we have removed.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: What would the hon. member suggest?

Mr. Young: Well, we will come to that. The hon. Minister of Agriculture made an interesting remark yesterday, Mr. Speaker. He said that if drought last summer did nothing else—if I am quoting him correctly, I do not have Hansard yet—it brought forcibly to the attention of the government the situation that exists. And he pointed out the need for action.

It is interesting that the drought has brought forcibly to the attention of the government a situation that one of its own select committees outlined ten years ago. Perhaps that is par for the course—ten years for truth to seep through.

I know that something has been done. The hon. Minister of Highways has assured us that something has been done. But the select committee in those years pointed out the need for action and also stressed urgency. I think this urgency is the thing that this government has not quite comprehended.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture also pointed out with some pride, yesterday, something that had been accomplished in his own riding. He pointed out that the smallest conservation authority in the province had done a real job in building up farm ponds. Farm ponds are one of the devices that my hon. friend advocates. If we can bring up the farm ponds in our province to a high enough number, it is going to help markedly in this job of raising the water table. I think our hon. friend opposite realizes this fact and so the hon. Minister of Agriculture says this has been undertaken.

But he made this significant remark, again I hope I am quoting him correctly: he said he is a member of the smallest conservation authority in the province. And then he said that, that this smallest conservation authority has built one-quarter of all the farm ponds in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: One-third.

Mr. Young: One-third—even worse. This is the record of this government after ten years of warning. That is the smallest conservation authority. Water is essential. Yet the smallest conservation authority has built one-third of all the farm ponds in Ontario. And farm ponds are pretty vital in this whole matter.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This is one conservation authority which put the emphasis on water.

Mr. Young: Good, and I think the hon. Minister deserves credit here—if he was the driving force behind this. Perhaps he can talk to some of his friends on the benches opposite and show them what can be done.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I do not want to infer that at all.

Mr. Young: The problem we have is a very simple one. Shifting a department or calling it by another name is not going to do the job. I remember, when I was a boy, that we always looked with happiness during dry spells when the moisture-laden east wind came blowing in over our province. But when the dry hot west wind came off the badlands we knew we were in for a bit of trouble.

I do not think all the hot air that blew with such great gusts through this chamber yesterday is going to solve the problem; and it is not going to solve it unless certain definite action is undertaken. We know the need; the need first of all is to build dams, to build the farm ponds, to multiply the storage areas where this water—which is now running off because of our lack of conservation in the past and because, perhaps, of the very on-going nature of our civilization and the need to clear land—can be held so it can seep down into the ground.

We must see to it that the swamp land we have is no longer drained, that it continues as a sponge and a feeder of the water table beneath.

We know these things but we are leaving them to other authorities to work out.

I stress this word management in the new department. We cannot leave it to other departments to give the lead and then follow on, because management has certain responsibilities here. The conservation authorities in this province, I think, are doing a good job within their financial limitations. They would do far better if a better financial arrangement was made. But even though they are doing this, I think the illustration of the hon. Minister of Agriculture yesterday shows the limitations here—where a third of the farm ponds are in his small authority. So we need more done along this line.

One of the problems the conservation authorities face is that they cannot control the pollution of our streams. This has to be done through the municipalities and, while the Ontario Water Resources Commission is there willing to help, so far it has not carried on the initiation that is necessary.

I have in my hands a report from the information service of the Ontario Water Resources Commission. It says that action is required by the responsible municipalities and individuals, as well as industries, to eliminate discharge of untreated water waste—both domestic and industrial—into the Welland River. The report covers surveys from 1959 to 1963.

Then, in the Toronto Daily Star of January 21, we have the headline:

POLLUTION CRISIS IN METRO BY 1980

Metro faces a severe water pollution by 1980 unless immediate steps are taken to prevent it, the Metro Regional Conservation Authority reported.

Pollution often reaches several hundred times levels accepted as safe by the Ontario Water Resources Commission. It showed that Metro standards for sewage treatment are behind those of other countries and may need to be raised. The Don and the Humber rivers are grossly polluted.

So the report said. It blamed the discharge of inadequately treated sewage. We know that, particularly to the west of the Metro planning area, where Metro is not responsible for initiating sewage treatment plants, that the headwaters of some of those small rivers and creeks are being polluted seriously by the effluent of other municipalities.

The job is a twofold one. This department should immediately embark upon a programme to, first of all, maintain what it is doing. I think this is good as far as it goes, assisting municipalities and the conservation authorities to build the dams, put in the water treatment plants and all the rest of it. But it is almost useless for one or two municipalities along a stream or a river to put in their sewage disposal plants if the others do not do the same thing.

While this job is maintained, the second thing that must happen is for this department to begin now programmes which it will initiate and finance in co-operation, perhaps, with municipalities. But it must have the financial resources to pick out the most seriously polluted of our rivers where conservation work most needs to be done and, at a provincial level under this department, initiate and carry through this conservation work, while maintaining the kind of assistance which it is giving to the other municipalities and the conservation authorities.

Only by provincial action are we going to get the urgent job done. We can keep on fiddling as we have in the past—and the past ten years I think is an illustration of what this government has accomplished—not enough and not in time. And we are up against a serious problem.

So we are going to watch the action of this new department with interest. We hope that the torrent of words that flowed in this House yesterday will be matched by a torrent of water, falling, being conserved and not being allowed to run away, so that that torrent of water will be maintained behind the dams and in the reservoirs, and come up through the springs and the wells of this province to solve the problem which we face. So we look forward, Mr. Speaker, to results in this department and we hope that it will take seriously the job of management of the water resources of this province.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am usually able to define the political manoeuvrings of the government opposite, usually able to assess their intent and purpose, but it must be that I am failing in those capabilities to some extent for I have not yet fully grasped the significance of the manoeuvring that went on on the government side yesterday in relation to this particular bill. I want to emphasize to the House, Mr. Speaker, that this was in reality a very simple bill, it was the second reading of the bill, it was properly moved by my friend, the hon. Minister from Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Simonett) and the bill itself simply changes, as my hon. friend from Niagara Falls said, two words in the title of the new department.

Now the hon. Minister, quite properly, in his explanation on the second reading of the bill, told us that there was being transferred to this new department several segments of government, the Ontario Northland Railway, the conservation branch and the water resources commission.

Now there was no mention in my hon. friend's explanation of this transferral that there was to be any change in the make-up, in the legislation, in respect to any one of these segments of government. So I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that at times yesterday you must have been moved, knowing your great powers of discernment and your desire for meticulous observance of the rules of debate, you must have been moved at times yesterday to declare that the discussion, the whole discussion, was completely out of order.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the only discussion that was in order yesterday had pertinent relevance to the bill itself, and the bill simply says that three existing units of government were being transferred from where they presently were to this new department promoted in the bill introduced by my hon. friend from Frontenac-Addington.

Now then, I would say to the House, and I think it should be said in case there is a repetition of what happened yesterday, Mr. Speaker, as soon as my hon. friend from Downsview completed his remarks, which were proper in every respect, surely we on this side of the House can support a bill and at the same time set out what in our judgment are the limitations of that bill. Surely we have not got to say that every "t" that is crossed and every "i" that is dotted meets with our complete approval. Surely that is our job in the House, to find out what in our thinking are the shortcomings of the bill, and that is what my hon. friend from Downsview pointed out, quite properly. It does not mean at all that we are not in favour of the principle of the bill or that we do not intend to support it.

But whatever it was, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friends unleashed on an unsuspecting and unappreciative Legislature a barrage of words, the like of which I have never listened to and I hope I do not have to endure again. Hon. Minister and private hon. member, one after the other, came into the House with prepared documents, written I do not suppose by themselves, but by someone anyway, who was quite competent in the art of writing, but he did not take into account the effect that the reading of his writing would have on the hon. members of the Legislature. Each one of these hon. members, armed to the teeth with a sheaf of typewritten pages, started to read.

Well, now, I begin to wonder—hon. Ministers of the Crown, hon. members without portfolios, heads of commissions of the government, reading for an hour at a time from a prepared text that was completely out of order so far as its relation to the subject-matter under discussion — I found myself wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether we in this House were trying to promote the art, if it can be called an art, of reading long extracts of this and that, whether that was to take the place of what I always understood this Legislature was for, and that was a forum for public discussion, public debate, not for reading hours at a time from prepared manuscripts.

I would say this to you and to the hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, if this is an innovation, and if he intends to pursue this innovation that he practised on we unwilling people on this side of the House yesterday, then I say to him this: we on this side of the House can also read and we will, if he is going to continue this sort of a manoeuvre that was practised yesterday, then we have or we will secure manuscripts, we will secure extracts from periodicals, we will read from books, Mr. Speaker, that have speaking relationship to the subject under discussion even though not a blood relation, we will read at just as great a length as my hon. friends opposite, because we are just as good readers as they are.

The trouble with all my hon. friends opposite is that not only can they not make a speech without reading, but they cannot read well. We are a long-suffering crowd on this side, but that we cannot stand. If they are going to inflict it on us, we will return the compliment, and mark my words, that is an absolute statement of fact.

My hon. friend, and I say this, started out this session, I thought, in a very good manner. I mean, I think he brought order where order did not exist before, he called private members' resolutions early in the debate and I thought we were going along swimmingly and having in mind the good conduct of the House. Well, we can swim after all the water we had yesterday, at any rate.

I just wanted to make this point clear. Yesterday my hon. friend departed from that. Up until yesterday we had reason to expect that we would consider a number of bills for a short time and then go into the debate on the Speech from the Throne. Now, yesterday my hon. friend and his cohorts came into this House prepared to alter, prepared to alter, that plan of action.

Mr. MacDonald: It was a calculated breach of the rules.

Mr. Oliver: Now, if it was a calculated breach, as the hon. member for York South says, and if it was calculated to keep hon. colleagues of mine from speaking yesterday, then I say to my hon. friend that every one of my colleagues will speak in this House every time they want to speak and as long as they want to speak, even if we have to stay here until July. I say this, that as far as the bill itself is concerned we are in favour of the bill, there was no indication from anywhere that we are not; yesterday was just a sham battle on the part of my hon. friends opposite.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, we have been led far from the principle of the bill and I do not intend to address any remarks to the principles of this bill.

There are some other matters which the hon. leader of the Opposition has just raised which matters, perhaps, I should speak about. First of all, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some inference from the other side that I controlled the debate yesterday. I will repeat, as I have repeated here many times, that I accept your rulings, Mr. Speaker, and if you did not find yesterday's debate out of order, I do not think it lies with me to decide that it was, and the debate having taken place under your direction and jurisdiction I accept this. I made it very clear at the beginning of the session that, when you were appointed Speaker, there would be no difficulty with your rulings as far as the government was concerned. I believe I can accomplish what I want in this House, within the rules of the House, and I am quite prepared to abide by them and to abide by your interpretation.

As regards the question of reading, of course, I rather have a suspicion at the back of my mind, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. leader of the Opposition is merely attempting to cover up rather an embarrassing position in which he finds himself by a long discussion about rules and debates and things that are far from the point at hand. However, I will comment upon his remarks as far as reading is concerned; traditionally, reading is, I believe, if we go back far enough, not permitted.

In fact, in the House of Commons at Westminster there are no desks. This makes it extremely difficult to read when you have no place to do so—as I have seen many hon. members of the Opposition and many hon. members on the government side do, and that is bring in a stack of Hansards so that they can get their reading material up close to their eyes. This is not an uncommon practice on all sides of the House.

I would say this: primarily reading is done by the newer members of the Legislature and I think we must have a good deal of tolerance and latitude in our approach to this particular problem. Certainly new members are not experienced, unless they have had experience in municipal councils and various other places—I read the first speech I ever delivered in this House and I am not ashamed of that because I was not aware of the rules or just what I would run into. We try to observe the rule that a maiden speech is not interrupted; sometimes this rule is not exactly observed, but I think we must take a rather lenient attitude towards the reading of documents.

From the government's point of view, I would point out that this Legislature is a place where we make statements of government policy which are of interest to all the people of the province. Such a statement, for instance, was read this morning by the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis); such a statement was read by the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Auld)—until that bill gets third reading and Royal Assent the name of that department has not changed. This reading is bound to occur because there are necessary places in debate where such things can be done; it is traditional.

The government announces its position on various matters of interest to the people, and various policies in this manner. This is the way we tell the people of this province the direction in which the government is going. If the Opposition disagree with us they have the opportunity in debate, in estimates and so on, to state their disagreement; and I have never found any particular reluctance on their part to so state their disagreement.

But it does entail reading because these statements have to be accurate. We want them to be accurate, and we want a clear position of where we stand, because this government hides nothing and we are prepared to put these things in front of the people of the province so that they may understand where we stand and what we propose to do. So there will be a certain amount of reading from the government side and, frankly, to deal with the final point made by my hon. friend when he said we will be here in July, that is a "me too-ism" because I believe that is the comment I used when there was some worry last year that we were going to finish too soon. I will stay here until August—because I am here anyway.

I would simply say, as far as the opinions that may be expressed by the hon. members of the Opposition are concerned, that I am delighted to listen to them whether they speak off-the-cuff or whether they read them. I have no interest whatsoever in how long they are. I will schedule the finish of this House to permit every hon. member to say everything he has to say on every conceivable subject whatsoever that comes before the Legislature.

I hope that we have this straightened out for the balance of the session and, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could vote on the motion?

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, at long last I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate you on your appointment. I know of your record as an outstanding player and I am quite sure that the transition from the diamond to chief umpire of this House will further increase your stature.

To the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) may I say that I subscribe to the feeling that he is Everyman—a bit taller—and I commend him for the dignity he lends to this House as our Prime Minister for Ontario, Canada's leading province. The same thought goes for the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver).

Mr. Speaker, my first impressions of this House are hard to describe after 15 years in municipal government, but with the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter) I do agree that we could all learn some decorum and dignity from municipal councils. I think we should be able to disagree without being disagreeable.

Sometimes it seems here that we choose sides and it is a battle of repartee across the House. In fact, it is a lot like the situation in Coventry, England. When I was over there a pompous Englishman told me: "Over here in Coventry Lady Godiva rode a horse through the streets without any clothes on. She rode side-saddle, and half of the population were shouting 'hooray for our side'."

Mr. Speaker, most of us carry pictures of the things that we are proud of in our wallet, our wives or our children, and before revealing to this House some blatant political chicanery on behalf of the government, I would like to take a few moments very briefly of your time to paint a picture of the riding that I am very proud to represent, the riding of Grey North. I would like to point out, sir, the proud record of achievement of this great riding. Its great potential and the need for government attention is of paramount importance to me. Grey North, as you are probably all aware, most of you who are farmers by occupation, is about the largest producer of the finest beef cattle in the Dominion of Canada. It has fine dairy herds and mixed farming and covers an area comparable to from Hamilton to Oshawa in breadth, from the lakefront of Toronto north to Barrie. It is an area of rich farmland, fine forests, lakes, valleys; and the finest apples in the world, hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), are grown in the Beaver Valley and Thornbury-Clarksburg areas.

Owen Sound, the capital city of this area, is the home of more war heroes than any other county in Canada, such VC winners as Tommy Holmes, Colonel Currie and Billy Bishop; and it is a matter of record that more men and women leave to join Her Majesty's forces from Grey county than any other county in the Dominion of Canada. Owen Sound, as you all know, is the home of the famous great hockey team, Memorial Cup champs, the Owen Sound Mercuries, and the lacrosse Mann Cup champions.

In this rich farming area we have the thriving city of Owen Sound, which makes the largest steel propellers in the world—Black Clawson-William Kennedy and Sons—the home of RCA-Victor plant for television sets for all Canada, Russell Hipwell steel boats, Hobarts of Canada, Edwards of Canada, R.B.W.—all these firms are doing business on a world-wide basis from their base in Owen Sound. To support these industries we need an area trade school in the city of Owen Sound.

Further, Mr. Speaker, Owen Sound is the gateway to the north, a summer playground and a winter playground, and to develop this area we need a four-lane highway going north from Toronto or Hamilton.

In the beautiful town of Meaford, 20 miles to the east of Owen Sound on Georgian Bay, we have a healthy bustling town, boasting such industries as Amerock of Canada, Knight Manufacturing, Globe Knitting Mills, Bovell Brothers, to name a few. Adjacent to Meaford is the apple valley of Canada, the Thornbury and Clarksburg apple-growing region—the like of which apples are found no place else in the world. The hon. Minister of Agriculture told me yesterday, Mr. Speaker, that he thought that the experimental farms in Niagara Falls area was sufficient—not for experimental farms as far as apples are concerned.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misquoting me. I said nothing of the kind. I said to the hon. member that there was Vineland experimental station that dealt with apples and I made no inference that it was sufficient nor that it would suffice for the Owen Sound area.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, the implication from the hon. Minister was that there was no need to discuss it, in his mind, because there was an experimental station for apples in the Niagara area. Now that is comparing, Mr. Speaker, the Niagara apples to Beaver Valley apples, like comparing Mr. MacNaughton to Sir John A. Macdonald. I will be after this matter before the House to see that we have in this area an experimental farm.

In this area we now have the finest ski area in the Dominion of Canada, the Blue Mountain ski area. It is a tribute to private enterprise that Joseph Weiler has built this area into a million-dollar corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I could speak for an hour or so on this great area, but in finalizing this part of my remarks, I wish to draw to the attention of this House that we have many needs for attention in this area that I will present to this House at a later date.

As Disraeli said a long time ago, politics is nothing but organized opinion. I would say to the hon. Prime Minister, we on this side of the House, my hon. leader (Mr. Oliver) and my colleagues, are going to organize opinion in this province to show the people of Ontario what his government truly is, a smug arrogant machine, built up with 20 years of political patronage and all its parasites.

Now let me show an example. In the Speech from the Throne, the hon. Prime Minister makes reference, on page 7, to the activities of the Ontario Development Agency, the ODA. It says, and I quote:

It will be extended in the coming fiscal year through increased services to our industrial community.

It goes on to say the scope of this ODA, what it has done, in great figures of millions of dollars, in servicing some 600 industries. Those figures—I question where all these figures come from.

Now, while congratulating the government—and incidentally I will sincerely congratulate the government on this new appointment, the hon. Mr. Randall on his appointment—but in congratulating them on the intent and the idea behind this authority and at the same time questioning all these figures quoted, I would like to ask the government, and the hon. Prime Minister, if he plans to continue the operations of the ODA in the same manner as in 1963? If so, will it be used for political pump priming and expediency? I refer to a glaring piece of business, Mr. Speaker, which I believe was not in the public interest.

Last spring, many hon. members will recall, a loan was made to an Owen Sound industry. The first loan, I believe, made under this newly formed authority.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): The loan was guaranteed.

Mr. Sargent: Many in the House will recall that we in Owen Sound—and being aware that an election was in the offing when the loan was granted, it was well timed—were informed by the ODA top brass that it was a highly secret matter until the announcement was made in the House by the Minister. With great fanfare the announcement was made and to be perfectly frank, Mr. Speaker, regardless of who received the credit, we in Owen Sound were grateful to be able to put about 50 people to work. Geographically we have problems in getting industry. We were happy about this, but we had our own money in it too. To be completely fair, the Act itself was a credit to the hon. Prime Minister, his Minister and the government.

Loans to the industry in total amounted to about $130,000. The interest was intense and the industry showed signs of getting on its feet. The firm was struggling and we were constantly working with them reviewing their sales picture, and Queen's Park had constant supervision too, up until election day, September 25. On September 26, the day after election, when the Conservative candidate was defeated, the order came through to close the plant down.

This order came from Mr. Mitchell, the assistant to Mr. Echin, the director of the ODA. Where Mr. Echin got his instructions I do not know, but the day after the election, Mr. Speaker, some 50 people in Owen Sound lost their jobs and they are still unemployed. Now while commending the government to this point, I cannot condone as a member of this Legislature, the complete disregard for the rights of people and their jobs. I cannot condone the spending of $130,000 of the money of the taxpayers of Ontario in an obvious effort to secure the election of the Conservative candidate. In brief, the deal was a good one up until September 25, election day. The day after election, it was not, it was washed out completely.

Now, Mr. Speaker, either the close-down order the day after the election was a striking coincidence or a blatant disregard of the public interest. Most of us, as public servants, would like to think that it was a coincidence. However, if it was not, it is a sad state of affairs when public money—not the Conservatives' money, it is public money—when public money can be used to serve political needs and be cut off like turning off a light switch.

I am not so naive, I would tell the hon. Prime Minister, to believe that one can take politics out of politics, but I do think there is an area for integrity. I cannot conceive of our hon. leader or anyone in our group openly admitting, to go about the country before an election and say if you will vote Conservative we will give you this and that—all across the province. The hon. Prime Minister is smiling, and admits this is what happens before an election.

The people who lost their jobs, Mr. Speaker, the people of Ontario, are entitled to an answer and I would like to ask the hon. Minister: if this was not a good deal why was the loan made? If it was a bad deal, why did they wait until the day after the election to close the plant and fire 50 people?

Mr. Speaker, the needs of the people of Ontario continue to be cut off; in reference on page 19 in the Speech from the Throne, with regard to municipal relief.

The hon. Prime Minister and the hon. members of his government should be aware that many municipalities of this province have approached the safe loan limit and are facing bankruptcy within three or four years unless immediate revision of taxing methods are not finalized. The Ontario municipalities harbour the greatest concentration of wealth in the nation and have the least recourse of all levels of government to that wealth; and to say that municipalities cannot afford the things they need is absolutely false. The simple fact is that the money is going elsewhere to be spent, and when it gets back to the municipality there is little left.

There has been no revision in the basis of taxation since the year 1904, and in 1964 in the Speech from the Throne there is no promise of relief. We received the voluminous report of the second interim report on this and they told us not a thing new that we did not know ten years ago. It looks to me as though, although you have a very capable Minister of Municipal Affairs in Mr. Spooner—he is doing a wonderful job for municipalities—the government policy is entirely wrong. It looks to me as though the government approaches this matter like they are riding a tiger—they cannot steer it and they cannot get off.

To finalize this matter, this report said nothing. We all know that 50 per cent of the education tax bite is still being loaded on to real estate and here is an example of a year of committee work—we are the most committee House in the world, everything is committees. Someone in 1927 told Mr. Kitling of GM that Lindberg had flown the Atlantic alone. He said: "That is nothing, let him try it with a committee".

To finalize this section, the very fact that most hon. members are here shows that they do care what happens to this province, what happens to their constituencies and what happens to their people. And it is a sorry state of affairs, Mr. Speaker, in this most important field of control by this House of municipal legislation that the hon. Prime Minister saw fit to allow three lines in his Speech from the Throne on this matter. Because, believe me, this is one of the most important pieces of legislation we will have to deal with in the life of this Legislature.

The government says the matter will be given study and consideration. Without being too facetious, I would suggest that we can be optimistic—like the man who went to the city hall to find out when his marriage licence expired.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most glaring needs of the people of this province today is the need for more hospital beds and more nurses, and the government takes the attitude that this problem will be given seven lines of space in the Speech from the Throne. We all agree that our needs are great in this field —hospital beds and more nurses. Every one of us knows the present accommodation is woefully inadequate, and the government's plan is to make a study of the costs. "A study is being made of the cost".

While congratulating the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop) on his excellent address and new line of thought, I suggest to the hon. members of this House that our society last year paid $500 million to sit in cocktail bars and become numb; they spent $600 million to watch the rear end of a horse and their money disappear at Woodbine.

What gives the government the quaint idea we cannot pay for a little nursing? Why can we not give nurses a schedule of salaries equivalent to those of professional people like teachers? Why can nurses not be given a pension plan? The nurses are not paid as much as secretaries. In this regard I think the doctors should go to bat for the nurses.

In 1963, The Department of Health had an increase of 11 per cent in its budget, yet the demand increased 30 per cent due to hospitalization.

Further I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is a gross injustice of the government to ask two-thirds of the people of Ontario to pay $20 million towards subway construction in the city of Toronto.

Last night a Department of Labour official was in the city of Owen Sound at our council meeting and he was discussing the new apprenticeship Act. Numerous times he mentioned that this was the Robarts Act, this was a Robarts plan, and after hearing this a number of times I stopped him and asked him if he had been brainwashed down in his department, and he said, "No, that is what they call these things down there." This is the Robarts plan, the Robarts Act.

I suggested to him that when the sales tax went on did he call it the Robarts sales tax?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sargent: The hard-pressed taxpayer—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Ask the rest of the people of Ontario that, Al, and they will tell you that. The hard-pressed taxpayer of Owen Sound, Windsor and Ottawa—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

I would like to remind the member that if he refers to any other member of the House that he refers to him as the hon. member or the hon. Minister and mention his portfolio or riding and not refer to him by his Christian name or surname.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, there has been plenty of precedent in the House to call them by their first names. I thank you for correcting me. I have a lot to learn about this business.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: May I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that it is hard for the people of Ontario to swallow this government of ours contributing capital funds to the city of Toronto for subway development when it is a matter of record—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, this government represents all of the people in Ontario, not—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I correct that. The government should represent all the people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: I would suggest that it is the fact that this government will offer to pay capital costs for a subway when the people in the town of Meaford cannot even get a traffic light. I have an editorial from the Meaford Express, a fine paper in that area, and I will not labour this long editorial, but it closes by saying:

Why cannot traffic lights be installed in the town of Meaford? A subsidy from the government is not a gift. It is our money that has been collected by them for the good of the people. Unfortunately, they have such a maze of regulations and formulae that it is difficult to get any of it back.

Their traffic engineers are no doubt well qualified men, but they do not live in Meaford and therefore their assessment of our need cannot be based on cold figures, gathered during a short two-day visit. We suggest that the cost of the survey might exceed the amount of the subsidy which we evidently will not get. The money has gone on government expenses, we get nothing except a report.

And finally it says

When will governments, federal and provincial, become realistic and spend a little money without these expensive surveys and studies that only result in refusals?

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: I would be quite happy to hear from the hon. member for High Park later on.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to remind the members of the ancient usages of the House and the practice which we have usually followed, that when a new member is making his maiden speech, the custom is that we listen to it in silence and let the member carry on. So I would ask the members to give the member for Grey North your attention, though perhaps he is making not only a thought-provoking speech, but a somewhat provocative speech. Nevertheless, I would ask you to give him an opportunity to make his speech in silence.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In finalizing my remarks, I would like to say that the plan of action for 1964 has many fine points, but it has many inequities. In fact it shows in summary a lack of intestinal fortitude to tackle the main problems that are facing the people of Ontario today, specifically taxation reform, protection of the farming industry and most important of all, financial stability.

We have many things that divide us here, but also let us think of the things that unite us and that is, serving all of the people of Ontario, not in Toronto only.

I would like to dwell on the shortcomings of The Department of Highways. I wish the hon. Minister (Mr. MacNaughton) were here, although I will leave this section here if he can get back in the House. I probably will be short of time.

An article in the Saturday Evening Post features in a current issue a story called "Highway Robbery in the United States." It reveals the scandalous graft and corruption that are rampant in all phases of highway development in every state of the union with a highways budget of $25 billion. They had to add $27.5 billion on top of it, to look after the graft and corruption.

Now here in Ontario, our record in this department is nothing to brag about, but in the United States they found it necessary to set up, with every bureau of public roads, a bureau of audit investigation. They found it necessary to set up an office of right of way. Now I, through my dealings with this department, suggest there is need, a real need, for investigation into the audit division of The Department of Highways.

Last fall, Mr. Speaker, when I brought forth evidence of malfunction in The Ontario Department of Highways, the hon. Minister of Highways scoffed at it. He laughed at it. He refused a request for an independent investigation. He said that he would do his own investigation. Further, the reason why a personal friend of mine, a coloured employee, an inspector of The Department of Highways, was fired and is still unemployed, last fall, is because he insisted on the contractors living up to the specifications called for in the contract.

One particular contract, Mr. Speaker, in which he was the inspector, was the CNR bridge in the town of Hanover in Grey South. Faulty material went into this construction and last fall, while the election was on, we took pictures of it. The department had to spend over $10,000 to repair this structure.

Further, this arrogant hon. Minister promised a large deputation—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I repeat the charge, Mr. Speaker, this arrogant hon. Minister promised a large deputation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Sargent: —of reeves and mayors and wardens of all western Ontario at a meeting in The Department of Highways' lavish office, that due to the disaster of snow last year in our disaster area—he used the term disaster—that he would honour a percentage of the snow ploughing costs.

Now we are talking big money. A snow-storm takes big money, and so taking him at his word, we planned a cash return in Owen Sound of around $15,000 or $20,000 in our budget.

The hon. Minister of Highways not only reneged on this promise, but refused to give any further ploughing subsidies, increased ploughing subsidies, to cities and towns. Yet the townships received theirs. He went as far as the township, but not the cities and towns. Yet the city of Owen Sound had to lay out over $100,000 in capital expenditures for snow ploughing equipment which Fort Erie and Niagara Falls and the southern cities do not have to spend.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that politics must be taken out of every aspect of our highways department and I submit to you that our Department of Highways is loaded with political patronage.

For the hon. Minister of Highways to say that there is no graft and corruption in our Department of Highways is as feeble as the statement of the Tory government last year that there was no organized crime in Ontario. If there is no graft or corruption in The Department of Highways, then every other state south of the border should come up here and take lessons from the hon. Minister.

Mr. Speaker, as a naive back bencher, I think the rules of this House are wrong. If things get hot or embarrassing for the government on any question, the hon. Prime Minister can move for adjournment of the debate and pull out.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased through you, while I am on my feet, to welcome the former governor of the State of Michigan, the Hon. G. Mennen Williams. It is nice to have you, sir.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that if the hon. Prime Minister can move an adjournment any time that things get hot, then this is not democratic, and if these are our rules of parliamentary procedure then let us change them. We have a supermarket in Owen Sound that has a sign for its employees which says: "If you have been doing it this way a long time it is probably wrong".

In regard to questions, if an hon. Minister knows his department's business well enough to answer questions without being forewarned in advance, then I suggest that he get up here where I am. If you ran a private business the way you are running this operation you would be in the same financial plight as our government is in today—raising taxes by borrowing. The system we have in this House of asking questions is a bit ridiculous. If the hon. Minister does not choose to answer the question, he refuses it. This is an insult to our intelligence when we are entrusted with the spending of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money. What kind of business is it that the stockholders cannot ask open questions?

Looking at this system very objectively, gentlemen, we are doing nothing more than playing games—we are shooting crap with loaded dice—all in the government's favour—and the public is paying the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the Maclean's Magazine article that John Public will tolerate honest graft; I would suggest to this House that the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) should have started legal action by suing about 50 papers last September.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I rise on a point of order and privilege. You have just made the suggestion that a maiden speech should be allowed to go on uninterrupted, and I would gladly have concurred, but I think when a statement such as the hon. member has just made that I should say—when he says that I should have sued 50 newspapers—he obviously refers to slander and libel in September of last year.

May I say, sir, that we were in an election campaign at that time and we know that newspapers in our democratic system report many political speeches. I made some and I received some blows and I gave some. But now we are six months away from that and I would just like to say, sir, that the hon. member for Grey North is in a very precarious position even yet. I think he only got in after a recount. But the hon. member for Grey North might well go to the pure waters of Owen Sound and dip three times, if necessary, come up and then disassociate himself from the tactics to which his own party resorted, and as a result suffered its seventh successive defeat.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, it is smug arrogance like this that is shown by this government. It is not warranted when we read the record, and I reject the philosophy that the people will tolerate it. I personally feel, sir, along with most people of Ontario, that you personally are opposed to this. It is time that we in this province had government by the people, and not Cabinet and in the interests of party patronage.

Mr. Speaker, you are probably aware that farm poverty in this province is widespread. We have farmers with gross incomes of less than $2,000 and, though the hon. Minister of Agriculture is held in high regard, I enlist his vigilance in the protection of the family farm which will shortly disappear if steps are not taken against vertical integration of industry by inroads of the packing houses in cash crops of the farmer and canning and feed firms financing poultry farms.

I think we should make our farming industry stronger, but we need to have full production to do that. No industry can operate in the black on half-production—neither can the farm industry. By stockpiling food, by financing futures in fact, to act as collateral after proper initial financing, here is a plan that can keep our farming industry strong. By setting up food banks in Ottawa, Sudbury, Owen Sound, Windsor and Peterborough.

Mr. Speaker, if municipalities are going to continue to pay a large share of the cost of education, and if they are going to tax real estate over 50 per cent of the cost of education, then it is time that The Department of Education started moving in a straight line. We have had to close schools in our area because of the lack of teachers. Most municipalities, as I pointed out, are close to the border of insolvency unless something drastic is done in regard to education costs. In this country we have a need for a standard educational building with no frills. We have a need for schools, Mr. Speaker, to be built without paying the first big chunk of our tax money for architects' fees. We have a need for standardized textbooks across this province. In my home, and probably a lot of of the hon. members have children, we have $200 or $300 worth of obsolete textbooks in our homes that cannot be sold or used again. Project this across the province of Ontario and we would possibly have $100 million worth of obsolete textbooks because of lack of standardization.

In two separate high schools in the city of Owen Sound last fall there were eight different versions of a single Shakespearean play and the leading stationer there told me that he would refuse to carry textbooks next year because of the absolute chaos in The Department of Education planning. One mother in Meaford told me that it took her husband's full week's pay to buy textbooks for her two children in high school.

Mr. Speaker, a teacher sent me a textbook with a price tag of $4.95 on it. I am in the printing business and this book cost 19 cents to print!

An hon. member: Wow!

Mr. Sargent: When we think of all of these glaring inequities, lack of teachers, the high cost of school buildings, architects' fees, textbooks, it makes one wonder sometimes who is running the store.

In the British Isles, in New Zealand and Australia, the government pays 90 per cent of the cost of education. Our taxpayers are paying 50 per cent of their tax dollar or more for education costs.

Mr. Speaker, if you are a poor man or a middle-class man, you have your wealth in the form of real estate; with your $20,000 for a home you are paying your full 50 per cent tax rate for education. But if you are one of the wealthier types you have your wealth in the form of bonds and investments; you pay not one single cent towards education, therefore there is a great need for revision.

Finalizing, Mr. Speaker, with regard to truth, a very important commodity in this science of living together, I think it is high time that we paid tribute to the former leader of this party, John Wintermeyer. When he reviewed his findings of the scandals in Ontario, he was threatened that he would be sued for $1 million if he read these findings outside the protection of the House. He did that, sir; he read the findings, his report, outside the protection of the House and no one sued him for $1 million. No one sued him for five cents.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): But look where he is now!

Mr. Sargent: Yes, George, he is not here now—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is where the hon. member will be.

Mr. Sargent: But this man had courage. He was a gentleman, and time will prove that he was a statesman.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, one of the great motivating factors that keep all of us driving is the mail. It takes many first-class letters every day to answer them, but this is a labour of love. If we read nothing but the mail we would have almost a first-hand report from the country every day. It serves also as a very wonderful barometer on what you are doing—what is a service and what is not a service; and that is important.

But of all the letters we get I think the ones that we appreciate most are the ones we call the “dining-room table” letters. They are written by little people who do not have any offices, they do not have any secretaries, nor any typewriters, nor desks; but they sit down at the dining-room table and they write you a letter—sometimes in pencil, sometimes in ink—always with an effort.

I have a letter from an old couple about their need for dignified housing. In closing I think that this House can do a great piece of social welfare work. In Owen Sound we have built a series of old age, senior citizens apartments; it is 50-year money, a 90-10 per cent loan with the Limited Dividend Company, 5.5 per cent limited dividend. And we are giving these old people tiled bathrooms, heated apartments with a fridge and stove, landscaped grounds, from $27 to $34 a month. I think there is a great need in this province, and I suggest that we must collaborate with Ottawa to set up a network of low-rental apartments for senior citizens to rent from $30 a month up.

This money is available jointly from you and the municipality; and, by subsidization of free tax land and with a limited dividend corporation, this can be a dream come true in every village, small town and city across this province. It would expand the housing programme, because we are told that in 1970 25 per cent of our population will be people of 65 or over. So let us make that demand, let us anticipate that, and I suggest that we can do this. But one thing I suggest to the government is that it does it without architects.

Another letter that I received, and I will close with this, is about a couple who could not pay their taxes, about their hardships. They told me about a rope factory in New England which makes ropes for ships. A plaque inscribes these words: “The worker in this factory weaves his conscience into the rope because he knows many lives depend on him.”

It is called “The Ropes of Gold,” and this, “being a discourse about a nature of freedom,” 250 years ago, it goes on to say:

Our lives must be anchored with golden ropes, that give us purpose, meaning, hopes.

And I was interested in this text, the old couple went on:

Know the ropes and you will be free—to know them not—means slavery.

What are these priceless golden strands we must judge in the House, building freedom unknown in other lands.

You see, when this was written 250 years ago the free people on the earth were in the very distinct minority; but in the time that has elapsed since then, freedom has been on the ascendancy in the world, until finally the democratic way of life was paramount. And, now in our day, in the last 30 years, we have seen the whole thing revert itself until today even more people are living in the shadows than are living in the light—more people are behind the “bamboo curtain” and the “iron curtain” than are in front of it. And we are right back to where we started from when this was written.

The same question is paramount again: "What are the priceless golden strands holding freedom unknown in other lands". We need to consider it in this House just as it was a top question then.

These (friends) are the ropes of gold
That all our precious freedom hold.
Go look afar at a distant star
Go look ahead at horizons gone
To look to the dawn
Trust in God and carry on.

This is from an old couple. Like the worker in the factory who weaves his conscience into the ropes because he knows many lives depend on him, we must weave our conscience, Mr. Speaker, into our legislation because the lives of five million people in Ontario depend on us.

Mr. R. Welch (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I would like to extend a very warm welcome on behalf of all of us here to the Honourable G. Mennen Williams, who is presently Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs in the government of the United States.

I would say that the Honourable Mr. Williams is not unknown to us here. Of course he was Governor of Michigan for six terms, six consecutive terms, and I believe that is a record in at least contemporary political history in the United States. Mr. Williams, on March 11, 1952—pardon?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Williams visited, and as a matter of fact addressed, this Legislature some years ago. Some of us here will recall the occasion, it was on March 11, 1952, when he was here, of course, in his capacity as the governor of a neighbouring jurisdiction, and we welcomed him then.

I was interested in checking back on that occasion, and I find out that there are only two other Americans, to the best of my knowledge, who have addressed this Legislature from the floor. The one was the late Wendell Wilkie, and it was prior to my time in the House that he was here and addressed the members. The other was Senator Claude Pepper. Now I have no idea whether all these men were Liberals or Conservatives, Mr. Speaker, probably my hon. friends over there can tell me this.

An hon. member: Liberals!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In any event, we extend a very warm welcome to you, sir, this morning.

Mr. Williams, in the discharge of the duties that he presently has, is here to meet with the African Students Foundation and of course as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs he is very interested in that foundation. With him is Mr. Lloyd Perry, who is national president of the African Students' Foundation and, of course Mr. Park Armstrong who is the United States consul general in Toronto.

Mr. Perry just mentioned to me, and perhaps I could mention it to the House, that Mr. Williams is addressing a public meeting at Trinity College at 8:30 this evening. Any hon. members who would care to attend the meeting would be more than welcome. In addition there will be a breakfast for Mr. Williams tomorrow morning. I do not know where that is, but my notes tell me that the Honourable Paul Martin will be attending. So hon. members will have an opportunity of meeting another—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Grand man!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Meeting another of our national Liberals, and indeed a man of great stature in international affairs.

Perhaps I would be forgiven if I were to say to you, sir, that in this province we adopted some years ago a programme of assisting students from Africa and we established in 1961-62—and I take interest in that because I was Minister of Education at that time—scholarships for African students by which we provided, on a four-year basis, a $1,500 scholarship for ten students. We wanted to see these ten young people complete the four-year courses. That was what they were interested in and that programme is presently continuing.

So once again, on behalf of all of us, I extend to you, sir, a very warm welcome. I hope on some occasion you will come back and pay us a visit a third time because I am quite sure that will establish a record of some sort.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Perhaps before that motion is put, on Monday we will take anything that may be on the order paper, and by then everything will have been on for at least 24 hours, and we will resume the Throne Debate.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have heard my hon. friend the hon. Prime Minister two or three times at this. He says we will take anything on the order paper!

Now surely he could limit it somewhat—I mean that is quite a wide range, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it necessarily is. The motions on the order paper are put there by your people. I assume they are prepared to debate them. I certainly would not call a motion if the hon. member who moved it was not in the House, but I do not know who will be here. I do not think the order paper is really so full that it would not be possible to take any one of these items, but as I say—

Mr. Oliver: It is full enough that the hon. Prime Minister could say what one—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I was going to call one of the Opposition orders the other day and the hon. member in whose name it stood told me he would be away, so I did not call it. These are the normal day-to-day operations but there are various second readings. These bills have all been published and have been in the books for longer than 24 hours.

Mr. Oliver: Well, go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.05 o'clock, p.m.

THE STATUTE LABOUR ACT

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Statute Labour Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to make a short statement in connection with the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers, and bring the current activities of the council's secretariat to the attention of the House. I do so, Mr. Speaker, in my capacity as the representative of Ontario on the resource Ministers council.

As the hon. members are aware the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers was formed following the Canada-wide Resources for Tomorrow Conference held in Montreal in October, 1961. Three large volumes covering the preparation and proceedings for this conference have been issued in co-operation with the Queen's Printer in Ottawa and are available in the legislative library.

A permanent secretariat to the council was set up in Montreal with Mr. Daniel Wermenlinger, an engineering consultant, as the secretary-general. Also appointed were an administrative secretary, and a director and associate director of information and education. It is expected that the total secretariat staff will not exceed 15 persons when the staff has been completely recruited.

As a preliminary to operations, the secretary-general and the director of information and education travelled across Canada holding meetings with all the resource Ministers and their staffs. Perhaps it should be said at this point that the council represents equally all 11 senior governments in Canada and that all the ten provinces and the federal government share the cost on a proportional basis.

The secretariat, under the authority of the council, has commenced a thorough review of legislation, programmes and agreements affecting Canada's renewable resources. This review is under the direction of Dr. W. E. Haviland, an economist with the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association. The results of the review are to be submitted to the next plenary session of the council, which is to be held in Charlottetown this spring.

Dr. Haviland will be in charge of a research group that will study agreements directly related to renewable resources, water, land, fish, forests and wildlife, as well as agreements bearing on the multi-purpose use of resources, including recreation and regional development. Members of the research team will conduct a series of meetings and interviews with government officials across the country.

The review, which was one of the main recommendations to emerge from the 1961 Resources for Tomorrow Conference, will follow the principles laid down by the council. The Ministers, in endorsing the review of existing agreements, also favoured the study and analysis of any new proposed programmes on renewable resources. They recognized that where the federal government is a party to such resource programmes with one or more provincial governments, reference to the council was particularly important. They also saw an advantage in having interprovincial resource agreements submitted to the council, thus enabling the council to fulfill its desired advisory and consultative roles.

Under the review, each resource agreement will be thoroughly analyzed covering such facets as the history and nature of the programme, legislation, jurisdictional problems; participation of governments in preliminary studies and planning, as well as in the implementation of the agreements. Other aspects will be the application of cost-benefit analysis, education and information problems. The review team will also identify areas where new agreements might be desirable and will make specific recommendations.

Another special committee is currently re-appraising proposals for wildlife cost-sharing agreements and management of migratory birds, for the council's secretariat. This committee is under the chairmanship of Dr. D. A. Munro, of the Canadian Wildlife Service.

The studies were ordered by the council, in the light of other federal-provincial agreements relating to the management of renewable resources. They are scheduled to be completed by April of this year.

The council's decision followed consideration of a recommendation proposing a federal-provincial cost-sharing agreement for fisheries and wildlife from the 27th Federal-Provincial Wildlife Conference, held in Ottawa in April of last year. Delegates to that conference noted that some provinces may be unable to allocate the total funds necessary to undertake projects and study needed for the conservation and development of wildlife.

The council also considered a brief from the Canadian Wildlife Service proposing a large-scale, long-term research and public information programme on migratory birds and the problems involved in their management, as well as a ten-year federal-provincial programme to acquire easements on waterfowl breeding places and the control of wetlands to maintain public recreation. The brief was submitted in view of the increasing demand for waterfowl, coupled with the alarming reduction in their supply.

The federal government is obliged by the Migratory Birds Convention with the United States to ensure the preservation of waterfowl populations. The provinces retain proprietary rights to the resource and issue licences to hunters.

Waterfowl management in Canada has been all but limited to regulation of the kill. There has been almost no maintenance and management of the habitat upon which the ducks and geese totally depend. The experts see the preservation of habitat, and of lands where people can see and hunt the birds, as the key to the future management of the resource.

The government of Ontario has had its own resource Ministers council and advisory committee in operation for some considerable time. This provincial council, working toward the integrated development of all our provincial resources, also works very closely with the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers in those problem areas which are common to two or more of the provinces or along with agreements between individual provinces and the federal government.

In view of the anticipated increase of Canada's population in the next two decades, the planned management of all our renewable and natural resources, and the studied control of regional development are of paramount importance. The principal task of the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers is to see to it that the whole of the Canadian community is developed in a planned, orderly manner so that the ultimate well-being of all Canadians is not sacrificed either for short-term gains or through apathy.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements made in the House by the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Sargent) last Friday on the government's actions with regard to the H. J. Fairfield Company, I wish to make a full statement on this matter.

As you may recall, the guarantee to the H. J. Fairfield Company was the first guarantee provided under The Economic Development Loans Guarantee Act, 1962-63. In December 1963, Mr. H. J. Fairfield, the owner of the plant, first applied for a guarantee.

His request was turned down, sir, on two occasions by the agency's consultants. The agency was aware that he had operated textile plants in Ontario, the western provinces and elsewhere with indifferent success. In Jamaica, his brother had operated a similar company which had gone bankrupt.

When he set up operations in Owen Sound, he had been granted a loan of $65,000 by the Industrial Development Bank, virtually all of which had been spent on setting up the equipment, with little left for operating funds. The plant had been opened for several months, had barely got into production and was in financial difficulties.

Following the refusal of financial aid to Mr. H. J. Fairfield, a local citizens' committee was formed whose objective was to attempt to reopen the plant and thus provide sorely needed employment in Owen Sound. This committee, which was sponsored by the present hon. member for Grey North, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) and other prominent local citizens, sent a delegation to the Ontario Development Agency seeking financial support for the reopening of the plant. This delegation pointed out that unemployment was high in the Owen Sound area and that the town had lost a number of manufacturing plants in the past few years. A member of a local firm of chartered accountants had made a study of the financing and the costs involved and his studies had indicated that the plant could be operated profitably. The delegation stated that the citizens of Owen Sound were willing to pledge $15,000 in financial support to this company. The most telling factor, however, was the offer to provide experienced management which had been sadly lacking in the past.

The reasons for granting this guarantee may therefore be summed up as follows:

(a) A genuine desire on the part of the government to assist an area in which the rate of unemployment was high—I believe at that time it was 12 per cent;

(b) The interest of the local citizens in pledging to support the company financially in the amount of $15,000;

(c) A factor which the agency considered to be of the highest importance—the promise of the citizens to provide the type of management and business guidance which this company obviously needed.

Before a decision was reached on providing this guarantee, we knew that a high risk was being assumed. However, the Ontario Development Agency was formed for the express purpose of taking financial risks in order to create employment and this risk was taken.

The hon. member for Grey North in his capacity as mayor of Owen Sound, asked Mr. Ivor Wagner, a local businessman and the industrial commissioner for Owen Sound, to head up a new board of directors which was to take over management of the plant. A consultant of the Ontario Development Agency was invited to sit in on meetings of the board as an observer. I wish to emphasize that this consultant had no voting powers nor other executive authority. His function was to act as liaison between the company and the Ontario Development Agency, at least in the initial stages of the company's operations.

The company commenced operations early in February 1963. Mr. H. J. Fairfield, the former owner, was placed in charge of day-to-day operations. The company had large contracts from The Department of Defence Production for army socks and began to fulfil these orders. Like all new companies, it ran into initial difficulties. These difficulties were compounded, sir, partially because the new board of directors, although experienced businessmen, lacked technical knowledge of the textile field.

Late in April 1963, the company virtually exhausted its credit at the bank and following a series of meetings with officials of the Ontario Development Agency, a joint meeting between the board of directors, the director of the agency and three of his consultants, took place on Sunday, May 5, 1963. Several factors emerged from this meeting.

(1) The new management lacked sufficient know-how of the textile industry to operate the plant successfully without a day-to-day administrator experienced in textiles.

(2) The financial data which should have been made available on a monthly basis had not been made available.

(3) The losses resulting from continued production of socks under the army contract had to be stopped.

(4) A decision had to be made at that time as to whether or not the company should continue to operate.

Most of the members of the board of directors were inclined to the view that on purely business grounds, the plant should cease operations. However, they were all very cognizant of the need to maintain employment in the city of Owen Sound and were willing to continue their unpaid services if this end could be achieved. Some of the directors, sir, felt that with the experience which had already been gained from operating the plant, certain of the difficulties which had been encountered in the past would be eradicated. The consensus of opinion was that despite the difficulties and because of the jobs involved, the company should continue in operation. If the plant was to be kept operating, however, additional working capital was urgently required. The chairman of the board of directors and the director of the agency therefore visited The Royal Bank of Canada in Toronto in May 1963 and asked for banking credit to be made available to the company against the security of accounts receivable, work in process and inventory. The Royal Bank was most co-operative in this matter and not only made operating funds available on this basis, but also accepted the pledges of the citizens of Owen Sound which totalled $7,000 as the basis for additional bank credit in that amount.

In internal departmental discussions, officials of the agency agreed that the additional credit provided by The Royal Bank of Canada could at best be only a temporary palliative for the company's financial needs, and indications were that an additional guarantee from the province would be required within a matter of two or three months.

Mr. Speaker, it was, therefore, following this meeting on May 5, 1963, that a decision was made by officials of the agency to recommend to the Minister that an additional guarantee be provided at the end of approximately two months when, on the basis of our calculations, additional funds would be required. Approval of this recommendation was received in mid-May, 1963. As a result, an additional guarantee in the amount of $75,000 was approved.

During May, 1963, the company attempted to solve its day-to-day administration problems. Mr. H. J. Fairfield was removed from his post as manager of the plant and a temporary successor was appointed. The company also requested that the services of one of our consultants be made available as a technical advisor on a temporary basis and this request was acceded to. The agency also assisted the company in other ways by loaning it temporarily the services of one of its most experienced chartered accountants.

Despite the very material assistance provided by the agency, the affairs of the company continued to decline. Our original guarantee was for $85,000. On April 30, 1963, however, the bank indebtedness was $86,000; had risen to $104,000 at May 31; to $128,000 at June 30; declined slightly to $126,500 at July 31; then rose to $139,000 at August 31.

At September 30, however, indebtedness to the bank had increased to $175,000. This represented almost the full extent of the credit which was available to the company after allowing for the advances which would be made by the bank against inventory, work in process and accounts receivable.

The losses sustained by the company, which at April 30 amounted to $26,721, increased to $43,874 at June 30; to $74,594 at the end of July; to $82,053 at the end of August and further to $94,668 at the end of September. Furthermore, the sales of the company had amounted to approximately $19,500 in July, had fallen to $5,400 in August and further to $3,900 in September. At the end of September there were no sales orders on hand and none in sight.

I therefore wish to make it crystal clear that the decision to end government support of this plant was made solely on business grounds. In a three-month period from the end of June to the end of September, its operating losses had increased by more than 100 per cent, from $43,874 to $94,668. In the same period its sales had declined from $19,500 in July to approximately $3,900 in September. There were no further sales orders on hand at that time.

I submit that in view of these circumstances there was no other course of action left to us but to withdraw further support. Nobody could reasonably suggest that further funds be made available to this company in view of the record. The company was given every chance to operate successfully and the decision to withdraw government support was only made after the government guarantee had been virtually exhausted.

I should now like to answer specifically the charges made by the hon. member for Grey North in his address to the House last Friday.

(1) As the record has shown, this industry at no time showed signs of getting on its feet as the hon. member alleges.

(2) The announcement of the guarantee to this company was made public in the House with the consent of the board of directors of the company. I would draw attention to the fact that the history of the reopening of the company was given to the press by company officials as early as March, 1963. For example, a series of articles on this company appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail last March. In fact, on March 7, 1963, a photograph of the hon. member for Grey North, along with officials of the company, appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail in conjunction with one of the articles on the company written by Mr. Devon Smith.

The decision to announce the guarantee to the Fairfield company was made on the grounds that as the first guarantee provided by the province, it would be of interest to hon. members of the House. This announcement would not have been made without the concurrence of the board of directors. Our policy is not to announce the names of companies which receive guarantees unless they specifically authorize us to do so.

(3) There is no truth in the statement that the plant was closed down on government instructions on the day after the election. The final notification of the withdrawal of government support was made in a letter dated October 22, from Mr. A. R. Mitchell, one of the agency's consultants, to Mr. Wagner, the president of the company. A copy of this letter was sent to the manager of the Royal Bank in Owen Sound.

I think that in the interests, Mr. Speaker, of getting the true story on record, I should quote this letter in full.

Dear Mr. Wagner:

Upon Mr. Etchen's return to the office this morning I have discussed the matter of vacation pay to which the employees of Fairfield are entitled, and he has authorized me to approve of this disbursement. With this final approval, it should be clearly understood by all that this agency will approve of no further expenditures from hereforward and we consider any responsibility of ours terminated as of the close of business on Friday, October 18, 1963. A copy of this letter is going forward to Mr. Booth at The Royal Bank of Canada in Owen Sound.

Yours very truly,
A. R. Mitchell.

Confirmation of receipt of our letter by the bank and that payments were made was contained in a letter from the manager of The Royal Bank at Owen Sound, dated October 29, 1963. I wish to quote this letter in full.

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

With reference to your letter of October 22, and our telephone conversation, all payroll cheques for the week ending October 18, 1963 were certified at this office on October 25. This increased company advances to $171,000. In addition to the above, unpaid interest on the loan up to and including October 20 amounts to $1,602.14.

There are two small cheques still outstanding, the payment of which was approved by your department, but at the present time we do not feel these will result in an increase in the company loan.

We trust the above is sufficient for your requirements but should additional information be required, please do not hesitate to communicate with us further.

Yours truly,
C. G. Booth,
Manager.

As the hon. member for Grey North should be aware, the plant in fact was operating, albeit on a reduced scale, as late as last week. On December 16, 1963, two of the agency's consultants visited the plant and found it was still operating. At a meeting held in the Ontario Development Agency's offices as late as Thursday, January 30, 1964, two senior officials of The Royal Bank of Canada who had come to discuss the financial affairs of the company with the agency, confirmed the fact that the plant was operating last week and was engaged in processing the raw material inventory into finished goods. These operations were being carried out in part with funds which had been provided by the government for the purchase of raw materials.

I would suggest that the hon. member for Grey North should have been aware of the fact that the plant was not closed down the day following the election and that it was still operating last week. All he had to do was to ask his industrial commissioner, Mr. Ivor Wagner, who we are informed was supervising the operations of the plant until last week. Alternatively, he might have paid a visit to the plant to ascertain the situation for himself instead of trying to make political propaganda. If he was of the opinion that the company was being successfully operated, he was the only person in Owen Sound who did not know of its financial difficulties.

I would further suggest that he correct Mr. Wagner's statement quoted in the Toronto Globe and Mail on Saturday that the mortgage on the equipment is held by the Ontario Development Agency. Mr. Wagner, as chairman of the board of directors, was well aware of the fact that the mortgage on the equipment is held by the Industrial Development Bank at Ottawa.

I regret that the hon. member for Grey North, in his maiden speech, attempted to make political capital out of a genuine effort of this government to assist the employment situation in Owen Sound. In so doing, he has brought no credit either on himself, the Liberal Party, the citizens of Owen Sound or the constituents that he represents. Furthermore, by his actions, he might well have dealt a blow to further friendly co-operation between local municipalities and the Ontario Development Agency.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) has a question on a point of order. Would he please state his point of order?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Yes, sir. I had hoped to avoid interrupting the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, although, Mr. Speaker, I believe the whole of his statement was out of order, but at this point I think it is impossible to refrain.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention to what I consider to be a persistent abuse by the government of the right of hon. Ministers to make statements before the orders of the day, and this is underlined in the present statement. As I understand the rules, statements by hon. Ministers before the orders of the day are permitted where they are factual, where they are announcements of government policy and where they are noncontroversial.

I submit to you, sir, that what we are receiving and have been receiving all along from the hon. Minister is not a proper statement before the orders of the day, but a proper contribution to a Throne Speech debate. He is answering a speech made in the Throne Speech debate and he is answering it in a most controversial way. But we are prevented by the device that is now being used from making any comment on it at all or participating in this debate.

I submit to you, sir, that this is most unfair and that now is a good time to suggest to the government that it should desist from this practice of taking undue advantage of its right to bring in noncontroversial statements before the orders of the day.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Is the member speaking to the point of order?

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): I am speaking on a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The member can speak only on a point of order.

Mr. Sargent: No, I am speaking to the hon. Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Well, ask the question later.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, if you will give me the opportunity, I want to support the point of order of the hon. member for Woodbine. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I underline the fact that I did not in any way want to give the impression of impeding the hon. Minister of Energy Resources from having his little say today in answer to the hon. member for Grey North. But the hon. member for Woodbine quite properly took the floor and I admire him for doing so at the point when the hon. Minister launched into what I think—and I do not use excessive language—might properly be called a diatribe of invective against the hon. member for Grey North.

To restate in very simple terms—and I have looked into Lewis, sir, while the hon. Minister was speaking, because I too can count the number of pages he has in his hand and I see that Lewis is silent on the subject—we must go to the rules and precedents of the Parliament of Westminster.

As I understand the rule, sir, it is that some leeway is given Ministers of the Crown to make a statement concerning government policy, and to announce a policy or a government step that is a matter of some public importance and about which they want to take the earliest opportunity to acquaint the House.

That is a far cry from what went on today. One would expect better behaviour from an hon. Minister of the Crown, who has not yet, sir, and I underline this, who has not yet participated in the Throne Speech debate himself.

He would have an opportunity to make a speech and to make the most full and complete reply to the hon. member for Grey North at some consequent time, but I submit to you, sir, you are our protector, you are the protector for the hon. member for Grey North and in your role of protector, you must put an end to this device—the hon. Minister getting up at the earliest opportunity, using the occasion to answer assertions made by a member of this side. Now, I ask you, sir, at this point to be specific. I ask you to say to the hon. Minister: desist, stop reading what you are reading, and give yourself leave at another time to make the statement. I ask for a ruling, sir.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the point of order, and I, of course, will take exception to what has been said by the hon. member for Sudbury. The hon. member was not here on Friday when this speech was delivered. I think that any hon. member of this government is free to get up and state what the government's policy is and what the government's action has been when the integrity of the government, the integrity of the civil servants of this department, is called into question as it was on Friday.

I think it is eminently proper that any Minister have the right to stand up and put the government's point of view as the hon. Minister has done. Therefore, I think that what has been said today is completely in order and in fact I think as the government, we have a duty, sir, to the people of this province to make public the position of the government after the unwarranted attack that was made upon it on Friday last.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, speaking to the point of order, I am very sorry that the hon. Prime Minister has intervened on this, because I think, Mr. Speaker, that we finally have got to have a decision on this issue and the hon. Prime Minister has made it exceedingly difficult for you.

I just want to reiterate, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member for Woodbine has stated, that in our view, beyond any shadow of doubt, what the government has done today is a violation of the rules of the House. I would ask you to consider so ruling it as having been out of order. If the government wants to engage in a reply to anything that has been said on this side of the House, it should do so as part of the debate, and not within the shelter of a statement prior to the orders of the day when we have to sit here silently and cannot say anything. If this is the correct approach, then the Opposition is muzzled until it has an appropriate time to reply.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, may I join in some comments on this point of order?

The logical outcome of the view taken by the hon. Prime Minister is that the hon. member for Grey North should be given an opportunity to get up and to continue the debate. If he is given the right to get up and continue the debate, I would presume that the hon. Prime Minister, or one of his hon. colleagues, can continue the debate, and the hon. member for Bruce, whose name was mentioned, should be allowed to get into it and all the rest of us should be allowed to get into it. The purpose of these rules is obvious, and as quoted by the hon. member for Sudbury, they will allow a Minister of the Crown to make a statement, noncontroversial, about an issue before this House. The hon. Minister has deliberately made it as controversial a statement as possible and in so doing, sir, he has breached the rules of this House and I urge you to so rule.

Mr. Speaker: Is the member for Grey North speaking to the point of order?

Mr. Sargent: Another point—

Mr. Speaker: No, it is the same point of order.

Mr. Sargent: You have not made any ruling on this? Okay.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the members for speaking to the point of order and the thoughts that they expressed regarding it. It was my opinion, during the course of the statement by the Minister, that he was in order because he was the Minister responsible for the actions of the government regarding the subject matter with which he was dealing. Up to a point near the end of his remarks I was of the opinion that the Minister was perfectly in order and that anyone wishing to ask him questions would be at liberty to do so, but any further remarks should be carried on in the Throne Speech debate.

I am also of the opinion that the Minister, toward the latter part of his remarks, was getting into a more controversial matter and it would be better if that part were left, perhaps at a time when he would be engaging in a Throne Speech debate or later on, perhaps even in the budget debate.

Therefore, I would say to the Minister that if he has any more remarks to make regarding the subject matter, strictly on which he was first speaking, that he continue. But I ask him at the same time to desist from continuing with any further remarks regarding the member for Grey North and his intentions when he made the speech in the House on Friday last.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry that the hon. member for Sudbury was not here when the maiden speech was delivered. I am quite sure he would have a different opinion to that he expressed today.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, oh, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: It is very difficult to listen and live by the rules of the House—

Mr. Speaker: I am waiting to hear what the Minister is going to continue with before I rule any further on the matter.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order on just his last remarks.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order on just his last remarks, that he is sorry that the hon. member for Sudbury was not here. I was here, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South was here, the hon. member for Woodbine was here, yet all that the four of us were speaking to, Mr. Speaker, was a point of order insofar as the rules of this House pertain and not whether the hon. member for Sudbury was here or not, and the hon. gentleman should full well know that.

Mr. Sopha: I was in the courts, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would ask the Minister to continue if he has any further remarks specifically on his earlier subject matter.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I was about to conclude my remarks by suggesting—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I was about to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by suggesting the kind of discussion that took place last Friday would not be good for the friendly relations that we are trying to create—

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, this is surely argumentative.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —with clients who come to the ODA for loans. We certainly do not want to discourage our small businessmen, and on that note, sir, was the way I was going to finish this presentation today.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. Minister has made some statements which are not in line with the facts.

On September 16, the Fairfield Company directors prepared a budget for six months and this budget of $81,000 was approved by the ODA and the government, the Cabinet—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I think perhaps the member now is getting into a debate on the subject.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the member, that if he has a question to ask the Minister on the subject matter which has been made, he should ask the Minister a question, or a supplementary question afterwards, but to refrain from continuing with any further debate at this time.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I call to your attention the fact, sir, that we are now into difficulty because the hon. Minister was permitted to make allegations which are by no means accepted as statements of fact and the hon. member for Grey North, I think, quite probably wants to answer what he considers to be incorrect allegations of fact. Since the original statement was permitted, it seems to me that his answer should also be permitted in all fairness.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, the stated facts are as follows: I told the House on Friday that the plant was closed down the day after the election. I was in error. The orders for the plant to close down came on September 27, two days after the election. The employees were given one week's notice and their payoff was on October 4. Now I apologize to the House for that. The plant did not close down on September 26, but one day after that.

The order to close down came through on a phone call, Mr. Speaker, from Mr. Marshall to Mr. Bray, the plant manager. The order was to post a notice of close-down on the bulletin board, one week's notice that the employees would be out of work on October 4. This is factual and the chronological events, starting September 16.

Further, to point out the misleading facts that the hon. Minister has given us, the Fairfield Company directors approved a budget of $81,000 nine days before the election, but the Cabinet approved $45,000 of the $81,000. The provision was that there would be a further review by the end of the month—by September 30. On September 21, Mr. Wagner, the president, told Mr. Etchen he was going to Europe. Mr. Etchen assured him everything would be fine till he got back. As I said, on September 27 Mr. Mitchell phoned Mr. Grey and said: "Post the notice to inform the employees, give them one week's notice the plant will be closed on the fourth."

On October 2, a meeting was called by Mr. Mitchell for 10:30 a.m. in Owen Sound. He did not arrive until two o'clock. They took over the plant then.

On October 17, Mr. Van Horne, the assistant to Mr. Mitchell, would not agree to pay for yarn and coal that Mr. Mitchell had ordered; and also he would not pay for the $700 vacation-with-pay stamps that had to be paid, but he finally paid that.

Now what I am trying to get through my mind is how could the former hon. Minister (Mr. Macaulay) tell the press—and the hon. Minister outlined it today—that the order did not come through until October 22 when they had already paid the vacation-with-pay to the fired employees?

Referring to what the hon. Minister said about the plant being operating: yes, we do have it operating. Under section 88 of The Bank Act we are working out the inventory and we have a boiler man there and I think it is three other employees and a girl in the office, trying to work out the inventory under section 88 of The Bank Act, which has nothing to do with the ODA.

Further, to the hon. Minister's statement that Mr. Wagner told the press that the ODA had a mortgage on this, Mr. Wagner did not tell the press that; he told them the IDB had a mortgage on the equipment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a typical gloss-over of the whole picture. The fact remains that the plant was closed—I am sorry, I am out of order. But those are the facts as they stand today in Owen Sound.

Mr. Speaker: Sorry, that closes any further remarks on the statement of the Minister before the orders of the day.

In reflection, I might say that I think the whole subject could have been more suitably brought before the House during perhaps the Throne Debate or the estimates. I allowed the member for Grey North to answer some of the allegations in view of the fact that some of the matters became debatable, but I hope in the future any question before the orders of the day will not be debatable.

Mr. Bryden: Govern yourselves accordingly.

Mr. Sopha: Where was the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) who started it all?

An hon. member: In the court.

Another hon. member: Probably winning, too.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) begs leave to present to the House the thirty-seventh annual report of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario for the year ending March 31, 1963.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that this House is aware of the comment there has been in the press and elsewhere recently concerning the death of Miss Patricia Morgan at the Toronto East General and Orthopaedic Hospital last November.

I have only this morning received from the chief coroner of Metropolitan Toronto an autopsy report relating to the death of Patricia Morgan. While awaiting this report, my department has completed its inquiries.

In accordance with the department's procedure, when there is reason to believe that a death has occurred in Ontario in circumstances that warrant holding an inquest, I have directed that an inquest be held into the death of Miss Patricia Morgan, which occurred at the Toronto East General and Orthopaedic Hospital in Toronto on November 4, 1963. I have directed Dr. Gerald Blanchet to act as coroner at this inquest to be held pursuant to section 17 of The Coroners Act. The facilities of the office of the supervising coroner for Ontario, Dr. H. B. Cotnam, will also be available for the investigation. Mr. John Hoolihan will act as counsel to the coroner in order that all relevant information and facts will be presented.

I should state, Mr. Speaker, that the inquest being conducted by Dr. Blanchet is independent from the investigation ordered by the board of governors of the East General and Orthopaedic Hospital.

Mr. Bryden: May I ask the hon. Attorney General a question in relation to his statement?

Mr. Speaker, is the House to assume from the statement he has just made that it is now government policy that the decision to order inquests will be made by the government and not necessarily by the coroner having jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Well Mr. Speaker, I might say that there has always been the power in The Attorney General's Department to direct an inquest under certain circumstances. There was a request sent to me eventually by Dr. Shulman, the chief coroner for Metropolitan Toronto, that an inquest be held into this death. I have so directed it.

Unfortunately or otherwise, Dr. Shulman is departing tonight for a holiday and he will be back in two weeks' time, I believe. But, in the meantime, I think it essential that this should be dealt with.

I would say also, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question by the hon. member for Woodbine that there are many inquests held in Metropolitan Toronto, because it is a large area with many deaths where circumstances are not always clear, and that there are a great many coroners. Normally, the office of the chief coroner will allocate the duties of conducting an inquest. Where there are inquests throughout Ontario of great difficulty, the supervising coroner very often—not only in Metropolitan Toronto but throughout Ontario—the supervising coroner, Dr. Cotnam, takes the inquest.

But I would point out that once a coroner is seized of an inquest then it is his responsibility and he can only ask for and receive the advice and assistance of either the chief coroner or the supervising coroner.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this will answer the question of the hon. member.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister would permit me to direct a question to him?

Mr. Speaker: Following the member for St. George (Mr. A. F. Lawrence).

Mr. Singer: I am sorry, I did not know who had your eye.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister would inform the House if he is going to ask for an investigation to be made as to why the coroner was not informed, before last week, of this unfortunate hospital death?

Hon. Mr. Cass: I am quite sure the answer to that will come out in the proceedings. Mr. Speaker, I would draw to the attention of the House and the hon. member for St. George, one of the reasons that I have appointed legal counsel to this particular coroner is in order that all these matters which appear to be rather in the grey area might come out in public at this hearing.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister is prepared to advise the House as to whether or not there is going to be a public inquiry generally into all of the allegations made by Dr. Shulman.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, that is not a supplementary question to the original question and I do not think it should be answered.

Mr. Singer: That is pretty important. I have asked that before.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), a copy of which has been given to you.

Would the hon. Minister please explain a portion of the contents of a pamphlet issued by The Department of Agriculture dealing with loans to junior farmers, which refers to guaranteed bank loans and group life insurance? Are these benefits available; and if not, why?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question; the answer is no, up to the moment. In the matter of bank loans, details have just been completed after prolonged negotiations between The Department of Agriculture, the Canadian Bankers Association, The Department of the Provincial Treasurer and the regulations branch of The Attorney General's Department.

An order-in-council has been passed, Mr. Speaker, authorizing the Provincial Treasurer to enter into an agreement with the banks to provide loans under The Junior Farmers Establishment Act. As soon as the banks advise their local branches of the procedure to be followed, applications for these loans can then be processed.

In the matter of life insurance, this will be made available to holders of loans under The Junior Farmers Establishment Act as soon as the details of such insurance can be finalized. Here again, negotiations have been proceeding over a period of months and we are now, I believe, nearly ready to present to the holders of these loans, policies of life insurance that we believe will be acceptable by the present and future holders of junior farmer loans.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. I have submitted this for his perusal. The question is this:

When will the hon. Minister comply with sub-section 6 of section 3 of Bill No. 169, An Act to establish The Ontario Municipal Employees' Retirement System, which received Royal Assent in April, 1962; that is to give an annual report containing financial statement of this Act?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, reading Bill No. 169, which was passed in 1962, and in quoting sub-section 6 of section 3, dealing with the matter of filing an annual report, the Act says as follows:

The board shall at the close of each fiscal year make a report upon its affairs during the preceding year to the Minister and every such report shall contain a financial statement certified by the auditor and the Minister shall submit the report to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council and shall then lay the report before the Assembly if it is in session or if not at the next ensuing session.

The fiscal year of the municipal employees' retirement system is the calendar year, therefore the year has just closed as of December 31, 1963. The accountants and the staff of the system are now preparing to close their books for the year 1963. The auditors are the firm of McDonnell Currie and Company, with head office in Toronto and I presume that they will proceed with the audit as soon as it is possible to do so. As soon as I have received the audit, I shall proceed, as I am instructed by Bill No. 169, to file the audited report and the financial statements in the places where they have to be filed. I would hope, sir, that probably before the end of the month of February, that I shall be able to file this auditor's report.

Mr. Belanger: Thanks very much.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, through you, sir, I would direct my question to the Attorney General. The question is as follows:

Are the police within their power when they confiscate pictures taken by citizens at the scene of an accident? In the case of the recent seizure of such a film, will the hon. Attorney General assure the House that it will be returned to its owner?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no; and the answer to the second question is yes.

However, I might say that in the kind of an atmosphere where a group of university students were pushing a toilet bowl across the country as a publicity stunt, I feel that the police officer was acting in good faith to ensure that a possible indignity would not be committed in respect of the unfortunate victim of this fatal accident.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to inform the House that following our success of last year in promoting the Ontario food products in the United Kingdom, a more intensive programme in this connection will be conducted this year. Arrangements have been completed for the shipment of more than 100 tons of Ontario food products to Great Britain's Ideal Home Show which will be held in London in March of this year.

This year's undertaking is more than a follow-up of our previous efforts. Rather, it is an intensification of efforts which is more than justified by the results attained in the past.

As has been the case of previous shows of this nature, food processing firms, producer marketing boards and the Marketing Development Branch of The Department of Agriculture are co-operating in stocking and manning the exhibits. We, in The Ontario Department of Agriculture are delighted to participate in this important project. We have every reason to be pleased with the progress made thus far. Our exports to Great Britain during the past year have reached an all-time high since entry to the overseas market was regained in 1960.

Having been successful in gaining a foothold in that market, I can assure this House that it is the intention of the department to assist the producer and the processor to exploit that achievement to the full. Our optimism has a sound foundation in the great success our fruit and canning industry has achieved on the British market. This coupled with the continuing interest in exports of cheddar cheese, honey and flue-cured tobacco during the past two years, leads us to believe that there is a wide market for our quality produce.

An innovation this year, one of particular interest to the poultry industry of the province, is that whole and cut-up cooked and frozen chicken will be served and sold at the exhibition. The indications that there is definite export possibility for this product will be thoroughly explored.

Again this year all food stuffs will be sampled and sold in small consumer lots to as many as possible of the 3,000,000 persons expected to attend the exhibition. It may interest the House to know that the Ontario exhibit will occupy over 150 feet of frontage space and will be the largest Commonwealth exhibit in the entire show.

A sampling and selling staff of 20 food demonstrators recruited in London will staff the exhibit. They will supervise the selling of over 2,000 cases of canned fruits, vegetables, juices and soups; 3,000 cases of pickles; 10 tons of cheddar cheese; eight tons of cooked and frozen poultry; five tons of honey and a wide consumer display feature of frozen peas, peas and carrots, mixed vegetables, corn on the cob, whole kernel corn, french fried potatoes in retail size bags, together with frozen dinners.

Participating with The Department of Agriculture in this important undertaking will be the Boese Food Company of St. Catharines; Canada Packers Limited, Toronto; Canada Vinegars, Toronto; Canadian Cannery Limited of Hamilton; Canadian Quality Poultry Products Limited of Brampton; Clark Foods Limited of Montreal, and also an Ontario branch; Georgian Bay Fruit Growers Limited of Thornbury; Green Giant of Canada, Tecumseh; Libby McNeil & Libby of Chatham; Niagara Foods Products Limited of Stoney Creek; Smart Bros. Limited of Collingwood; E. D. Smith & Sons of Winona; Stillmeadow Farms of Elora; Stokely Van Camp of Canada Limited of Essex; and the Whyte Packing Company of Stratford.

In addition, special promotion at the exhibit will be presented by the Bick Pickle Products Limited of Scarborough; Clark Foods Limited of Montreal; Old Cherry Hill Cheese Company of Toronto; the Ontario Cheese Producers Marketing Board of Belleville; and the Ontario Honey Producers Co-operative of Toronto.

While we have made heartening progress and have received splendid co-operation from those associated with the industry, I must emphasize again that government agencies cannot be expected to carry the entire load. There is a limit beyond which governments should not go in rendering assistance and support. There is nothing that can supplant private and co-operative enterprise. The government's part is to give a lead, as we are doing, and to provide the opportunity for producers and processors to participate in their own interests.

I wish to express appreciation of the efforts of G. Frank Perkin, our commissioner of marketing, in handling the manifold duties that are entailed in such an important undertaking; and to E. F. Marritt, director of the agricultural branch of Ontario House in London, England, who will manage this show under Mr. Perkin's supervision.

Because of the progress made in export market development of Ontario farm and food products, a representative of the department has been permanently established at Ontario House to service and to encourage further the sale of Ontario products in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: First order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. Welch (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, it is with a true sense of privilege that I rise to participate in this particular debate, echoing at the outset the many words of congratulations and commendation on your choice as the Speaker and the manner in which you discharge the responsibilities of the high office which is yours.

In doing so, I am sure that I will be excused in singling out the dignified way you conduct the opening exercises each day and I refer particularly to the reading of the prayers. It could be quite a temptation, you know, in the repetition of this opening, to complete it as quickly as possible and so lose the entire significance. But as you have read these words clearly, slowly and with great meaning, we have been reminded daily of the sovereignty of Almighty God, who in fact is the Supreme Authority. Indeed, perhaps it would not be out of place at this point in the address, to mention the tremendous influence that this has and must continue to have on the legislators of this province and of the nation.

Reference was made a few days ago by the hon. member for Kingston and the islands (Mr. Apps) to the need for adequate accommodation for the private members in the legislative building. It would be my hope, Mr. Speaker, that such plans might include a room that could be set aside for some quiet meditation, reflection and perhaps even some prayer—a room where one could for a time, avoid the busy and pressure-filled pace of the daily routine around here—a room to be available for a little soul-searching from time to time.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to participate in this debate, representing that great and historic riding of Lincoln, made up of the entire county of Lincoln with the city of St. Catharines as its county seat. Names such as Niagara, Louth, Beamsville, Grantham, Merriton, Port Dalhousie and Smithville; and the townships of Clinton, Grimsby, Caistor, and Gainsborough are all very familiar. This riding of 332 square miles of the land area of the province, with a population of 127,000 wonderful people, 70,400 of whom were eligible to vote in the last provincial election, has made a very important and significant contribution to the life of our province and of the nation.

Mr. Speaker, I would be very amiss if I failed at this point to pay public tribute to the long and faithful service given to the people of Lincoln and to the province of Ontario by my predecessor in elected office, the hon. Charles "Tod" Daley. Tod Daley was first elected a member of this House in 1943 and immediately became a member of the Cabinet formed by the hon. George Drew. He remained a member of the Cabinet of the province for nearly 20 years, having served under four premiers.

His length of service as Minister of Labour is unparalleled by any other Minister holding a similar office anywhere in the British Commonwealth. Mr. Daley has made his mark in Ontario public life, and no words of mine can adequately describe the services which he has rendered in the fields of labour relations, workmen's compensation, human rights and other such measures. His steps will be most difficult for me to follow as the successor to his seat in Lincoln.

As already mentioned, Mr. Speaker, Lincoln is truly a historic area. If we could turn the calendar back nearly 172 years, we would see the streets of the town of Niagara in the eastern section of my riding. At that time it was called Newark, crowded with hundreds of happy citizens. They had come from all parts of the provisional district of Nassau. The newly appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada, John Graves Simcoe, attended by detachments of soldiers from various regiments forming a guard of honour, marched along the streets to the music of regimental bands. The procession proceeded from Navy Hall to a small edifice nearby.

The occasion was the first sitting of the first Legislature of Upper Canada, and the date, September 17, 1792. And we sit here today as the direct legislative descendants of the small group of men who formed that first Legislature. These men envisioned that their young and undeveloped territory would some day become a vigorous and powerful province. We sit here, today, as the beneficiaries of that vision.

Of course, it can be truthfully said that that vision has not yet been completely fulfilled. On each succeeding provincial Parliament lies the heavy hand of responsibility to add a little more to the great structure now called the province of Ontario.

Reference has already been made to the question of human rights, and all of us, regardless of party affiliations, seek to put an end to prejudice and to those distinctions which divide, knowing full well the difficulties which are involved in attempting to legislate against personal attitudes in these matters. And all of us, I am sure, are disturbed and have been; about the problems that arise in this connection in the southern United States and in parts of Africa. But it is interesting to learn that at the second session of that Parliament of Upper Canada, to which I have already made reference, meeting at Newark—now Niagara-on-the-Lake—on May 31, 1792, an Act was passed to abolish slavery.

(Mr. W. G. Noden takes the chair.)

It is to the credit of those who ruled Upper Canada at that time that they ended quickly the slave traffic. A slave might not be held in bondage for more than nine years and the children of slaves were to be free when they reached the age of 25. So in consequence, slavery gradually disappeared as the old slaves died and the young ones became free, and so it resulted that after 1793 Upper Canada was a refuge for slaves. Once across the frontier from the United States they gained their unchallenged freedom.

An obscure Legislature sitting in a wooden shanty, on the border of the wilderness which is now the riding of Lincoln, had outlawed the slave trade, years before this was achieved by Great Britain herself. And so the task of establishing human rights continues to be a great responsibility of the government.

Mr. Speaker, these comments logically lead one to a consideration of that section of the Speech from the Throne dealing with our centennial programme and our national anniversaries. In the first place it seems essential that we take definite steps to preserve our historical treasures. It would seem obvious that this would fall within the jurisdiction of the province, dealing, as the province must, with property and civil rights.

It is interesting to note that the Legislature of the province of Quebec has taken certain action in this sphere. In Bill 57 of the first session of the 27th Legislature of that province, the government of Quebec has established the Quebec Historic Monuments Commission, consisting of seven members including the Minister of Culture of that province.

The purpose of this commission is to classify any property having a historic or an artistic interest. And under section 18 of the Quebec Act the Minister may, on the recommendation of the committee, acquire, expropriate, reconstruct, sell or lease any property so classified by the commission. The making of grants to local societies and the preparation of publications respecting the historic monuments, places and objects are other functions of the Minister acting on the advice of the commission.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I would strongly urge the government that serious consideration be given to the enactment of similar legislation in this province.

In the second place, those of us blessed with young children know that when you have a birthday party you have to give things away as well as receive the gifts. So in celebrating our centennial I would hope that we would keep in mind that while we in Ontario have much to be thankful for, many other peoples and many other nations do not.

We should, therefore, as a result, attempt to do something that illustrates the fact that we are willing to share our great birthright which we will acknowledge in 1967.

We can remember, I am sure, the great airlift of immigrants after World War II inaugurated by the then Prime Minister of Ontario, the hon. George Drew. Perhaps something like this should be tried again by this government during the centennial year. We could transport people from have-not areas of the world where there is much overcrowding of population and little in the way of natural resources to support them and bring them here to Ontario, to Canada, if they would be willing, to share with us the benefits of our great citizenship.

This act would do much to dissipate the belief that our centennial celebrations are nothing more than self-centred programmes.

In turning to a consideration of other matters, may I reveal my enthusiasm with the general tone of the Speech from the Throne itself. It is most encouraging to hear in the opening paragraphs of the address read by His Honour a warning against complacency on the part of the party in power with its large majority and a pledge that the banner province will continue to play a major role in the promotion of unity in the Canadian nation.

To me, Mr. Speaker, these points, and a recent exchange in this House between the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and some of the hon. members on this side, indicate that the hon. Prime Minister of this province is going to lead the way into a new approach to the whole concept of politics.

Others talk about a new kind of politics but the hon. leader of this party, in my opinion, is practising it.

Senior hon. members of this House in all parties—all of whom I might say at this point have been extremely kind to those of us who are entering our first year—will perhaps appreciate the difficulty which this freshman is struggling with in attempting to understand and appreciate a type of "political partisanship" which he sees on the "battlefield" at election time and sometimes in the conduct of this House.

Before I am misunderstood, let me hasten to say that I am not talking about the party system. What I am trying to say in a very awkward way is that I feel the people generally speaking are getting a little fed up with the destructive aspects of the party system which are being paraded before them constantly. It was my hope that the surgery performed by the people on September 25 had removed a lot of this illness but recently we have seen signs that the disease has not been completely cured. It is my humble opinion that much has been done to tarnish the image of our great party system by what may be classed as a narrow and parochial approach.

You see, we have so much to concentrate on which will produce real and genuine differences on the basis of approach and fundamental principles that it seems quite strange—at least to this freshman—and indeed quite hard to understand, why one has to go out of his way to find fault or levy criticism simply because he does not want to be caught agreeing with someone on the other side.

Now the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario goes to Ottawa and does not come away with all he asked for because some sacrifices had to be made to preserve the unity of our nation—Canada was to come first. And in the same way the member for Lincoln, myself, may not be able to get all he is going to fight for in the next few years because the interests of the whole province have to be weighed as well.

What a refreshing breeze was felt in this House a few days ago to hear the hon. Prime Minister, in referring—as he was at that time, although this is not the point—referring to the medical services legislation, to hear him state emphatically that he was going to fight against compulsion, and at the same time state that he was violently opposed to a system which took everything away from the people and then set up a group of bureaucrats to hand it all back to the same people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we can stand up and be counted on an issue such as this. The great majority of our people, including a great band of our young people, do not support socialism in any of its disguises. Our people, including that same great body of our youth, are simply asking for the opportunity to develop their God-given talents in our democratic society. They are not asking to be spoon-fed, they want incentive, they want rewards for that effort. And as the people are organized in government, as we are here, so then we will be compelled to recognize our social responsibilities toward those who, through no fault of their own, are not able to look after themselves. The individualistic approach in so many things is so important. One cannot help but admire—as I speak from my point of view in the riding of Lincoln—to admire the individualistic characteristic of those who look to agriculture for their living.

Agriculture forms a very important part of the economy of the riding of Lincoln. The orchards and the vineyards with their precious harvests, not to overlook the general farmer and the dairyman must be mentioned in a speech such as this because all of Ontario depends on them. And as we do depend on them, we must be sure that those who resist the temptation of higher wages in industry, and those who resist the temptation of the great bundles of cash of the subdivider; we have to be sure that these people can earn a decent living from their agricultural activity.

The Junior Farmers Establishment Loans Act will assist young farmers in establishing themselves and will protect to a certain extent the existence of the family farm. The rust eradication programme will take advantage of the government research facilities with the object of wiping out a harmful weed.

I should say at this point that there have been several criticisms in my riding with respect to the agricultural research branch. Two recent resolutions of the Niagara Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association deplored the fact that certain highly trained professional people have left The Ontario Department of Agriculture research branch because of inadequate salaries; and the resolutions go on to deplore the fact that the results of much governmental research has little potential practical value to the average farmer.

The government should look closely at the salaries of their professional research staff if private enterprise is in fact losing many of them away. Perhaps as well it would be wise for the government to ascertain the practical value of much of the research that they do, in order that a proper ratio be kept between applied and basic research. The programme of weed eradication, to which reference has already been made, would appear to be one phase that has worked out well in a practical fashion.

Another problem that has been drawn to my attention is the fact that certain farm implements, namely, those self-powered vehicles with long low platforms which are used, Mr. Speaker, for the transporting of fruit through the orchards to the packing sheds, these vehicles are being classified as motor vehicles by The Department of Transport rather than as implements of husbandry. As a result these vehicles require a motor vehicle permit and a chauffeur licensed driver, whereas ordinary farm tractors do not fall into this category.

It would appear that as these vehicles in question are constructed from motor vehicle chassis and engines and are used merely for the purpose of transporting the products of the orchard to the packing sheds that they should not be licensed in this respect but rather be classified as I have already mentioned, as implements of husbandry.

Mr. Speaker, much more could be said under other headings; such as tourism, referring to the great attractions in our riding of historical significance, the beauty of the countryside at blossomtime, the Royal Canadian Henley Regatta. And much more, too, could be said about the need for additional park and recreational facilities, keeping in mind the survey about to be undertaken in our riding by The Department of Lands and Forests concerning the Welland Canal park lands.

There is also the whole question of our natural resources and conservation which would involve a tribute to the great work being done by the Niagara Peninsula Conservation Authority.

But may I hasten to conclude with a reference to the challenging subject of education. We, in Lincoln, together with the rest of the Niagara area, look forward with excitement to the establishment of Brock University. In addition, we appreciate that not all of our secondary school pupils are university bound, and we are very pleased with the announcement that we are to have the advantages of the facilities of an institute of trades, to be located in the city of Welland, which, of course, will be easily available to all of us in the peninsula.

We are hopeful that construction will soon commence on a new teachers college. In this connection land was purchased some time ago in a section of the township of Grantham, now part of the city of St. Catharines.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that The Department of Education might want to enter into negotiations with the board of governors of Brock University and build that teachers college on or near the new university campus, in much the same relation that the Hamilton school is to McMaster University. Thus university facilities and the full programme of the university would be easily available to the student-teachers there. I am sure that the department would have no difficulty selling its present site, if in fact it could locate the new teachers college closer to the university.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that great strides are being made to encourage our young people to stay in school longer. We must be constantly concerned that everything possible is being done to fully develop our human resources. Equality of opportunity is the great demand in our educational system today. Guidance programmes and the opportunity for student consultation must be continually emphasized as our young people try to find their proper place under the sun.

But let us not lose sight of one very important fact, that education and all the allied training are but the essential tools to be used by our people to prepare them for a productive and meaningful life in the true meaning of those words. They must not assume the role of gods to be worshipped as ends in themselves, for really the process never ends. Ability must be recognized at all levels of the educational system and encouraged to develop. Financial problems must not be allowed to stand in the way of anyone in his or her educational development and growth. I hope, too, that we would stand on guard against status symbols creeping into our system, because it has to be recognized that there is a large percentage of our student population that cannot or will not go on to higher education at the university or academic level. Many will find fruitful lives in the many technical opportunities which continue to present themselves at this time.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that the establishment of more local universities will not discourage those students, who are able, to seek this type of training at some centre away from their homes, so that they may be able to enjoy the association with other young people from other parts of the province and the Dominion. Maybe we should even consider ways to assist some of our pupils to have this wonderful association of meeting their fellow Canadians from other parts of the Dominion. Indeed, I treasure as one of those friendships the association with the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon). It was through the university association that I was able to meet him, but unfortunately we have apparently parted political company, following graduation.

Much has already been said, Mr. Speaker, about the challenge of the sixties. Just as that small group of early settlers faced their problems 172 years ago with courage and with faith, so we must be prepared to meet the problems which face us in the sixties with a true sense of dedication to our purpose. Indeed, the impressive words of Pericles himself, that accomplished and impressive orator of Athens who died 429 years before the birth of Christ, are most relevant today, for those of us who would seek service in the public interest, when he says:

Fix your eyes on the greatness of your country as you have it before you day by day. Fall in love with her, and when you feel her great, remember that her greatness was won by men with courage, with knowledge of their duty, and with a sense of honour in action, who, even if they failed in some venture, would not think of depriving the country of their powers, but laid them at her feet as their fairest offering.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this Throne Speech debate, may I first congratulate the mover and the seconder of the reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I think it is nice to see a lady back in this House again. I hope that this is the trend from now on and we will see more ladies in this chamber. If nothing else, it certainly keeps the language a little better.

I would like to congratulate the 37 new members we have. They are quite a young group and I know as the weeks go on, we will certainly be hearing from them all in the debates of this House. But over the last four years, Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the fellowship with a group of people from all political parties in this House. To those 25 members who are not with us today, the ones who have retired, I would like to wish them well in their retired life, and I hope they have many happy years. To those who were not so fortunate at the polls, may I only say that some of them served long in this House and their debating ability will be missed.

Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to notice the Speech from the Throne mentions the expansion of our universities. While I am interested in all our universities, it is only natural, since I represent an area in Hamilton, that I am more familiar with the expansion of McMaster University. Although federal and provincial grants are largely responsible for these expansions, I would like to point out to the hon. members that McMaster University has found it necessary to make a financial appeal through public subscription to raise $7.2 million. I have not much doubt that the other universities are also finding it necessary to resort to public appeals for finances.

Also stated is that enough new places were available last year to accommodate the 5,000 additional students who entered academic life. This seems to indicate that only 5,000 additional students desired to enter university and that all is well in the field of higher education.

Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. First of all, university expansions are planned to meet the apparent needs, and they are finally expanded to the degree that funds for this purpose are available. Obviously McMaster University has not sufficient funds to meet its needs for expansion, and presumably this is the case with any other university in the process of fund-raising drives. Their expansion plans are no doubt based on an assessment of the probable increase of students likely to attend university, by using some percentage figure of Grade 13 high-school students in the area, which past experience has evolved.

But will this method of determining how many students can be accommodated meet the needs of our nation or of the students themselves? I don't think so, because it is based on the ability of the student or his parents to pay. I know there are bursaries and loans available but not many young people are willing to enter a profession in debt. There is also the danger that students will be plucked rather ruthlessly in order to limit the entrance to the available accommodation. Many of the people of Hamilton and other areas who now have no hope of their children attending university will make their contributions to these financial drives.

It is my strong opinion that only the ability to benefit from higher education should be the entrance qualification to university. This means free university education and that some method of financing must be found to meet the need for this type of education, such as the elementary and secondary schools we now have.

As a first step I suggest that it would be necessary to conduct a thorough survey of Grade 13 students at least, to discover how many could reasonably be expected to qualify academically, without any limitation as to how many have parents who can afford to continue their education. I am doubtful if the findings would permit us to point with pride to our university expansions and really claim, as the Speech from the Throne seems to, that expansion is proceeding at a rate sufficient to meet the needs of our young people. I very much doubt this, Mr. Speaker.

I notice that The Department of Labour is one of those departments whose activities are to be reorganized and modernized. I commend the government on finally recognizing this long overdue need and I have a few suggestions which I hope will receive favourable consideration. One of these is the matter of overtime. Overtime, of course, puts extra money in the pocket of the worker but unfortunately it puts it in the pocket of someone who already has a job and it does nothing for the unemployed person.

The Throne Speech expresses an innocent delight that unemployment is only 3.8 per cent in Ontario, while Canada, as a whole, suffers a further 1.8 per cent of unemployment. Mr. Speaker, 3.8 per cent does not sound very big, but 75,000 is a good round figure and that is the number of Ontario's work force unemployed. Let us assume that each unemployed worker has two dependants. I know they do not all have a wife and one child—some are single and some have several children or other dependants—so I do not think it is a bad guess. This means that 225,000 people in Ontario are affected. You see the fact that we have just under four per cent unemployed is really nothing to be proud of. Every step, no matter how small, that will reduce these numbers must be taken.

Overtime should be reduced to the point where it only occurs in matters of extreme emergency. Perhaps consideration should be given to confining it to the field of maintenance, where it is essential that the operation of the plant continue in order to provide work for its employees.

Present provisions are far too lenient and even these lenient provisions are abused. I have been given information that one Hamilton firm was causing its employees to work 12 hours per day, six days per week. Because I have not yet checked this information out, I will not name the company here, but I would be glad to give the name to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree), if he cares to check it. I hope that it is not true but I would not be surprised if it was.

I urge that the reorganized Department of Labour acquire sufficient staff so that a continuous check may be made into overtime in all plants of any size—say, for instance, those employing 15 persons or more. I use this figure because they would already be on record through the provisions of our hospitalization plan and the information would be available without delay. I think a check of their payroll records of overtime, matched against their requests for overtime permits would be revealing, even under our present legislation which does not require employers to obtain an overtime permit until they require their employees to work in excess of 48 hours per week. I understand too, that these permits are fairly easy to come by.

The average number of hours worked in Ontario is 41.5 per week—for September, 1963 in the Labour Gazette of December, 1963. Most industrial plants operate on a 40-hour week, but our legislation provides a standard work week of 48 hours. Therefore, you will see that in these cases, by obtaining an overtime permit for a further 100 hours per employee, per year, each employee could work an additional ten hours per week.

As I said, Ontario has legislation providing for a standard work week of 48 hours. In a province where the average is a 41.5-hour work week, and where industry is operating on a 40-hour week or less, it is only common sense to see that our legislation at least keeps pace with current conditions, even if it fails to provide leadership. As a matter of fact, the pattern for the 40-hour week was established almost a quarter of a century ago. It is ridiculous that our legislation should be so outmoded and that we should hold back a 40-hour week with maintenance of take-home pay for even a relatively small number of employees. This small adjustment of 1.5 hours on the average work week, however, would put some of our 75,000 unemployed back to work.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about runaway plants. Last session, I brought to the attention of this House the plants that evaded the terms of a union contract by a mere change of name. By changing their names, these companies were able to void the contract they had signed with the union under their previous names but, as a rule, there was little or no change in company personnel. The employee still had a job, although union gains in wages, fringe benefits, seniority provisions and grievance procedures were lost until the union reorganized and again became certified.

During recent years several plants have moved from one location to another and now we can see a definite trend developing toward establishing this pattern. I can quickly name four companies that have, within the past year, sir, closed operations in one location and moved to new quarters in another. The companies which come to my mind are: International Silver Co., which moved from Niagara Falls to Perth; Globelite Battery, from Kingston to Toronto; Amalgamated Electric, from Toronto to Markham, and General Steel Wares, from Toronto to Fergus.

Why do companies run away? Usually for the financial gains they can make. I have yet to hear of any company moving for the benefit of its present employees. They can hardly claim they do it in the interest of the community, because it doesn't do much good to hire new employees in one area at the cost of leaving an equal or greater number unemployed in another area. No, the real reasons are these:

1. To reduce labour costs by escaping from the provisions of existing union contracts; by recruiting a lower-wage labour force in new locations; by breaking up the established patterns of relationships among workers, and between workers and management; by setting new work standards and work loads.

2. To gain technological advantages of cost reduction and/or quality improvement by better building layout; by installing more advanced, integrated equipment; by making possible expanded production and addition of new lines.

3. To obtain tax concessions by lower municipal taxes in smaller communities, tax holidays and low assessments by municipalities to encourage location of new plants; by the recently announced federal three-year corporate tax holiday for new plants in depressed areas; by accelerated depreciation write-off for building—20 per cent a year instead of five per cent—and machinery—50 per cent a year instead of 20 per cent—for corporations at least 25 per cent Canadian-owned.

These accelerated depreciation incentives are complicated, but important. The fast write-off greatly reduces taxes in the early years of using the new plant and equipment. In effect, the corporation gets an interest-free loan of public funds equal to the difference between the actual tax paid and what would have been paid without the excessive depreciation. As long as expansion keeps up, this supply of funds to private industry at public expense continues. These latest tax incentives are in addition to the already excessive depreciation write-offs normally possible since 1949.

Furthermore, corporate losses can be carried back one year and forward five years for tax purposes. This means that establishment of a new plant with big start-up expense plus very heavy depreciation write-offs can conceivably more than offset profits made at other plants of the same company. The resulting loss can then be carried forward to reduce profits for tax purposes over five future years. Finally, it must be realized that the government is going to get its revenue anyway, and the tax burden is on the shoulders of the working people.

If we are going to prevent the personal damage to the employees—loss of jobs, pension rights and medical protection—and the economic damage to the community left behind by the runaway company, we must legislate to provide successor rights to the union certified to protect the employees' interests, so that it may continue to do so. Surely the various measures of tax relief were designed with a view to interesting the establishment of new industries to increase employment opportunities, not to encourage the shift of existing industry from one area to another, particularly when it results in harm to individuals and communities.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the hon. members' attention to a problem that was brought to my attention last year, regarding a second mortgage loan made by Income Investments Limited to Mr. and Mrs. James Thomson, who reside in the constituency of Hamilton East.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomson borrowed the sum of $3,970 on a second mortgage but ended up receiving only $1,969.45. The major portion of the difference of $2,000 between the amount borrowed and the amount received was the cost of the bonus he was required to pay in order to obtain the loan, which bore 7.5 per cent interest. It seemed to me that a 50 per cent loss in what they had borrowed was much too great, and I brought the case to the attention of the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass). He looked into the matter and advised me it could not be faulted under The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act as it was completed before the Act came into force, but that Mr. W. M. Jaffray, deputy superintendent of insurance, had advised Mr. Thomson of the result of his investigation into this matter. Mr. Thomson showed me the letter he had received from Mr. Jaffray and I want to quote from it:

While we do not look with favour on a bonus of the amount you have agreed to pay, we did find that you signed a written agreement whereby you clearly obligated yourself to pay this bonus.

We have also found that, while the mortgage broker and the lender's lawyer, Mr. Joseph Macalusso, clearly understood that your second mortgage was for $3,570, not $3,970 as registered, it was not clear from the documents and correspondence that we examined that you understood this fact. Let it now be understood that your second mortgage was for an original amount of $3,570.

This investigation resulted in a saving of $400 to the borrowers.

About two weeks after this letter was received, the press carried the news that the Supreme Court of Canada had upheld the constitutionality of Ontario's Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act. Armed with this information and the letter from Mr. Jaffray, Mr. Thomson called on the lender's lawyer and the end result was that he gained a further reduction of $200 for a total saving of $600.

I must compliment the hon. Attorney General and the deputy superintendent of insurance for their prompt and thorough investigation. I wonder though, how many people are the victims of excessive loan costs and harsh transactions, or how many are unaware of the exact terms of the loans they make.

We all know that he who acts as his own lawyer has a fool for a client, but sometimes, Mr. Speaker, even those of us who employ the services of a lawyer on our behalf become confused in the mysteries of legal phrases and most particularly in the small print which abounds in many contracts.

I would urge that the hon. Attorney General consider carrying on a programme of education to acquaint Ontario citizens with the many pitfalls that lie in wait for the unwary traveller into the fields of credit buying and mortgages, and to advise them of what means of redress are available. Had Mr. Thomson not been a sturdy fighter, this matter would not have come to my attention and thus been placed before the proper department. Since his only source of income is his pension, he would probably have lost his home and his story would not have had its present happy ending.

I fear there are many, many people in similar circumstances who have no idea that they can get relief from their excessive burden, and I would suggest that some educational programme, perhaps through the press, radio and television, would serve the twofold purpose of protecting the unwary and acting as a deterrent to the unscrupulous money-lender.

Mr. A. E. Reuter (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, as I rise for the first time in this House to participate in the debates, I do so with a deep feeling of pride. It is a privilege and an honour to be a member of this Legislature and I am proud to be a Progressive-Conservative member. It is a real pleasure, sir, to join with the hon. members who have spoken previously in extending my congratulations to you on your appointment as Speaker of the House.

(Mr. Speaker resumes the chair.)

The reports I have heard about you indicate that you will undoubtedly fulfil your duties in an admirable manner; and I must say that there certainly is ample evidence that you will, based on your performance during the short while in which we have been in session.

I also extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Noden) on his appointment as deputy Speaker and chairman of the committee of the whole House. My brief association with him to this date leads me to believe he will be a very conscientious hon. member and a worthy man in his new position.

Congratulations are in order, too, for those new hon. members who have spoken so well in the past few days, and I wish, particularly, to express my admiration of the eloquence of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis).

The Speech from the Throne, in my opinion, sir, is filled with evidence of the extensive programme of worthwhile legislation that is contemplated by the government of Ontario. A study of the content of the Speech reveals that the policy of the government will be a continued programme of quite successfully meeting up with the responsibilities that confront us today and that will continue to face us in varying degrees with many different problems as we meet the challenge of keeping Ontario in the limelight as Canada's province of opportunity.

The Ontario government will, quite obviously, continue its successful programme of the past in maintaining Ontario's position as Canada's banner province. On page 19 of the Throne Speech it is noted that the final report of the select committee on municipal legislation is expected this session. The two interim reports of the committee, which I have carefully studied, demonstrate clearly that a great deal of effort has been expended by the committee under the able chairmanship of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Beckett). The many recommendations are, in my opinion as a former participant in municipal government, highly desirable and I commend this committee for their fine work. It is to be hoped that most of the recommendations will receive the favourable support of this House prior to the close of the session.

Mr. Speaker, as a new member I have been looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to participation in this debate. Again, as a new member, I intend to speak only about those matters with which I am reasonably familiar. All phases of provincial government are, of course, of great interest and concern to me, but as one with municipal government experience, I will, at this time, confine my remarks to municipal government matters.

Waterloo county covers an area of only a little more than 500 square miles but with a population of about 185,000 the population density is more than four times that, for example, of Wellington county and about eight times that of Huron county. The rural population is only about 15 per cent of the total as compared, for example, to over 60 per cent rural in Huron county. These statistics are mentioned, sir, only to emphasize the existing situation as regards population explosion and urban development in the area whose residents I represent.

Now perhaps I should make a slight correction here since I represent only the riding of Waterloo South, which, of course, is less than half of the total county area. But I believe the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler) will follow me and support my contentions as the problems are of common concern to the entire county.

When I say there are problems in Waterloo county I do not exclude other areas of the province from similar or greater problems. Certainly, we must consider the Metropolitan Toronto area and the Ottawa area as well as sections of the Niagara peninsula, but I believe my area is representative of a situation rapidly coming to the acute stage in numerous sections of the province.

Much has been said and written about the need for area or regional planning and a possible revision of local government concepts. There have been numerous suggestions made by numerous people and associations. One suggestion made was that our county system should be abolished. This, of course, would serve no purpose in itself, but it seems to me there are many inequities in our county system, which, if remedied, would provide a basis for a modern form of regional government.

When I mentioned a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, that an acute situation exists in certain sections of our province, I had in mind particularly, of course, areas such as Waterloo county, where the area is relatively small, the population is expanding by leaps and bounds, industry is expanding and concentrating, and perhaps of most significance, we have three cities located within the county boundaries.

These three cities comprise nearly 75 per cent of the total county population, yet there is no city representation on county council. There are also three towns in Waterloo county making up about ten per cent of the population. One of the gross inequities in the present county system is clearly indicated in the case of my home town of Preston which represents less than seven per cent of the total county population but which, believe it or not, is faced each year with the unfair requirement of contributing almost one-fourth of the total county financial needs.

The facts of the situation are not new discoveries to the officials of the municipalities concerned and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, they are not unknown to The Department of Municipal Affairs. Not too long ago, a local study was made to determine the reasons for the obvious inequity. The results indicated that the town of Preston might have saved over $50,000 in one year if they had not been a contributing municipality to county government costs. Every item of revenue and expenditure was considered and it was found that the greatest factor involved the financing of road construction and maintenance. Those municipal units that have not achieved city status are carrying by far the greatest load of the cost of suburban roads when considered from a population and relative use basis.

The matter of property assessment is another point for concern. The discretionary powers of assessment officials have given rise to a wide variance in valuations across the province and in areas such as Waterloo county, with numerous municipal units of all sizes within its boundaries, we find that buildings of almost identical construction and size are assessed at several different values for tax purposes. This can only result in an inequitable situation as regards the annual municipal tax account, even if the mill rate was the same in each case.

In this day of keen competition to attract industry as a desirable means of improving the municipal revenue picture, municipalities are not permitted, under the provisions of The Municipal Act, to offer financial incentives to attract industry, which is the way it properly should be. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we have the assessment situation I just outlined which is nothing else but a wide-open invitation to do exactly what the law says shall not be done.

In a densely populated area, such as Waterloo county, there is a device known as the equalized assessment wherein the assessments determined by a local municipal assessor are equalized for county rate purposes by a location allowance. A factor based on location is worked out by the county assessor to bring all municipal assessments to what the county assessor feels is an equal basis. Here again the so-called factor will vary from eight per cent to 30 per cent or more and is applied to towns and villages sometimes within only a ten-mile radius. In my opinion this is a horse-and-buggy arrangement, Mr. Speaker.

It is interesting, sir, that the province has prepared a new assessment manual for the use and guidance of assessors and that the assessment function may now be taken over by a county assessment commissioner. The new manual is by all means desirable and will be of great use, I am sure, in the process of a programme of complete reassessment on a county basis. I must point out, though, that the reassessment programme will be a long one and that to the best of my knowledge there is no mandatory legislation regarding the use of the manual, the reassessment programme, or the use of a county assessment commissioner. Assessing officials will still have wide discretionary powers. As I pointed out, the reassessment programme will be long and I can see no real programme of equity in assessment for some time.

The inequities I have pointed out have been the cause of much concern to the municipal officials in the smaller municipalities in Waterloo county and I am sure also in similar areas. There has been a long story of annexations prompted sometimes by a real need for boundary expansion but sometimes, I am afraid, motivated only by a selfish desire for assessment increases in the hope of lower tax rates, among other things.

Sometimes amalgamation of two or more municipal units has taken place but in this procedure, and even at the mere suggestion thereof, that old bugbear of preservation of local autonomy always rears its head. I do not suggest, sir, that local autonomy should be swept aside by the imposition of mandatory provincial legislation. Indeed, local autonomy is the very basis of our concept of municipal government. But I do submit that the mere thought of the loss of even a small degree of local autonomy is the very real stumbling block to achievement of any satisfactory solution to regional government.

The provincial statutes stipulate that a town may make application for city status when the population reaches 15,000. I note too that the select committee on municipal legislation recommends that the 25,000 population requirement for townships be now amended to read 15,000. There have been many cases over the past few years of towns expressing a desire to extricate themselves from the inequities of county government before the population requirement has been attained.

In 1948 the town of Waterloo, with a population of less than 11,000, became a city; but this was by means of a private bill passed by the Legislature. There are also cases of municipalities becoming a unit known as a "separated town" wherein, like cities, they participate only to a very limited degree in county government. The current provincial economy, Mr. Speaker, is such that the loss by a county of a member municipality would spell financial chaos to that county. Little wonder then that the Ontario Municipal Board does not look at all favourably on any county separations. This would not be a solution.

Mr. Speaker, this summation will provide the hon. members with a picture of that situation which I described as acute a few minutes ago. So what do we do? Should we just sit back, scratch our heads and utter that modern expression: "So what!"?

I have nothing but praise, sir, for the past considerations and efforts of The Department of Municipal Affairs, the community planning branch, the Ontario Water Resources Commission, the select committee on municipal statutes and all others who have done a fine job in their endeavours to keep abreast of the situation over the years.

Perhaps my remarks today will simply be added to the many words that have already been spoken and written about regional government and planning. But I feel that I would be doing less than my duty, sir, if I did not take the liberty today of speaking on behalf of all of the municipal officials, municipal associations and other organizations and individuals who are proponents of a new form of area or regional government.

The municipalities are reluctant to do anything that could mean a loss of autonomy. The Department of Municipal Affairs is reluctant to do anything that might be interpreted as a move to interfere. In fact, I have heard it said that the department is waiting for a request or an invitation to assist; and this rightly so since they are primarily a service department. But I do not believe that anything will, or in fact can, happen unless and until the government of Ontario becomes actively engaged in the serious consideration of all aspects.

We require the co-operative efforts of provincial and municipal authorities and the task will not be an easy one. Regardless of the degree of difficulty, in my opinion, we must stop talking and start doing and in this respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not refer only to the Ontario government. I am referring to all of those people who are proponents of a revision in our county system.

The initial move, however, should be made by the government through The Department of Municipal Affairs. A few moments ago I suggested that the department was perhaps waiting for an invitation from the municipalities to start the ball rolling. Well, I assure you, sir, that the municipalities and others who are interested, are not only waiting, but looking to the government to do something.

I would like to offer a few suggestions as to what might be done and why these things should be done.

First, I believe our counties should be retained as the geographical regions to come under a revised regional concept of county government.

Second, serious consideration must be given to bringing the cities into the county system, particularly in areas of high population density. The county administrative function is primarily rural and county councils consist of a great majority of rural representatives: This feature, I believe, is outdated and I repeat at this point that Waterloo county rural population is only 15 per cent of the total with a majority of rural representation thereon.

Third, the planning concept pertaining to specific regions or areas has so far been more or less limited to land use. I submit that this is highly desirable, but difficult to implement due to the existing jealous safeguarding of autonomy. Planning should be extended to include financial economy. There is too much duplication of municipal capital expenditure for one municipality's own particular projects when one expenditure would be much more economical on a shared basis between several municipal units, be they city, town, village or township. For example, a sewage treatment plant should be constructed to serve the people in adjacent areas rather than to have a separate unit constructed in each municipality. The same principle should apply to sewage transmission, to water development and transmission.

These are only a few of the things that would be a responsibility of the regional government, and I believe millions of dollars could be saved if integrated and jointly shared services were controlled. I will go so far as to submit, Mr. Speaker, that there should be more mandatory legislation in this respect rather than the ineffective permissive statutes.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we have the existing machinery within our government to investigate, report upon and to implement a desirable form of what I would like to call "regionally planned local government". I have voiced a few words of commendation for our Department of Municipal Affairs and for our select committee on municipal legislation.

I very respectfully submit, sir, to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner), that the select committee should continue its effective studies by probing into the entire matter of regional planning and regional government. In conclusion I would further suggest that the Ontario government, by immediately proceeding with such a programme as a centennial year project, could present to the Ontario municipalities; and indeed to all Ontario people, a new and effective plan for local government, as a contribution to the celebration of Canada's centennial year.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, may I first extend my hearty congratulations to you, sir, on your election to this important and high office. May I also say that in the few occasions in the short time that the House has been in session when you have been called upon to exercise your judgment on the spur of the moment, that this judgment has been most acceptable to those of us on this side of the House and we congratulate you sincerely for it. We would like to add further that if the incorrigibles to your right give you any additional difficulties, we would be pleased to back you up on every and all occasions.

I would certainly like also to extend my hearty congratulations to the new hon. members in the House, not only for their election, but also for their fine contributions to the debate thus far.

Since the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Welch) was good enough to single me out and mention our previous association, I would like to particularly congratulate him. He has always been a strong debater, but I should tell you, sir, that his electoral success has not really been so outstanding in the past as it was in September. As a matter of fact, I remember on one occasion when he went down to electoral defeat, he was running for president of his year at college and I happened to be his campaign manager. It may be that some time in the future I will work my way into that office again, because I am firmly of the opinion that the hon. member for Lincoln will give the Liberal Party more long-range trouble even than some of the hon. members presently sitting opposite.

I would like to say before getting into the burden of my remarks, I was very interested in hearing the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on Friday last reaffirm once again to this House and to the citizens of the province, the fact that his government has nothing to conceal. This certainly is a very good position for him to take; and yet in the light of this, it is very difficult for us to harmonize it with the remarks made in the House just this afternoon by the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) in his comment about the calling of a special investigation into the death that shocked us so when it was released in the press last Friday. There does not seem to be a great deal of consistency there.

We were certainly interested that the special inquest was called by the hon. Attorney General, and he said that special counsel was being provided so that in fact it would make what would amount to a real inquiry.

Nevertheless, the allegations that have been made by the Metropolitan chief coroner have been directed against some officials in The Department of the Attorney General itself, and there is some suggestion that these very officials will be called upon to investigate the allegations.

I submit to you, sir, that this is anything but acceptable to us on this side of the House or in the province in general. Surely the whole process of an investigation by a coroner, and calling this investigation in the first place, has been called into some question by the allegations of Dr. Shulman and by the recent events in the city of Toronto. I would submit to you, sir, that nothing short of a full-fledged judicial investigation will satisfy the allegations that have been made and the feelings of the citizens of this province that the whole coroner system must have a full investigation.

I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, that not all hon. members opposite have responded to the national call at Ottawa and while the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) is in his place, I would like to take a few moments and talk about some aspects of education that perhaps will not fit into the more general debate that will come when his estimates are discussed.

We were all interested in reading the report of the provincial auditor on the position of the teachers' superannuation fund and quite shocked to see that the last calculations showed it to be approaching $300 million in actuarial deficit. Not being a participant in this fund myself, I feel that I can speak with some frankness about it.

I would like to begin by saying something which I am sure will be said publicly on two or three occasions in the next few weeks when the superannuated women teachers visit the education committee.

I would like to stress once again for the consideration of the House the fact that a good many of these ladies, after having given 40 years service in the schools of this province, retired prior to the magic date in 1954 when the regulations governing their superannuations were changed. Many of these ladies find themselves, after giving this service in Ontario—this important service—living on a pension which is far below subsistence and certainly depending on additional monies given to them in old age assistance or the old age pension itself. Surely the time has come when the government, and the hon. Minister of Education in particular, must consider setting a minimum pension which will regulate this fund so that if a teacher is pensionable the pension payable will not be less than, I would suggest, $1,000.

There is another aspect about the superannuation plan concerning the fact that the streaming plan, called the Robarts Plan, that has been in operation for some months now in the province of Ontario, has called into service a number of teachers with special qualifications, particularly those who have come into teaching with an industrial or business background and have thus entered teaching after having spent a number of years in other pursuits. Certainly their services are very valuable and the programme could not continue without them. But we must remember that the regulations of our superannuation commission do not permit a pension payable to teachers who serve less than a specific number of years.

It has come to my attention, and I am sure to the attention of the hon. Minister of Education, that some of these teachers will have entered the teaching profession at such a time that they will not be able to achieve this minimum length of service; and even though they are required to make the regular contributions to the fund there is at present no possible chance of them sharing in a pension based on it. I would urge the hon. Minister and those advising him to look into the possibility of changing these regulations so that such a pension could be provided.

Now both of these points, the one referring to the superannuated women teachers and to these teachers who enter the profession later in life would tend, if anything, to aggravate the difficulties the fund is presently in. But, of course, we on this side are in the unhappy position here of not having the responsibility along these lines. But certainly my last and most important recommendation about this fund would be that the hon. Minister should enter into discussions with the Treasury board and the provincial auditor and last, and probably most important, the Ontario teachers' federation to come to some final and workable solution—I am not even saying "actuarial" solution—but some final and workable solution, so that justice to the teachers may be done and still this fund will be put on an acceptable basis.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have read recently in the press some comments about the efficiency of the teaching of a second language in this province. It is very difficult to discuss that in any political forum without certain political overtones coming into the mind which really have no place in such a discussion, particularly when we refer to the teaching of the French language.

As you know, sir, in our school system French is taught to almost all of our students beginning at the first year in high school, but they do have available other languages, German, Spanish, and in some schools Russian—but French is the most important and most popular, if I can use that phrase, of the second languages being taught. Many of the hon. members of this House were subjected to the five years of French instruction in our collegiate system and they themselves are the best judges of its efficiency. It has certainly been proved without any doubt whatsoever, that if a language such as this is to be taught so that the student can have an actual working knowledge of it, it must be begun at a much earlier age and the experts say at the Grade 3 level.

I would like to go on record again as strongly favouring the introduction of a plan that would make such instruction generally available across the province and not just in a few selected situations where the advantage of very heavy assessment makes money available for this programme.

As some hon. members may remember, when we were discussing this in the Legislature last year I made a proposal that because of the shortage of qualified teachers of the second language, particularly French at a conversational level, that the government would have to consider the use of educational television in this regard. I re-emphasize this, that we are falling rapidly behind some other jurisdictions when in fact we should be leading in our position in Ontario next to the province of Quebec; and certainly where we have already indicated the importance of French instruction at the higher levels. If we are going to instruct in a second language with any efficiency at all, it must be begun in the lower grades; if it is going to be begun soon it will have to be with the aid of educational television.

There is one other thing, Mr. Speaker, that has come up for a considerable amount of discussion in my own area, and perhaps in others, and that is the general availability, or lack of availability, of kindergarten facilities across this province. Coming from a rural area myself, we are at a considerable disadvantage in that the students, my own children included, have to wait until they are a full six years of age before any formal instruction is begun, except on a private basis. I would hope that the department would look very carefully into providing some regulation, and perhaps some additional grant support, favouring the kindergarten in many more areas across the province. If this is not possible, surely further thought might be given to a programme that the hon. Minister inaugurated a few months after he took office wherein he made it possible for school boards to start a regular Grade 1 class in the middle of the school term. It seems to me that, particularly in areas where kindergartens are not available, the regulations should provide for the children to begin their formal education at the Grade 1 level at an earlier age. In this way the rural students would not fall behind in their education, and I feel that this would be most acceptable in most areas.

There is, of course, the basic argument, and I have heard, sir, the former Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) express himself publicly that the children should not be started in school too soon. There is certainly room for debate here, but I submit to you, sir, that with the coming of television many of our little children from the age of three on are abandoned by their parents to the rug in the front room and they stare at the baleful eye of television for many hours in the day. They could surely benefit from formal and proper schooling.

I would even suggest further that if this could not be done at the present time the hon. Minister of Education should enter into some co-operative programme with CBC or other commercial television, making available some acceptable type of instruction that could be put over public television, and in the very near future indeed.

Just in ending this section of my remarks I would like to say that I was interested in reading a report of the hon. Minister of Education's remarks having to do with the possibility of inaugurating what might be called a community college system in this province.

I believe that he was talking to a meeting of university registrars and the report was perhaps over-simplified, but I would like to say that I would be very much in favour of any programme that would provide facilities for education beyond the secondary level in the many towns and small cities across this province. I think of the city of Brantford particularly in our own area, which is right in the heart of the student population, where there is a great demand for instruction beyond the secondary level.

The hon. Minister has already announced that the department is not considering a trade school in Brantford at the present time. I was quite struck by the fact when he made this announcement, although he gave quite a full description of the trades school programme in this province, it took him about 11 seconds to tell us. I do not feel that this programme is extensive enough. Certainly as soon as he can lay his hands on a little more money he would surely consider the building of a school in Brantford and a number of other centres where the need is very apparent.

In addition to the trade school, as I have said, surely, in the very near future he will have to provide community college facilities of some sort that will be distributed across the province so that education beyond the secondary level will be more readily available. We certainly will be discussing this in more detail at a later date.

Mr. Speaker, I read in our local press that some representatives of the Ontario Flue-cured Tobacco Marketing Board were going to be visiting in Toronto today. I do not know whether they have arrived or not, but certainly these gentlemen, representing 7,000 tobacco farmers in the province of Ontario, have many dealings with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) and the branches under his direction. Since the tobacco industry is much in the news in recent days, I would like to say something about its importance and the role of the present government in its direction.

Now, I know that the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) and the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. McNeil) may want to argue about this, but the constituency that I represent, Brant riding, has within it the richest tobacco areas in the province of Ontario, not the largest, but the richest.

I very well remember visiting these areas with the former member for Brant, my dad, when the constituency was changed in 1933 and these tobacco areas were taken into it. They were not tobacco areas at that time, they were known as poor farming areas. The soil is identified as fox sand, and it is not much good for anything except growing tobacco. Some of the people down there say if they cannot grow tobacco, they understand marijuana does very well on it too; so there may be some future there, I do not know.

But certainly these townships which are in the heart of the richest tobacco-producing areas are anything but poor areas now. To drive through the areas, one is impressed by the high standard of the township facilities—the roads, the general prosperity of the farms, the beautiful homes that have been built, and the hard-working people who live there and their strong community spirit.

They have had some serious setbacks in recent days. Not the least of them of course was the report of the Surgeon General of the United States in a well-researched report which would indicate there is some association between smoking and lung cancer. And I do not believe that any sensible person would question the findings that have been arrived at in a number of independent jurisdictions in all parts of the world. But we also noted with great interest that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) reacted to these findings by saying that he would strongly urge a programme of education in the schools of the province beginning at the Grade 3 level, so that the incidence of smoking among our young people would be cut down.

This, of course, is certainly a federal programme as well, and I do not think either myself or the hon. Provincial Treasurer would want to go on record as commenting one way or the other particularly on it.

As well as this, the government saw fit to fly a kite having to do with the possibility of expanding our provincial revenues by adopting a ten per cent tax on cigarettes, which was certainly another blow to the industry.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): I understood the kite came from over there.

Mr. Nixon: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, this is entirely incorrect, and of course it will remain to be seen next Wednesday, if that is Budget day, how the government will react to this suggestion.

But I am here, speaking on behalf of my constituents in the tobacco area, to recommend very heartily to the hon. Provincial Treasurer that if at all possible he find some other ways of increasing his revenue—if he feels that it is necessary at all—and leave the tobacco industry with its present heavy weight of taxation, particularly when it is having the other difficulties as well.

Before I leave the discussion of this particularly important part of the farm economy, I would also like to suggest that there is a feeling among some areas, some farm areas in the province, that now the tobacco farmers, after so many years of prosperity, are going to get their lumps like the rest of the farmers. Surely such an idea is not one that will stand much examination, because the industry itself—one of the largest individual sections of agriculture, if not the largest—contributes tremendously not only to the 7,000 farmers who are members of the industry, but certainly to the sales-tax revenue and to the general buoyancy and prosperity of the province.

I would think that the government should undertake serious consideration of setting aside some money for research into the difficulties that presently face the industry. I know this is being done in many other places. It might be co-ordinated with other jurisdictions in an effort to see whether or not the carcinogenic attributes of cigarette tobacco can be removed. Surely it is not good enough to read the report and say, "Cigarettes cause cancer," then throw up our hands and say we have to educate people not to smoke. There is a large part to be played by research, and I would not suggest particularly that the Ontario Research Foundation should be instructed to take part in this, but certainly it would be something into which the research foundation could look with great interest.

As you know, at the last session of this House, legislation was passed changing, to a considerable degree, the amount of control that the government has over the growing of the tobacco crop and the recommendations are largely implemented through the Ontario Flue-cured Tobacco Marketing Board, which is normally called the local board. But if you read the legislation carefully, of course the power lies with the government's board—the Farms Products Marketing Board—under Mr. McCague. This board has really the role of Big Brother to play in the management of this industry, because as you know, the local board, the Flue-cured Tobacco Marketing Board, is made up of members elected by the farmers concerned themselves, and on a number of occasions the decisions that the local board has reached by considered majority opinion, have been overruled by Big Brother here in Toronto. In fact, this part of our agricultural industry can be said to be operating under a large measure of state control.

The responsibility for this has already been brought home to the hon. Minister and his representatives on the board, and I know that he is fully aware of it. The powers given to him by the amendments last year are very far-reaching indeed, and I feel, as a representative of the area, and having spent a considerable time among the tobacco growers themselves, that I should tell him that it is their considered view that their own representatives in the Ontario Flue-Cured Tobacco Marketing Board must be left with the responsibility for the management of this market. I hope that he will keep the interference of the Toronto board with this local board to an absolute minimum.

Certainly, just before I leave the topic, I would like to remind the House that there is at present sitting, a Minister's committee looking into the whole range of difficulties in the tobacco segment of the agricultural industry. The committee was appointed late in 1962 and I feel that the hon. Minister of Agriculture should take a leaf from his colleague, the hon. Minister of Education, when he appoints these committees, to give them a date when he would expect their report. You may remember a few days ago the hon. Minister of Education announced the appointment of a committee to look into the difficulties at the Grade 13 level and he said he has instructed it to report as of June 1. This, I think, would indicate the appointment of the committee in good faith to examine a problem before it reaches catastrophe proportions, and in no way would indicate simply a method whereby the government is putting a problem out of public discussion by giving it to a committee.

I do not feel the same about some of the agricultural committees that have been appointed. Certainly the hon. Minister of Agriculture could give us a fine speech justifying the terms of reference and the freedom that his agricultural committees work under because he is not insisting upon their report at any particular time. Yet his tobacco committee, appointed in 1962, at a time of extreme crisis in the tobacco industry, carried the government very nicely over a period of intense embarrassment and upheaval in the tobacco industry. Still, now that times are a bit more buoyant as far as the tobacco farmers are concerned, there is no report and we are of course expecting it in the very near future.

I submit to the hon. Minister that the whole of the terms of reference with which the committee was originally set up have changed. There is the whole aspect of the effect on the tobacco market of the fact that tobacco may be carcinogenic, and the fact that our foreign trade in tobacco is in a very fluid state. We hope that it improves, and there have been certain sales announced recently that are very encouraging, but the terms of reference have changed since 1962 and it appears to me that when the committee does report it will occasion one or two small comments in this House, a couple of editorials in agricultural journals, and it will then be set aside. The thing has served its purpose. It has carried the government over an embarrassing period and it took the heat off the government, in fact. But there is no report yet, and the same is true of the hon. Minister's special committee looking into the milk industry.

This committee, as well, is a good committee. The personnel would certainly be open to no criticism whatsoever. It has conducted hearings in all parts of the province and it was appointed at the time when the hon. Minister said the industry was approaching chaotic conditions, or words to that effect. The committee effectively took the heat off the government, but in fact it has done nothing for the milk industry. We do not know when it is going to report. I look for better days in the milk industry and I am personally associated with it myself, making my living by milking cows, or having somebody milk cows. I have followed the reports to the committee with great interest, but I feel—and I say this in great sincerity—that the committee was appointed in good faith, and we all look for good things in its report, but it should have had a report date associated with its terms of reference. The thing is lagging right now and we are looking for a useful report.

The same perhaps cannot be said of the hon. Minister's committee on vertical integration. I should have looked up its date of appointment, but I did not. I am talking, of course, for the hon. Minister of Agriculture's benefit, but certainly all of us who have followed this committee realize that it did not solve the problem. It did take the heat off for a while, but when it became apparent that it was not going to give a report that was any use to the hon. Minister, it faded into the background. Last year we had another commission formed—the hon. Minister's food council. There was a lot of publicity associated with appointments to this food council but, once again, there was no action whatsoever.

A farmer with whom I was talking about these committees said that they are a very imposing group of garbage sifters, but the more often they sift through the garbage the more it smells and there is nothing like action to improve these aspects of the industry.

Agriculture has, in a large part, because of the committees appointed, been in limbo for a two- to three-year period, and surely the time has come for action, definite action, and we look expectantly to the present hon. Minister for action in this session.

I would also like to make one or two comments about the water problems of Ontario during the recent drought. We read with interest and with a lot of sympathy the difficulties that were experienced by many farmers. Particularly, I noticed in one of the newspapers a reference to, is it Biddulph township, that many of us are familiar with from reading about the Donnellys and the difficulties down through the years there?

The fact is that many farmers are trucking water to their stock and are continuing to do so through the winter season. It makes us very thankful in my own area of South Dumfries, around the village of St. George, where the water springs from the rock in a most miraculous way and we have artesian wells that have been brought in with eight-inch pipes, flowing full of the best water that you could ever find. Unfortunately, once the wells are tapped the water flows away down the hill and is lost, but many farmers do make use of this.

We are very thankful that in our own area there is a plentiful supply and certainly the fact that The Department of Agriculture has seen fit to make monies available to assist farmers in their difficulties with the water supply is commendable. However, it is a long-range problem and as we were discussing last Thursday and Friday, a problem that is now in the hands of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett). I would say to him that there is, in this province today, a support for the work associated with his new responsibility that is second to none. If increases in taxation were associated with this particular need, I do not feel that there would be a strong argument condemning him. If he were to branch out in a programme that had imagination and which would cut through the yards of red tape and overlapping authorities that presently hold back the development of conservation in this province, he would receive the thanks of every thoughtful citizen.

But, as the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter) mentioned and so well described in his speech, the responsibilities between the representatives of this government and the various small areas throughout the province are changing very rapidly. It is a question whether the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management should deal with townships, counties or larger areas, and it is here, certainly, that the whole province is in the state of change. I could not describe the difficulties nor the solution better than my friend, the hon. member for Waterloo South, who lives in Preston.

All of us have seen the present government carving the province up into a number of areas for regional development. The hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) has his own districts. School inspectors are set up on another basis. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) has some of his experts left over from certain assessment projects that have been farmed out into different areas of the province, where they are available on a regional basis. The conservation authorities are another carving up of the province by the present government. I do not think there is any reason to suggest that these areas should coincide. It would be nice if they did, but they do not.

Certainly, the members of this government have seen over the past few years, that they must apply their regulations and general direction in areas considerably larger than the present municipalities, and the townships themselves have found in the past few years that it is of great advantage to them to co-operate along lines of welfare. We have seen school sections amalgamating into larger areas. Towns in my own area are co-operating in police and fire protection and in many areas they are co-operating in the development of county and township roads. The whole thing is in a state of flux and I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. member for Waterloo South when he says that direction and leadership is essential, otherwise, if it is left to the individual areas to work out these difficulties for themselves, they are going to end up with another hodge-podge similar to the one that we are labouring under now.

Mr. Speaker, all of us in this debate are really talking about the amendment that has been proposed to the original motion, the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver). I would submit to you, sir, that this is a reasonable amendment and it is proposed by an eminently reasonable man, a man who is beginning his 37th year in this Legislature. I would like to call particularly to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that in 1966 he will have completed 40 years in this Legislature and I hope that you will begin now to make plans to suitably mark that occasion.

We, on this side, are most grateful for the excellent leadership that he is giving the official Opposition under these particular circumstances, and I know that his ability is appreciated in all parts of the House. He has proposed a reasonable amendment, and I am confident that it will be supported by all reasonable members.

Mr. L. M. Hodgson (Scarborough East) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I may say that the programme for tomorrow is a continuation of that of today, except that there will be some second readings.

Hon. Mr. Allan moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.55 o'clock, p.m.

1. The first part of the paper discusses the importance of the study of the history of the United States. It is argued that a knowledge of the past is essential for a full understanding of the present and for the development of a sound policy for the future. The author points out that the study of history is not only a means of satisfying our curiosity about the past, but also a means of training the mind and of developing the character.

2. The second part of the paper discusses the importance of the study of the history of the United States. It is argued that a knowledge of the past is essential for a full understanding of the present and for the development of a sound policy for the future. The author points out that the study of history is not only a means of satisfying our curiosity about the past, but also a means of training the mind and of developing the character.

It is argued that a knowledge of the past is essential for a full understanding of the present and for the development of a sound policy for the future. Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to pass on to the hon. members the gist of a telephone conversation I had at noon today. The call was from Mr. James Parlee, vice-president in charge of Sudbury operations of the International Nickel Company of Canada. Mr. Parlee wanted me to know that his company, one of the greatest corporations in Canada, would immediately be taking 1,700 men into employment in the Sudbury area and another 150 at Port Colborne.

That, Mr. Speaker, is news that should bring cheers from both sides of the House, and unquestionably it will bring cheer into a great many homes in these two centres. The addition of a work force equal to that of the average community of about 10,000 people cannot fail to have a considerable effect on the economy.

Recall notices have been sent out today, and of course former employees who were laid off in September, 1962 when it became necessary to reduce stockpiles, will be given first chance at the reopened jobs.

The hon. members will remember that at that time the company announced it would have to curtail production by 9,000,000 pounds of nickel per quarter until the world over-supply was adjusted. This cutback meant that 2,500 men had to be laid off and it is certainly a matter for gratification for us all that such a large number of jobs will be reopened in the first step towards resuming full production. The increase in nickel production entails a similar increase in the output of copper and the precious metals that are derived from the same ore.

According to a statement which I understand is being issued today by the company, it plans in this stage to restore about half the amount by which production was reduced beginning with September, 1962.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to me to be able to bring such cheerful news as this to an assembly where such a large part of our deliberations have to do with solving public problems. Here we have a great industry solving one of them for us, and apart entirely from the fact that a great many men will be restored to useful employment with all that it entails in terms of human dignity, this action by International Nickel will of itself be of real value to the people of the whole province in that it will mean an increase in the number of tax-paying citizens and perhaps a corresponding decrease in the cost of unemployment insurance payments and other charges on the public purse.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, may I reflect through myself, having the honour to represent this great community, the enthusiasm with which this announcement will be met in Sudbury.

Ours, sir, is a strong and vibrant community. We were by no means in the doldrums, however, the community was conscious of the economic reverse it suffered when these 2,500 men were laid off. The return to work of these able-bodied persons will be greeted with great joy and thanksgiving in my community, sir.

Mr. J. C. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) a question, a copy of which has been submitted to him.

Has the hon. Minister taken any action regarding the fog problem on Highway 17 west, near Copper Cliff?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I should first of all thank the hon. member for having provided me with notice and I would say in reply to his question the following:

The Department of Highways is greatly concerned regarding the safe passage of vehicles along this section of Highway 17 during periods when fog exists. At the moment, an extensive investigation is being carried out by the special assignments engineer with the assistance of the former and present district engineers for the Sudbury area. Detailed studies of the local geographic conditions have been made in the field. The waters of the creek have been analyzed and ground and water temperatures have also been studied.

Consultations have been held with officials of the International Nickel Company and contact has been made with the meteorological branch of the federal Department of Transport to collect data and request their assistance in carrying out the study of local atmospheric conditions.

I am advised that the investigation to date and information collected give evidence that there is no simple solution to the problem. At this point I wish to bring to hon. members' attention a few of the possible contributing factors to this condition.

(a) A general climatic condition in which temperature inversion occurs; (b) Possible contributing effects from both the INCO smelter and iron ore plant; (c) Water temperatures in the creek relative to the surrounding area temperature; (d) The possibility of automobile exhaust having a triggering effect to accelerate the fog formation.

In conclusion, may I state that it is the intention of the department to pursue our investigations and endeavour to establish the cause or causes and find a permanent solution to this problem.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): I should like to inform the House that in addition to the increase from $65 to $75 monthly for recipients of old age assistance, blind and disabled persons' allowances, and assistance to widows and unmarried women, we are also in a position to allow for higher margins in the total incomes which these persons may have.

The new income ceilings for old age assistance and disabled persons' cases are as follows: single persons now $1,260 per year, previously $1,140 per year; married persons now $2,220 per year, previously $1,980 per year.

In the new programme for widows and unmarried women, 60 years of age and over, the total permissible income is $1,260 per year; previously it was $1,140.

A higher margin has always been made available for blind persons; and the new adjustments in this programme are as follows: single blind person now $1,500 per year, previously $1,380 per year; single blind person with dependent child now $1,980 per year, previously $1,860 per year; married blind person with sighted spouse now $2,580 per year, previously $2,340 per year; married blind person with blind spouse now $2,700 per year, previously $2,460 per year.

The amounts I have quoted in each case include the allowance that is granted.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wonder if I might ask the government leader, whoever that is today, whether it is the intention of the government to conclude the Throne Debate by Tuesday next, prior to the introduction of the Budget, or whether it is the intention to carry it on afterwards. I ask this, Mr. Speaker, because obviously it affects our planning.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I can do no more than say what the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) said when this question was asked before: that we should hope that this debate would be concluded before the Budget is brought down next week, but as the hon. Prime Minister said earlier in this session, there is no intention or desire on the part of the government to cut short debate on the matters which are raised by the Throne Speech, and I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that any better answer or any other answer could be given.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE FEMALE REFUGES ACT

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions) moves second reading of Bill No. 23, An Act to repeal The Female Refuges Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE COUNTY JUDGES ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill No. 24, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DAY NURSERIES ACT

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare) moves second reading of Bill No. 26, An Act to amend The Day Nurseries Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CROWN ATTORNEYS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 29, An Act to amend The Crown Attorneys Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: First order: resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. L. M. Hodgson (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, may I at this time add my congratulations to those you have received on your election. I am sure that you are very capable of this job. We have noticed that your abilities have been tested and I am certain in the days ahead we will have great confidence in your conduct of affairs here. I will also appreciate your understanding in the days ahead as I myself adjust to these new challenges.

In the Throne Speech debate, I understand it has been a tradition to congratulate those who move and second acceptance of the Speech from the Throne. I might say that I listened with great interest and admiration to the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler) and the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard) on that day.

It is gratifying to rise at this time and participate in the Throne Speech debate. I do so without great confidence because this is my first time on my feet in this House. As the member for Scarborough East, from time to time I hope to express the thoughts, hopes and desires of my constituents. As you know, I am part of that group in the House that is under 40. Two other hon. members and myself make up a group that is in its 20s. I do not suggest that any number of years is an accomplishment, but rather that accomplishment enhances the years as they pass. Therefore, with God's help I hope that I can honour the trust of the electors in Scarborough East.

Of interest to me as a new member, were the comments of the hon. member for Waterloo North on reasons why one would run for public office. This desire to run for public office has been mine since the age of about nine—that was the first time I became closely associated with political life in an election.

Association with hon. members of this House and the Commons at Ottawa has only whetted that desire. As a youth, I can quite honestly say that my heroes were not Mounties, firemen or sports heroes, but the hon. members of Parliament for Haliburton and Victoria. And those two gentlemen at that time were Clayton Hodgson, in the federal House, and hon. Leslie M. Frost, former Prime Minister, in the provincial House. In my life I would like to harrow a little around the fields that they have plowed.

The Speech, as a document, is such that we as hon. members, can be justly proud. We can be proud because it outlines a programme of action that will make this session one of accomplishment. I feel that our term here will be worthwhile in that many measures will come forth to improve conditions for the people of Ontario. There is a determination to ensure economic expansion and we certainly will be entering into new fields where government action is necessary.

It is abundantly clear that Ontario is embarked on a new age—not one of preparation for election, as some people have expressed over the past year, but one of aggressive action and one that will last. The people of Ontario have recognized this new spirit—the evidence is here—here to my right and to my left and across the way. The people of Ontario have expressed their confidence in the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts); that confidence will be honoured and the subject under discussion is certainly evidence of that.

The riding of Scarborough East, which I represent, is one of those created by redistribution. It comprises that part of the township of Scarborough east of Markham Road or Highway 48. For the greater part it is a residential area with some industrial development. In the northern section there is still active farming although we are within the boundaries of Metro. Scarborough, as you can appreciate, has experienced its earliest and most complete development in parts that lie closest to the city of Toronto. Thus my section has more recently come into the main stream of development.

The commission on redistribution recognized the tremendous influx of people into the township of Scarborough and, of course, created four new ridings. I would like to reflect for a moment here if I might, and commend the former member for the old riding of York-Scarborough, Mr. Sutton, for his service to the people of the area that I now represent. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that his contribution made it possible to return three Conservative members from the township of Scarborough.

I am especially pleased to represent this riding because the people who live there have a very similar background to myself. Many of us left other parts of Ontario and other provinces and we joined this great trend to centralization and came to the Toronto area. Many of us are building homes and raising families, making our contribution to society under circumstances that were much different than we knew as youths in times past. Those living in the riding over a greater period, of course, Mr. Speaker, with some of the newcomers, know the life of rural Ontario and these are interests that we hold in common.

I think the most significant development in my riding that has been guided by this government is the development of the extension of the University of Toronto in Scarborough College. This gives us an institution of higher education and related facilities within the immediate area. It is planned to accommodate approximately 5,000 students at full capacity. I am happy to say that the first students will arrive there in the fall of 1965, a total of 500; in 1966, enrolment will increase to 1,000, and in 1967, it will increase to 1,500 and so on, until this figure of 5,000 is finally reached.

It is obvious that the encouragement and support of this government has made this extension possible. The proposal to create a new Department of University Affairs, I am sure is evidence of the government accepting its responsibility in this field. And it is quite a pleasure to know that spaces were available for the 5,000 people who entered academic life last year.

Some time ago, in the township of Scarborough, it was decided to create a new hospital to meet the ever-growing demands in the Metropolitan area. That hospital, which is now well under way, is Scarborough Centenary. And I am privileged to be a member of that association.

At present our plans are progressing well. A site has been located and approval in principle received from the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. This hospital, at completion, will have approximately 700 beds. In this hospital, besides the active treatment section, there will be developed a psychiatric out-patient wing and a number of beds for this purpose. Because of limitation of finances, construction will be in three stages of 200 beds each. The psychiatric wing will, of course, progress under a similar three-stage principle. And this psychiatric wing will bring to the township of Scarborough a new service, a service that we have not had before, and I think certainly the people of our area will appreciate it.

I would like to go into the problem of financing hospital construction costs in detail, but I think the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop) covered this so ably a few days ago that it would possibly be an excess at this time. However, contrary to what he said, this hospital that we are building now will not rely on public subscription but will be financed by debenture by the township. It has been recognized that the sums required to build this new structure would certainly be too great and the past experience of public subscriptions has not been too successful.

On the question of grants from the higher levels of government, the people in Scarborough appreciate the significant increase by Ontario, and it is now the case that the hospital will receive a grant of approximately $5,500 per bed considering the service areas as well. Further grants of $12,000 are expected to cover the full cost of the psychiatric wing on a per-bed basis. However, Scarborough, after considering both federal and provincial grants, will still be responsible for something approaching $10,000 per bed in the active treatment side.

In Scarborough there is a great deal of concern about the level of capital cost grants. In the opinion of many, capital cost should be split on a one-third basis among federal, provincial and municipal governments. And I would say, Mr. Speaker, should this come about, Ontario will certainly be in the fore. Equalization will have to come from the federal government. In the Metro area, as pointed out by the hon. member for Forest Hill, there is a shortage of some 2,300 beds. To catch up, let alone prepare for the continued growth in the future, tremendous efforts will have to be made. Our municipalities do not have the resources at this time to meet the need. We must now look to the federal government and its representatives in the Metropolitan area to help create 2,300 beds so there will not be a great shortage in this area.

One thing that I would like to discuss for a moment, if I may, is the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation study. The people of Scarborough East, of course, are looking with great interest to this study that is now going into its second phase. I think the job opportunities that will be opened up by a more central transportation programme throughout Metro have great significance. For instance, people in my riding at the present time are almost prohibited from working in other parts of Metro if they do not have the price of purchasing an automobile.

As this committee now proceeds to examine the economic competence of this service and related land use, I should hope that it will keep these things in mind. In other parts of the world transportation services on a commuter basis have not been too profitable, if profitable at all. However, convenient transportation is essential to the growth of outlying areas. Other great Canadian cities are seeking industrial expansion, and if we fail to provide these conveniences and service it is going to be our loss and someone else's gain. I am not suggesting this in a narrow parochial sense, but the competition is keen, we have to compete, and our commitments in the Metropolitan area are great.

Mr. Speaker, the new emphasis on resources management and conservation is of interest to us in Scarborough East. For some time the government has been acutely aware and has taken action to combat the ravages of the natural process and man's negligence. I am confident that the new Department of Energy and Resources Management, under the leadership of the hon. Minister (Mr. Simonett)—and I am sorry he is not in his seat today—should that come about, will contribute greatly to solving many of the problems that we face in that area.

The Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority has been active in Scarborough East for some time. The Highland Creek and the Rouge River systems flow through my riding. I am informed that the authority's policy in these parts of the rivers is to protect the valleys from destruction at time of flood. Many properties have passed from private to public ownership in both valleys. At the end of 1963, over $1 million had been spent in acquiring lands in the Highland Creek valley alone. This involved large grants from Ontario. A system of parks, managed by the Metropolitan government, has now developed in this area and is providing excellent recreational facilities for our community.

This programme is excellent and will leave valley lands in their natural state, or near natural state, for the use of all in the years to come. Unfortunately in this transfer from the private to the public many individuals have been inconvenienced. Some have given up their homes—or are about to have to give up their homes. Others have given up business opportunities in the valley. Expected profits by many of the developers in our area have been lost and development infringing on these conservation areas has been delayed by the lack of decisions by the authority, and I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the ultimate plan will involve up to 15 years before these valleys come into public ownership.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, under this system, many people will be inconvenienced for some time in the future. I think at the present time that the way they have been zoned and controlled and so on, that they are left with the privilege of paying taxes only; and possibly that of living there if they have a home built. This is a very real problem. In taking over private lands for public use, Mr. Speaker, more than money is involved. There are emotions as well. I should hope that with this new emphasis, that new channels will come about—a new approach, possibly decisions from the authority—and these problems can be solved.

Of special interest to me in the Throne Speech is that part dealing with Canadian unity. I have had the privilege of living in eastern Canada, travelling in the west and knowing the tremendous scope of this country. I lived in the province of Newfoundland, the most recent to join Confederation and from this experience, Mr. Speaker, I believe I know some of the significance of the birth of Canada. I also have relatives living in seven of the ten provinces and many friends across the country. When I say I feel I am Canadian, I know something of the meaning of these words.

Since Confederation, Canadians have striven to create a strong, independent and free nation from the last of the British holdings in North America. This was accomplished without the use of excessive force so ably put by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) the other day. We were the first nation in the world to gain political independence without violence.

Now political genius united two races and a collection of far-flung communities into one nation 3,000 mile wide and, with very few exceptions, 90 miles deep. Through great sacrifice, communications were created to bind these parts into a whole. Nation building in this part of North America involved a massive struggle to wrench a foothold from nature for some 18,000,000 people. It has required the miracle of Canada to develop a balanced economy based on agriculture, primary resource production and secondary industry.

Canada has grown slowly, but substantially, so that we have now taken our place proudly in the fore of free nations. The competence of Canadians has been recognized the world over. At the United Nations we have made significant contributions and in our NATO alliance, and so on. In nuclear power development, we are now certainly ahead; and also certainly in another matter, such as aircraft development, design and manufacture. Canadians have been recognized in many other fields—their contribution in the Second World War is an example.

Our success at political independence, the methods through which we achieve this, has been a guiding light to those new nations that have recently become independent.

But, today there is a movement afoot to break the great experiment in nation building. I say nation building in the present tense because Canada, we hope, will always be building and growing. Unfortunately for the common good, some think they can do better alone. This is an approach in direct opposition to the present turn of events.

Greater nations than ours are looking to co-operation with other nations to improve their lot. Interdependence within the host of nations is becoming a real fact. The European Common Market is evidence of this. These alignments are taking place not for individual gain, but for mutual benefit of the nations involved.

In Canada the spirit of one nation, I believe, is on the wane. At the moment we are not united to meet the challenges of the world, divisive forces are at work. These forces are greater than one thinks. I have felt, and I am sure that many others here in a like manner assumed, that the two nation principle, or separatist principle, was the figment of a small minority's imagination, or possibly newspaper sensationalism.

Mr. Speaker, on this point I have changed my mind. This change has come about because of events in the past few weeks. I am not thinking of the theft of arms in Quebec, or the increase in the guard around armouries, or Mr. Caouette's demands, emphasized by some sort of a bank; but because of information received of a very startling nature, information that has great significance for the province of Ontario. I hope to convey this to the House in the next few minutes.

I am thinking here of a company that has developed, with an investment of $2.5 million, over the past 12 years here in Canada. This company was organized to produce products that had formerly in the main, been imported—40 per cent of their production was formerly imported into Canada. Over 40 jobs have been created by this replacement of imports. They are located in two provinces, this company, Ontario and Quebec. Production facilities are in Ontario; warehousing, and sales office, and so on, are in Quebec and at that point their staff is bilingual personnel.

Quebec Hydro, an extensive purchaser, is implementing a policy of buying from firms with manufacturing facilities in that province and giving a ten per cent differential. From press reports, I believe, the Quebec government is going to give a 12 per cent differential to Quebec firms. Further, a list of firms with 51 per cent Canadian ownership is being compiled. This list will be brought to the public some time in the future and the purpose of this is that they will patronize their own.

These appear, these differentials of ten per cent and 12 per cent appear, on the surface to be a policy of the Quebec government. I should hope they are not.

The problem that the manufacturer in question faces is this. Manufacturing in Ontario, he cannot compete in that market with artificial tariff barriers of this size. To be awarded contracts from the province of Quebec he will have to move his manufacturing facilities from Ontario, and this is an expense he cannot afford at this time.

What I ask is this, Mr. Speaker, is this a fair way to treat an industrialist manufacturing within Canada? Does this policy complement our national government's trade policy? Is this the approach of the Ontario economic expansion programme? I submit, sir, it is not. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to outline one example of this policy in action.

Tenders have been called for insulators for Quebec Hydro. Three companies have quoted: a Japanese company quoted at $4.20; a French corporation at $6.10; an Ontario firm at $6.20. The contract went to the corporation from France on the basis that manufacturing facilities would be built in the province of Quebec. This shows an increased cost to that organization of $2 per unit, from the low to the high bid—or something in excess of 30 per cent.

Is this policy, Mr. Speaker, helping our national government's concern for Canadian ownership? Does it strengthen existing Canadian industry to meet competition from abroad? Does it provide economical power for secondary industry in Canada? I think not.

Our viewpoint, the viewpoint of Ontario, in like situation, is that whatever is good for Canada is good for Ontario. Whatever benefits Canada so benefits Ontario.

Our stand has been consistently "pro-Canadian" and I use that word, that term, with care. Our hon. Prime Minister has said repeatedly that we will go the whole mile in preserving Confederation. This is a stand that I, for one, appreciate. This is a stand that the great majority of Canadians appreciate. The question is, how far must we go?

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to go into a discussion of what action Ontario should take for our protection. Protection I do not believe is what we want. What we want is a return to those principles of time past, principles that will allow Canada to remain free, united and independent, to take her place proudly among nations of the world. We want to continue to provide a guiding light to those nations joining the ranks of the independent—continue to be strong so that we can help the less fortunate to a greater degree. We want to strengthen the forces of freedom and maintain a high standard of living for our people. To do this we need ten provinces not nine.

Division into two nations, Mr. Speaker, fragmentation of our economy, a spirit of indifference among our historic racial groups, will not accomplish this for us. If we continue on this path, Mr. Speaker, I would predict that our future is now. Canada as a nation will not last, as we know it. Our place in the sun will be lost forever.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make this, my maiden speech, I would like first to extend the welcome that you have given to the ladies of the Tuesday Afternoon Club. I do not believe I could have made my speech at a more auspicious time than today. Ladies, you are welcome.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my congratulations to you on your appointment as Speaker of this House. In the short while that I have known you and observed you at your duties, sir, I have come to realize that this House could not have picked a better man. In the last day or two, in the midst of all this turmoil, your impartiality, Mr. Speaker, impressed me. May I wish you well for the rest of this term.

I would like next to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop) on his most concise and thought-provoking speech. I would like also to congratulate the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard) on her election and on her first speech in this House. I am certain that she will well represent the constituents of Hamilton Centre and all of the women of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to express my appreciation for the personal courtesies and the warmth of acceptance shown to me by all hon. members of this House. My experiences to date have been interesting and I feel that I will find the duties of the Legislature much to my liking.

As you know, I am privileged to represent the constituents of the newly created riding of Etobicoke, the most north-westerly riding in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of this House that I am often asked if the riding of Etobicoke is synonymous with the township of Etobicoke. In answer, I would like to say that most of the township of Etobicoke, like Gaul at the time of the Romans, is divided into three ridings. The southern-most portion of the township of Etobicoke is a part of the riding of Lakeshore which is so ably represented in this House by a very good friend and colleague of mine (Mr. Eagleson). North of the Lakeshore riding, one finds the riding of York West, so well represented by the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree).

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to digress for a moment and say a few words with reference to the hon. Minister of Labour. It is not often that a former law student has an opportunity to pay tribute to one of his former mentors. I well recall, Mr. Speaker, the days that I spent under articles to the hon. Minister. I must say that I learned a great deal about the law and something about politics from the hon. Minister of Labour. As I think back, I believe that it was just before or during his campaign for the 1956 election that an irate constituent wrote a letter to the newspapers complaining that he had written to the hon. member and had received a reply which had been, in error, unstamped, and which therefore cost him four cents when it was delivered to him by the postman. The next day, there was a picture in one of the local papers showing the hon. member for York West shaking the hand of the now smiling constituent and handing him stamps for the pennies that had been expended. And I might add, Mr. Speaker, that we all know that the hon. member was elected in that election.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I learned a great deal about the law and something about the art of public relations while serving under articles to the hon. Minister from York West. Little did I dream that I would be standing here one day, across the floor from him addressing this House and, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I felt that I should take the opportunity to publicly thank the hon. Minister for the courtesy and the time that he spent with me. The work was hard and demanding and the hours were long but the opportunity was there for one to learn and I did my best to take advantage of that opportunity.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Braithwaite: I would remind the hon. members of this House that the period I speak of was during that time when it was not considered fashionable to have a member of a minority race in one's law firm, particularly if it is downtown. The hon. Minister from York West is to be commended for his far-sightedness and fairness. He was one of those few who set a precedent that I am pleased to say, Mr. Speaker, is being followed by more and more firms in the city of Toronto, and I wish to commend him and to give credit where credit is due, even though it may not be long before he and I may violently disagree.

It might well be asked, Mr. Speaker, why, having become associated with a member of the Conservative Party and knowing something of the high calibre of some of its members, I decided to join the Liberal Party.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Speaker, I would say first of all that I did not become actively interested in the working of any partisan party until fairly recently. At the time, I felt that I would find out all that I could about all four political parties and decide where best my aims and ideals would fit in. I examined the parties to the far right and to the far left, read about them, made inquiries as to their purposes and platforms. Very good friends of mine, including some close neighbours, do belong to the New Democratic Party, and I would say that they are very fine people, and that we are still friends.

However, being a moderate man, I concluded that I could not, in all conscience, join either the party to the far right or the party to the far left.

I then considered the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party the first to the right of centre, the second to the left of centre. I read about the long period of time that the present government had been in power and I looked about me to determine, in my estimation, whether or not it had done all that it could have done while it was in power. I looked upon our industry, I read about the north, and I concluded that there are natural resources that remain woefully unexploited. I concluded that industry could be much further advanced than it is, not only within the golden horseshoe, but in the far stretches of our northern Ontario.

I understand—and I do not know how true it is, but I have been told—that the money that the province gets from taxes from the mining industry, for an example, is less than the money given in aid. If this industry was as healthy as it should be, I do not think that that should be so, Mr. Speaker. I concluded that so far as I was concerned, I did not feel that the Conservative Party was truly representative of the wide variety of people that we find in this great province of ours.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I considered the Liberal Party. I examined its past and found that despite the difficulties it has been through in the last 20 years or so, it has always been known as "the reform party of the age." In talking to people here, there and everywhere, I concluded that this was the party that could and would represent the ordinary people—the working man as well as the farmer, the business man and industry—and I felt that here one would find a true cross-section of the people of Ontario. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I determined to join the Liberal Party and to use my best efforts to help it return to that healthy position it had of yore.

So far as I am concerned, the Conservative Party, notwithstanding the fact that it is back in power, has not done all that it could have done for this great province of ours. We Liberals on this side of the House will make it our business to bring this to the attention of the people whenever and wherever we can.

Mr. Speaker, many times I have sat here in the last few days and I have heard people commend the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) and his party. I can only say that this party has already been through its toughest days and I look at the two rows in front of me and I say if the mantle of leadership falls on any one of the men here, or even on an outsider, with the able help of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver), I think that it will be after the next election, and mark my words—there may be a different man sitting where the hon. Prime Minister is today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments with reference to the Speech from the Throne. I was sorry, Mr. Speaker, that although the government made reference to education and to teachers' colleges, it made no reference whatsoever to the improvement of methodology at the Ontario College of Education, or at any of the teachers' colleges throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, there was hardly a gathering, small or large, that I attended where the parents of children attending public and high school did not complain, first about the inability of their children to read and second about the inability of their children to spell.

Mr. Speaker, this reminds me of a conversation which I had with an Etobicoke businessman not long ago. He told me about a student whom he had employed for the summer months. This girl, just there as temporary clerical help—she was an honour student, one of the top girls in her class—but she had difficulty in spelling. He was telling me about one day when this girl took a message at noon time and it was a Mr. Kerr who had called—K-E-R-R. She wrote the message and he said to me: "I was astonished; she spelled it—C-U-R".

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is but a symptom in my mind of deeper trouble. It is indicative of something being wrong. As I said, during the campaign many mothers and fathers complained that their children were not being taught how to read and how to spell properly. They complained that this whole question of phonics was not being given sufficient attention in the teaching.

Further investigation of the general situation, Mr. Speaker, leads me to ask the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) whether or not, in the light of the new courses that are coming out in mathematics, history and geography, to name a few, and the changes in curricula: are the proper changes and upgrading in methods being carried out at the teacher college level? I would like to see the hon. Minister of Education appoint a commission to look into the history of methodology in our teaching colleges and I would like to see that commission report back to this House so that the public might know that the government does not have the cart before the horse. Because I question the advisability of bringing out all of these new courses and investigating Grade 13—now I think this is commendable—but I question it without starting at the base, namely bringing the teaching of the teachers up to date.

Complaints made to school boards, I understand, are answered quite often by answers such as: "We have nothing to do with the way teachers are taught to teach".

Mr. Speaker, where there is smoke, there is fire. If so many people in my own riding are worried about the general question of reading and writing and spelling, then I am certain many other people are also worried about the same thing.

I was pleased to see, Mr. Speaker, that the government saw fit to set up a new body to study the problems of our youth. It is to be commended. However, I would bring to the attention of this House the fact that minor league hockey, particularly in the urban areas, could do with more support from the government. In my own riding of Etobicoke, youth is our most vital commodity and we are very interested in its problems.

We have, for instance, the Northern Etobicoke Hockey Association wherein close to 1,000 boys participate during the hockey season. This winter we had the usual mad scramble by all the boys to sell raffle tickets in order to raise funds to pay for the ice time and the other expenses connected with the league.

Now, Mr. Speaker, because of a complaint and a threatened prosecution by the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) these hard-working parents and boys had to refund all the monies collected through the sale of the raffle tickets and the whole league was in grave danger of disintegrating. It would seem to me that this new committee might well consider further aid to worthy projects and organizations such as the Northern Etobicoke Hockey Association to make it unnecessary for them to have to raise funds in this manner.

Last, the hon. Attorney General might consider what steps could be taken by the government so that the federal government might be persuaded to amend the law with reference to lotteries so that worthy fund-raising activities could be carried out without fear of prosecution.

One other matter, Mr. Speaker, comes to my mind. When I was elected I was elected as the representative of all the constituents of the riding of Etobicoke to this House, and not as a representative of any particular race or creed. I make this statement, Mr. Speaker, only to ensure that the next few words that I have to say are kept in their proper perspective.

I am speaking now about something which has been brought to my attention in my particular riding for three years, from as far back as 1960. I refer now, Mr. Speaker, to a particular section in the statutes which allows for the setting up of separate schools solely for coloured persons. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that there has not been need for such schools since before the beginning of this century.

I refer to Chapter 368 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario which is called The Separate Schools Act and which provides for the setting up of Protestant and coloured separate schools. Now after the Civil War it may have been, Mr. Speaker, that there might have been need for some of these schools in the southwestern part of our province. Those days have passed. I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that an examination of many of our other laws and statutes will reveal that there are other Acts that need to be brought up to date.

I mention this matter, Mr. Speaker, only to show that although the government has been in power for over 20 years, there are many things that can be done and should have been done, to keep Ontario abreast of the times.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the House about the remaining portion of the township of Etobicoke, that part which makes up the riding of Etobicoke. It is bounded on the south by Richview Sideroad, on the east by the Humber River, on the north by Finch Avenue and on the west by the Indian Line. Within these boundaries live, Mr. Speaker, the constituents whom I have the honour to represent.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I speak for all my constituents when I say that I believe that the interests of the province of Ontario and of Canada are of vital interest to our constituency. I believe that we should all take inspiration from the fact that we are approaching the centenary of Canadian Confederation and attempt to reinitiate into our local, as well as into our provincial, community life, that sense of idealism that the Fathers of Confederation had.

There are now opportunities for building better communities and wonderful show-places as tributes to Canada. However, I believe that this might be an apt time for all of us to consider the rededication of our efforts towards bringing to the old framework of Confederation a new sense of brotherhood and unity.

We, in the riding of Etobicoke and in the township of Etobicoke, intend to be in the vanguard. My constituency, by its very makeup, constitutes a tribute to Confederation. No special language, ethnic or parochial group holds a role of dominance. I am pleased to tell this House that the riding of Etobicoke is truly representative of a cross-section of the Canadian people. We are proud of having the finest representatives of the professions, the working class, industry, the commercial trades and services, and even of the arts. These people will work with their municipal and provincial governments to attract the best teachers, to introduce the finest hospitals, to sponsor ambitious adult educational and recreational programmes and to win for themselves the reputation as the most progressive constituency and community in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, while on the subject of the riding of Etobicoke, I would like to touch very briefly on the question of the Thistle-town housing project which is to be built in the riding. As a member of the much discussed council of the township of Etobicoke, and without going into the merits of the situation, I welcome the opportunity to put before the hon. members of this House some of the reasoning behind the actions of the council of the township of Etobicoke. Speaking personally, I have never been in favour of any action which would hold up the commencement of the project. As for the remaining members of the council, I am certain that any actions which they may have taken, which might appear to be delaying in nature, were taken in good faith and with the sole thought in mind, that inasmuch as this is the first time that such a project has been envisaged on such a large scale for the province of Ontario, sound planning is of major importance in order that the success of the undertaking may be ensured.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. Minister from Don Mills (Mr. Randall) and the hon. Minister from Cochrane South (Mr. Spooner) for their co-operation and understanding. We all know that there are at least two sides to every question. Further, there is no problem which is so weighty that it cannot be solved, and I was pleased to see today, Mr. Speaker, that an agreement has been reached by the hon. members and the reeve of the township of Etobicoke. I only hope that the project is commenced with all due speed.

Mr. Speaker, although my time spent in this House has been but short, the road leading to my election to this House was not a short one. It began in my childhood with the convictions, ideals and beliefs that were instilled in us when we were at public school. Convictions, ideals and beliefs in the type of political institutions existing in Ontario and of which we are all so proud of today. Yes, Mr. Speaker, my story has a particular individuality. I am a product of that crucible of democracy located in and around the general area of the Kensington Market in downtown Toronto. We attended Ryerson Public School and Harbord Collegiate with members of just about every race, creed and religion. At that time, and subsequently at high school and at the University of Toronto, I recognized that the kind of democracy which we have functions best when it is properly tested by periodic elections from time to time.

My respect for local school boards persuaded me to seek a role of service at this local level, and here, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pause for a moment to say a few words concerning members of all Ontario school boards. These people, on the whole, serve without thought of financial gain and most do not aspire to higher office. They are dedicated people whose sole interest is service to their community. Be that as it may, there are times when at this level of municipal government, democracy does sometimes seem to falter because it is not tested. Time after time, Mr. Speaker, one hears about acclamations in the elections of this school board or that school board. Looking back on my service on the board of education in the township of Etobicoke, I cannot help but wonder if the general lack of interest among the people in serving as a school board trustee could have any relation to the fact that there is no consequential reward for the long hours that are entailed.

In my view, the hon. Minister of Education might be well advised to consider the general principle of trustees being paid by the Department of Education or by the province of Ontario, in the same way that an alderman or councilman or other elected municipal official is paid.

There are those who feel that this might have an adverse effect on those who are really dedicated and interested in the position for the position's sake. The wrong people might become interested, they feel, and I presume they mean politicians. However, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the vast majority of municipal politicians are very interested in the affairs of their communities and I fail to see how the paying of trustees for their services and the resulting competition which might ensue for the job as trustee would not help but bring about a greater interest in the job. To my mind, one would find slates of candidates for school trustee throughout the province with a more balanced cross-section of minds and ideas.

Continuing with my story, Mr. Speaker, one hears serious talk about the value of men and women coming to grips with the grassroot problems of their own communities at the local or municipal level, because in doing so they achieve a particular understanding of the kind of legislation required for their particular community. As for myself, I realize that training at the local level was a necessary and invaluable prerequisite for service in this House. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, from the days of my childhood I have had a high regard for the legislative process. This regard was inspired both by my educators and by my family and friends.

As my experience in the House broadens, it is my hope that I can call upon my faith in the democratic process which has been nurtured on the local level.

I know that as the business of the House proceeds, the role of my hon. colleagues and myself will be a dual one. On the one hand we will criticize constructively where criticism is due. On the other, we will bring forward fresh ideas and legislation from time to time in keeping with the precepts of our party. It is my own hope that my comments will be considered constructive. I begin my period in this House with considerable admiration and regard for the hon. members on all sides of the House. However, I fully realize that we will come to differ on many issues as the days progress. I, for one, recognize that we are all partners in this, a co-operative democracy, and that we are all here for a single purpose—the betterment of this great province of ours.

Mr. G. H. Peck (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, although quite some time has now elapsed since you were elected to the high office of Speaker, this is my first opportunity to congratulate you on this well-deserved honour, and I wish to compliment you on the very able and impartial way you conduct the business of this House.

I would also like to congratulate the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and all his Cabinet for being returned to office last September. It shows that the people of Ontario feel that this government is a true government of the people. The Speech from the Throne proves that this government is resolved to keep this province to the fore in the economic life of our country, and at the same time to co-operate with the federal and other provincial governments to keep our union strong, free and vigorous, and to continue to raise the standards of living of our people, and our democratic free-enterprise system along with social justice and social reform.

Mr. Speaker, I have noted with some interest the reports we have been hearing since last fall of the possible union of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party. I do not feel that it is too facetious an idea to suggest that if the New Democratic Party really feels that we should return to the two-party system, perhaps its true home is with us on the government side.

While we continue to battle the depression of the thirties—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Everybody wants us.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Why do you not toss up?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Be my guest, take 'em.

An hon. member: It has got them thinking.

Mr. Peck: —many of the unions they depend upon for support have become so affluent under the prosperity and the favourable labour laws of the Conservative government that they no longer believe in socialism.

Indeed, in the only jurisdiction in North America where there is a socialist government, socialism became such a failure that it was discontinued, and the movement now seems to be one merely of social reform. Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party also believes in social welfare, and perhaps it is not too radical to suggest that the New Democratic Party join with us under the free-enterprise system, the more efficient free-enterprise system, to help bring the people of Ontario unprecedented prosperity.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): You can have their members, we will take the votes.

Mr. Peck: The Throne Speech promised the continuation of the very successful trade crusade to bring us the 60,000 new jobs per year needed to keep our economy buoyant and to encourage our exports to the United States and Europe.

The Department of University Affairs is a very logical step in the development of educational facilities. We have gone through a growth period in our elementary schools which is resulting in a major expansion in the secondary school field, so the next step is to ensure that those graduates who wish to continue their education at university may do so and be able to afford to do so.

The three select committees to be appointed will have the opportunity to investigate some of the major problems that concern our society today. We have heard from many speakers about the problems of youth and the desire to investigate and correct some of these problems.

I would like to say a word in favour of the committee to investigate the waste that is occurring from too early retirement of many of our older people, the difficulty in obtaining jobs, and the problems of older lonely people living out their declining years on small pensions.

(Mr. W. G. Noden takes the chair).

There is an increasing number of these, and as people live longer and retirement age is lowered we should not forget them while we concentrate on the problems of youth.

It is customary, Mr. Speaker, in a maiden speech to speak of one's constituency. Along with nine other hon. members of this House, I represent one of the new ridings not previously represented here. Mr. Dick Sutton, formerly the member for York-Scarborough, very ably served a riding with 250,000 people, and I am sure this was an onerous task. The hon. Prime Minister, realizing that the democratic ideal of representation by population was not being served in Scarborough, as well as some other areas of Metropolitan Toronto, brought in legislation which gives the people of Scarborough four representatives to serve them in this House.

It is difficult if not impossible, Mr. Speaker, to speak of my riding of Scarborough Centre out of the context of Scarborough as a whole, or indeed of the entire Metropolitan Toronto area, which today has grown into one tightly knit economic area in which boundaries that once separated the various municipalities have become merely academic and bear no relationship to the original communities which once surrounded the much smaller city of Toronto. The Metropolitan Toronto area is now an industrial, commercial and residential complex which physically but not yet politically has outgrown the parochialism which is so evident in many of the councils and boards which administrate it.

The corporation of Metropolitan Toronto, created by the famous Bill 80 of over ten years ago, did much to alleviate many of the problems and growing pains which hindered the economic growth of this area. Townships such as Scarborough would have been seriously stunted in growth and development without the advantage of debentures guaranteed by the high credit rating that the corporation enjoyed, and also the grants that came from the province to both Metro and the various municipalities for schools, roads, bridges and many other facets of municipal government.

However, Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that the Metropolitan corporation is not now doing the job it was originally designed to do, and that some of the problems that plagued this area before Metro are with us again, and showing signs of becoming chronic in the near future if not already. This preamble, Mr. Speaker, is leading up to what I regard as the most glaring failure of the Metropolitan form of government—the inequality of education in Metro caused by the various levels of assessment and the ability of some municipalities to pay compared with others.

For the past seven years I have been an elected trustee of the Scarborough board of education and I have been disturbed by the signs of an ever-widening gap between the haves and the have-nots among our municipalities. I feel major changes should be made, and while I may be jumping the gun somewhat, Mr. Speaker, by speaking on this before the Goldenberg commission report is debated in this House, it is only because I feel that there is a real urgency to this problem.

Scarborough township is one of the dormitory suburbs, with many small homes and apartments and a great many families of school age and pre-school age on the one hand, and a very low assessment on the other to support the schools that these children must attend. In Scarborough there are 17.7 per cent of the children of the entire Metropolitan Toronto area but we only have 9.6 per cent of the assessment. Twenty-five per cent of the people in Scarborough are attending school—over 60,000 people in a population of almost 250,000—a ratio unheard of anywhere else in Canada.

During the years I spent on the Scarborough board of education our school system grew at a fantastic rate. For 24,000 public school pupils in 1956, we now have double that many—48,000. Our secondary schools have increased in that time from 4,600 pupils to 13,000 today, a threefold increase, and an increase that is only just beginning and which is leading to many staff and accommodation and financial problems. Other boards in Metro have found themselves in similar situations which vary only in some degree, and the net result has been to create a different standard of education in every municipality. It is one that I feel can be corrected only by a common education system, and a common education mill rate across the entire Metropolitan Toronto area.

This can be accomplished by either outright amalgamation of the area boards or by a borough system with the main authority vested in one central board. To paraphrase a famous Canadian of another era—amalgamation if necessary, but not necessarily amalgamation!

Let me cite you, sir, one example of the variety of educational standards that prevails in close proximity in some areas. Victoria Park Avenue, the western boundary of Scarborough, passes through four different municipalities. A youngster who lives on the east side of the street attends school in Scarborough, which has a two-level system of education; on the west side of the street he can attend, within a comparatively short distance, either a Toronto school, which has junior and senior high schools, or an East York or a West York school, which has the tri-level system of education.

I submit that in Metropolitan Toronto education should be equal for all and not dependent on what block on a street a youngster lives in, or on whether his municipality has a high or low ratio of industrial to residential assessment. The taxpayers cross these artificial boundaries daily to work in the offices and factories of those municipalities with the high industrial assessment, and the same thing happens to our students when they graduate from our schools. Although it has not been proven that the tri-level system of education is superior to the two-level system, we must assume that there are certain advantages.

The same thing applies, Mr. Speaker, to the pupil-teacher ratio, where Scarborough is also at a great disadvantage, for it does create a heavy load on the teacher who has a higher pupil-teacher ratio than is normal in adjacent areas.

Mr. Speaker, having tried to establish Scarborough as a have-not municipality when it comes to assessment, but a have municipality when we speak of the great wealth of students who are attending our schools and the labour force that daily goes out in Scarborough to contribute to the prosperity of the entire Metropolitan area, and having established that Scarborough is, comparatively speaking, starved for funds and unable to possess many of the facilities that our neighbours have, I would like to speak just for a few moments on the financing of education. Here we have an anomaly, for the Scarborough education tax rate is the highest of any suburban area in Metro, while the per-pupil cost is the lowest. In our public school system in Scarborough, we spent in 1963 only $309 per pupil, against a weighted average of $394 in all Metro boards; approximately 25 per cent less. Leaside, where many of our taxpayers work, spent almost $500 per pupil, or approximately 70 per cent more per pupil than we are able to afford to do in Scarborough.

We see a similar picture when we look at the assessment per pupil ratio. The overall average assessment per pupil in Metropolitan Toronto varied little from 1957 to 1963 at $18,000. The assessment per public school pupil in Scarborough has decreased from $10,000 in 1957 to $9,500 today, or approximately a little over half the Metropolitan average.

The maintenance assistance grants give a much truer picture of how Metro has failed to equalize education costs. In 1954 these grants paid 82 per cent of the daily cost of our public schools. This came down every year by degrees to 61 per cent in 1961, and a slight increase in 1962 raised it to 66 per cent; but still much below the 82 per cent it started off with at the formation of Metro.

Secondary school grants show an even larger discrepancy. In 1954 the grants paid 87 per cent of the cost, dropping by 35 per cent in 1962 to 52 per cent, with a slight increase to 56 per cent the following year, but still 31 per cent under what Metro was designed to do.

Thus the gaps between what the grants were designed to accomplish and what they are actually doing is, with small variations, widening every year. And no amount of tinkering with Metro will cause any more than a short-term palliative. Major surgery is needed to erase these inequalities. The maintenance assistance grants in recent years have become a political football on the Metropolitan board of education.

The Toronto board, with half the Metro votes but less than half the Metro population, holds the whip hand to keep the suburban boards in line. When one does step out of line, all the other suburban boards are punished equally by the refusal to make any needed changes in the grant structure. We find the paradox of the school board, who, according to their submission to the Goldenberg commission, are most opposed to any changes in Metro, are, in fact, the very ones who are forcing the need for amalgamation. I speak of the Etobicoke board of education. Its complete lack of co-operation with the other boards in Metro and the many gimmicks they have to lure away top teachers from other boards, is, in my opinion, the number one reason for the demand for an amalgamated board, or at least a borough system with equalized mill rates.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, and hear of the great resources of our province; of our mines, of our farms, our forests, our lakes and streams. But the greatest resource of all is our children. Their education is important to the future of our province, our country and our way of life. We can give them a great heritage from the past, but they need a good education for their future.

The hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) in his statement to this House on January 27 on the Ontario foundation tax plan has made an important step to ensure equal education facilities for all children in Ontario. I feel it is also a step in the direction of removing some of the costs of education from the property owner and putting it where it belongs, on society as a whole. But we must also have equal education facilities for all who live in this Metropolitan Toronto area and equal education mill rates as well.

Another area I would like to touch on briefly before concluding, Mr. Speaker, as it has reached serious conditions in Scarborough, is the question of hospital beds. We heard the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop) and he spoke perhaps much more ably than I can on the need of hospital beds; but this question is important, as important as education in many regards to the people in Scarborough.

For those who need a hospital bed and cannot get one because of the very grave shortage that exists it is one to which we should give a great deal of thought. There is no hospital in my riding of Scarborough Centre. The Scarborough General Hospital, which serves not only the Scarborough area of 250,000 people, but much of the outlying area as well, has only 340 beds and 100 bassinets. Now, according to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, there should be five active treatment beds per 1,000 population; which means we need 1,250 beds, three times the number we have now.

The proposed addition to the present hospital and the construction of a new hospital will result in a total of 750 beds. However, by the time these are ready for the first patient, the population of Scarborough will have increased to the point where we will still have only one-third the minimum number of beds required for our population. By 1980, when the township population is expected to reach 500,000, accommodation should be 2,500 beds. This is a goal which will require superhuman efforts and which should be started immediately.

The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) has stated that hospital accommodation should be provided by an equal partnership of federal and provincial and local governments. I think we all agree with this. The contributions of the provincial government, after the 60 per cent increase in grants announced last fall, brings it to almost the required third. It costs, in Metropolitan Toronto, approximately $18,500 per bed to build a hospital. The provincial grants amount to $5,500 per bed. The federal government pays $3,000, for a total of $8,500, which still leaves $10,000 per bed to be raised by the local community.

A few years ago it was possible to raise the bulk of this amount by public subscription, but this is no longer so. Hospital drives of late years have been a complete failure. So, in order to raise this money in Scarborough, it is necessary to levy the $10,000 per bed against the local property owners. This obviously is impossible in Scarborough where property owners are already taxed as much as 50 per cent higher than many of our neighbouring municipalities.

If the federal government could be persuaded to increase their grants for hospital construction to the provincial rates and the provincial government could include, for grant purposes, such necessary areas as office space, boiler plants, storage and mechanical equipment areas, waiting rooms, and such other appendages so necessary for the operation of a hospital, it would help considerably for the short term. However, for the long term, I would like to suggest that the Ontario government consider a tax foundation plan for hospital construction, patterned after the tax foundation plan for education, to ensure that all our people in Ontario, wherever they may live and whatever the assessment or wealth of their township or municipality, will be able to obtain a hospital bed whenever they have need of one. This may be a new approach to this problem, but one I feel would help solve one of our most pressing problems.

Although the Ontario government has been most generous with their hospital grants, we cannot be complacent until such time as there are sufficient hospital beds in this wealthy province for those who have need of them.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding might I say that I have had the privilege, in my lifetime, of serving as a pilot in the Royal Canadian Air Force in the British, in the European and Mediterranean theatres of action. I have had the privilege of serving my community in Scarborough as a member of the board of education and various other boards, which I hope have contributed something to our community. It is a great privilege and an honour to be able to stand here in this Legislature and take part in the debates and represent the people of Scarborough and the people of Ontario, as a whole.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, it is a great deal of pleasure for me to be speaking on behalf of the residents of Essex South. This is the first occasion in four years that an elected representative of this great riding has had the opportunity to speak in reply to the Throne Speech and the last two weeks has been the first time in four years that the elected representative has had the opportunity to raise questions or speak on bills or motions on behalf of his constituents.

In the first session of this 27th Parliament I was very pleased to hear the hon. Prime Minister's (Mr. Robarts') kind remarks about the former Speaker of the House—my predecessor as representative of the riding of Essex South. Since being in the House I have heard many fine attributes in regard to the capabilities, friendliness and the fairness with which my predecessor filled the office of Speaker of the House. I am sure that our new Speaker has some apprehension to the pitfalls and dangers to his newly exalted position and that he will strive to take measures in order that the same fate does not befall him as did his predecessor.

Possibly, Mr. Speaker, you are giving strong consideration to the proposals of my predecessor of a riding of Queen's Park and the office of a permanent Speaker. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you will agree that I did my part in September of creating one job opportunity in our province. It is to be hoped also that this government will look kindly toward the previous member who served this province and the constituency of Essex South for some 20 years.

As is customary in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, sir, a member gives a résumé of the wonderful assets and requirements of his riding. Originally, I had decided to depart from this procedure, but because of the lack of voice from this area for four years, I feel I must give you a brief outline of Essex South and sectors of Essex county as a whole.

Essex South is the most southerly riding in all of Canada. It is possibly the most complex riding to represent in all of Canada. It has almost every conceivable problem, both rural and urban. It has two great assets: its outstanding agricultural economy, which is not surpassed in variety or dollar volume anywhere in Canada and possibly the world, and its main asset—the finest people in the world, who have come from all parts of the world, who are contributing their talents to make this a better Ontario and Canada in which to live.

The western boundary of this riding is the Detroit River, the world's busiest waterway. In the river is Bob-Lo Island, possibly the only Canadian soil for which you must clear United States customs to set foot on land. The major community in this area is Amherstburg, steeped in history and where Fort Malden and the Great Lakes Marine Museum can be found. To this area the first French settlers in Upper Canada came and settled, and the area still exists as one of the few original French-Canadian areas in southern Ontario.

Amherstburg played an important role in the War of 1812 and it was here in succeeding years that escaped slaves from the country to the south reached British soil and freedom. The descendants of these people number among Essex county's finest and most respected citizens. In the Amherstburg area are two major industries: Calvert Distillers who annually use tons of Essex and Kent county corn with its higher alcohol content, and the Brunner-Monde, producing soda ash and calcium chloride. Mining in this area has attracted, in recent years, miners from the north of Italy who are blending their skills and culture to enrich our area.

Turning south and east along Lake Erie, we find Holiday Provincial Park, a rather new park in the area, and of great value to the recreational needs of the residents of the county and our three million visitors who come from across the river.

Through all this area are great marshes which used to foster a great hunting clientele, which has almost disappeared because of certain policies. It is to be hoped that changes in rulings will allow this area to return in time to the great hunting preserve it once was.

Further to the east along the shores of warm Lake Erie are thousands of summer residents, making their contribution to the recreation of our people and to the economy of our townships and communities. The town of Harrow and its surrounding agricultural area is renowned throughout Canada for its fine potatoes, peaches and other fruits and vegetables. Here, too, is the Dominion Experimental Station, which has contributed so greatly to farmers all across Canada.

The town of Kingsville has its world-famous Jack Miner bird sanctuary, its great fishing fleet, tobacco and food processing plants, and is one of the province's great summer tourist towns. About four miles to the east of Kingsville is the site of the Union water plant, the first major water system built through the province and serving the communities of Ruthven, Cottam and Essex to the north, and to the east, the largest community in south Essex and the next city in western Ontario, Leamington. Leamington, the tomato capital of Canada, has the world's largest tomato processing plant, the H. J. Heinz Company of Canada Limited, with a payroll of almost 2,000 people. Here, too, is located a variety of industry, related to the wonderful agricultural economy of the area. Over 50 per cent of all the greenhouse glass in Canada, valued in millions of dollars, is located within a ten-mile radius of Leamington, providing winter jobs to hundreds and fresh tomatoes, cucumbers and flowers to millions across Canada.

This is the great early market garden area of Canada, with products of all types reaching markets two weeks ahead of anywhere else in Canada. Here, too, is Point Pelee National Park, which last year attracted more than 750,000 visitors—more than any national park east of the Rockies.

To the south lies Pelee Island, in the centre of Lake Erie, internationally famous for its pheasant hunt and soya bean crops. Finally, on the eastern boundary of Essex South is the large fishing port of Wheatley, which votes in Kent West, but has economic ties in Essex South. This rich agricultural land of Essex South has attracted thousands of immigrants from all countries of the world and they are working together as an example to peoples of the world for the benefit of Ontario and Canada.

Most speeches to date have all asked some special consideration from the government. We, in Essex South, desperately require one thing—water. We must have water in all parts of this riding and in quantities to satisfy the needs of this highly specialized agricultural economy. We, in the communities or areas served by existing systems, are grateful for these systems, but those persons within sight of the pipelines who cannot buy the water that they would gladly pay for and cannot have, who must sit idly by watching their year's production wither on the vine, must have this water. If there is one thing that this government can do or will do on behalf of the people of Essex South, it will be to assist in the extension of existing water facilities and the creation of more pipelines to criss-cross Essex South.

It has been a long time since any suggestions or resolutions have been introduced on the floor by a member for the most southerly riding in Canada, but I have taken a great deal of time and effort to devise and advance a programme that will be of benefit to all the people of Ontario, and will lift the prestige of our great and noble province to heights hitherto unknown. Being unencumbered by predetermined lines of thought that are usually prevalent in the background thinking of those elected members of this Legislature who have risen to these exalted elected positions by serving on municipal councils or through the hallowed halls of Osgoode Hall, I have searched for the obvious situation in our province that could have been overlooked by the members of previous governments in this province. I feel that I must offer a project that will inspire the wonderful people of Ontario to a pride in our great province that knows no bounds, and at the same time offer something that will create manufacturing opportunities, create jobs for our people. And further, it must be something that will beautify our picturesque and rugged terrain and at the same time identify the population to the many thousands of visitors who annually flock to our vacation-land province to enjoy the wonderful resources with which nature has so bountifully endowed us.

To me, as the representative of the people of the garden gateway to our great province, there is one symbol that can do all these things on behalf of our people. A truly representative flag for the province of Ontario. A distinctive provincial flag that will enthuse people with the greatness of the province, certainly will be something to look up to.

Our people will talk in glowing terms of the assets of our province and our visitors will sense this wonderful provincial pride. Jobs will be created as additional thousands of yards of textile products will have to be produced. Jobs will be created to fabricate and erect the hundreds of new flagpoles that will be erected. As our visitors travel miles of highways, they could be greeted by our own distinctive provincial flag at service stations, and not merely the flag of our great country and the country to the south, and the flag of la belle province, to the east.

We all know of the great centennial plans that are being formed for our country and province. These must be ready by 1967 and assuming the speed with which committees work, I have had the forethought to do some advance preparation in order to assist a committee that could be established to develop a special province of Ontario flag.

I have viewed flags from many of the states of the great country to the south of us, but naturally our flag must be truly representative of all our people. Since approximately 16 per cent of our citizens are represented here in the Legislature by our friends to my left, I thought it was only fair the first consideration be given to this minority group. So my professional designers and I have planned a flag with a solid green background, symbolic of the monetary theories of this party, and in gold bold lettering the initials NDPO in the centre to tie in with the golden promises that have been emitting from this group over the years in the Legislature. I have submitted this proposed design for comment and some viewers have uttered such remarks as: "This flag must represent 'no damn part of Ontario'; or the 'no debt province of Ontario'; which we know is not true.

Now, this was the sample flag which we designed. But I realize that my own initials happen to be in the centre of this flag, and I certainly cannot stand for that. So if I remove my initials, we have two letters left, "NO"; which surely is the expression of the people of this province.

The second flag I designed was based on the taste of approximately 35 per cent of our voting population and proved to be a little closer to my heart. Half of the background is a good Liberal red; the other half a virtuous white, to symbolize a clean and fresh approach to the problems of the province that are held by those who are bound by the cause of true Liberalism in our province, just as the white portion of our flag is bound to the beautiful Liberal red. Affixed to the white portion of this proposed design we would place the official crest of our province to symbolize our natural resources, our heritage and symbols of justice based on parliamentary law. Here is the design we have produced for further consideration by a proposed committee.

Finally we came up with a design which is representative of approximately 49 per cent of the people of our province, and possibly might be favoured by the elected representatives of the majority of this House. Naturally we determined that the background would have to be solid Tory blue, although technical dyeing experts think this particular shade is very susceptible to fading away when this particular shade is exposed to the bright glare and close scrutiny of the sunshine, which from time to time covers our fair province. Possibly there is an analogy that could be drawn by those hon. members of this House who also are dyed by this special shade of blue.

But this was only the first problem that we encountered with this particular design. The second problem was as a result of the outstanding efforts that were made by the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay). I am sure that my suggestion of manufacturing opportunities will not only receive the blessings of this hon. member, but also the support of his successor, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall). But as I stated, we did have a problem with this design. On this beautiful shade of Tory blue should we place the head of a hippopotamus or should we be up to date and use the head of one of our all-Canadian province of Ontario genuine moose? Now this was a very difficult decision, but we finally decided to get reaction on a particular design. So I submit this design for your approval.

However, with due respect to the large majority in this House who are tinted with the shade of Tory blue, we have proceeded further and arranged for one more design advance. No doubt in their travels across the breadth of our province, the hon. members in the House as well as the citizens of our fair province, are aware of all the symbols depicting our provincial flower. Of course, I am referring to our many highway contract signs which permanently dot short stretches of antiquated highways that are being brought up to standards of the mid-20th century. I submit this design for your consideration, but I do seek some direction. Should we place on the flag the name of the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton)?

In all seriousness, I would like to introduce into this House a proposal that a truly representative committee of this House be formed to study the feasibility of developing a distinctive province of Ontario flag. During the calendar year 1963 the two major producers of flags manufacturing in our province produced and sold thousands of Red Ensigns and Union Jacks of all sizes; and at the same time hundreds of flags of la belle province to the east were produced and sold in eastern Canada. Think of the possibilities for our own provincial flag.

I have no figures as to how many flag poles are now in existence, but if we had our own distinctive provincial flag it would almost invariably mean a duplication of existing poles as I am sure citizens would be proud to fly our flag, along with the flag of our nation. Just think of the hundreds of flags and flag poles our Department of Public Works could purchase and erect on the many provincial buildings and institutions in our province. These are obvious manufacturing opportunities for the many textile, printing and fabricating plants; and further the possibilities of retail sales are unlimited. Not only will our own citizens purchase these flags with pride—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): More sales tax!

Mr. Paterson: —but many thousands will be taken back to homes and communities by visitors to our fair province. The enthusiasm of the symbol of our own flag could generate a new breed of Ontario residents, more energetic and more resourceful in their outlook, and instil vigour to the economy of our province that is sometimes lacking.

It has been a pleasure to me as a representative of the people of Essex South to advance a symbol that could mean so much to the pride and prosperity of our great province.

Mr. J. C. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address this assembly for the first time I feel that I must share with you and my hon. colleagues the feelings and emotions of a young man who suddenly realizes that he has crossed the first obstacle in his public life and has achieved a lifelong ambition.

Mr. Speaker, it seems that I have prepared for this maiden speech for years and yet when the moment arrives I must summarize for delivery in a few minutes, the hopes, ideals, aspirations, fears and ambitions of youth and one is faced with the cold fact that suddenly the opportunity to change the whole world is here. It would be presumptuous to expect that one's hopes and ideals will all materialize in this House, but after two weeks I have realized that it will be a pleasure to try and already, Mr. Speaker, I am telling my people back home that I am working with a charming lady and a great bunch of guys. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I always feel this way about all the hon. members in this assembly. I imagine that it is not by pure coincidence that we, the more junior members of this assembly, are seated together in these back benches. To the senior members I say that we appreciate your guidance and advice, and we thank you for making us feel at home.

(Mr. Speaker resumes the chair.)

Mr. Speaker, you have brought great honour to your people of Ottawa West by your appointment and I am sure that their respect and admiration continues to grow as you gradually approach the status of a master in the art of co-ordinating the oratory of 108 persons.

Mr. Speaker, I am constantly reminded of the debt of gratitude that I owe to the people of the Nickel Belt for electing me to this assembly. This has been my lifelong ambition and I want to assure them that I will give them the best years of my life and that I hope to live up to their expectations. Their expectations are great because my riding is truly the treasure chest of this province. I will not take up the valuable time of the hon.

members by describing the boundaries of the great Nickel Belt and enumerating its resources. Suffice it to say that my people live in the Texas of Ontario. From mining to lumbering, tourism and agriculture the Nickel Belt is really a giant, geographically and otherwise. The needs of the riding are great—these needs are commensurate with the contribution that my people have made and continue to make to the economy of this great province.

Mr. Speaker, in reviewing the political history of my riding I find that I will have to excel if I wish to keep up with the kind of representation we have had in the past half century. In my travels throughout the riding I am told of the great men who have preceded me. The older residents of my riding cite to me as examples these great public servants, Charles McRae and Welland Gemmell, who both served their province as Minister of Mines. The one who represented the Nickel Belt from 1955 until last year, a very close and dear friend of mine, was appointed to the Canadian Senate last March, 1963.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that all the hon. members who knew and admired the hon. Senator Belisle as a member of this assembly will continue to give his young successor the same co-operation and understanding, even though the temperament of the new member does not always reflect the wisdom and the expert approach of the master.

Mr. Speaker, I listened the other day to my first Speech from the Throne. I was impressed. Reference was made to the federal-provincial conference and to the determination that this province has to continue to lead the way as the province of opportunity and to continue to be an example of moderation and fair play to the other provinces. My grandparents were born in the province of Quebec and today I am not prepared to forget my ancestry and racial origin. This is why in my short life I have always regarded the people of Quebec as brothers. This, Mr. Speaker, is why I have always taken pride in the fact that we in Ontario have done business with our brothers—in my riding we send to Pierreville, Quebec, for our fire engines. We have invested millions of dollars in the purchase of lumbering equipment from Forano Limitée, one of the companies affiliated to the Société-Générale de Financement, the Quebec Crown corporation. Some of our best contractors have their head offices in la belle province.

I am sure that the statements made in Montreal recently by the hon. Mr. Levesque do not reflect the general policies and the attitude of the Quebec government. This province has been fair to the other provinces and especially to Quebec. As a third-generation Ontarian of French origin I make appeal to my Quebec compatriots to be more reserved and sober in their attempts to become "maître chez-soi." Confederation is at stake.

In the field of economic expansion this province is again at the forefront. This progress is largely the result of the positive and aggressive attitude adopted by the former Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay). To the new hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Randall) I wish success. He is a true "organization man" and his experience in the field of industrial organization and management will inject a new life in this department.

I suggest to the hon. Minister that one of the weak points in his campaign to bring to Ontario greater economic development and prosperity, is the lack of interest on the part of municipalities in certain parts of Ontario in the field of industrial promotion. Our regional development groups are not doing the job they should and one must realize that the province can only do part of this job. Much is left to the initiative of the municipalities. There must be a way, Mr. Speaker, to obtain greater participation of our municipalities in the field of industrial development. If not, I believe the province should review its contribution in the field of regional development.

Mr. Speaker, the people of my riding welcome the establishment of a new Department of University Affairs. I am happy to report that Laurentian University, this great experiment in the field of university organization, is a success. The construction programme is well under way and the three federated universities—Sudbury, Huntington and Thornloe—have already contributed largely to the academic and cultural progress of northern Ontario. Public response to the establishment of the extension department has been tremendous. We are grateful for the role that this government has played in the establishment of this unique institution. Former Premier Frost and his enterprising young successor (Mr. Roberts) will be remembered as the pioneers of a new era in the field of education in this country. The new Department of University Affairs is a bold example of the importance given by this government to the education of its people.

Mr. Speaker, we have the hon. Minister from Peel (Mr. Davis), who in spite of his youth, has already demonstrated that the great Corneille was right in saying, "A toute âme bien née, la valeur n'attend pas le nombre des années."

Mr. Speaker, the future generations will be grateful to these men; and I must mention also the religious leaders of our community who have contributed so unselfishly of their talents and energy to the first chapter of success of Laurentian and its federated universities.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I make special mention of the contribution made by my predecessor, Senator Belisle, to the establishment of Laurentian. This contribution continues: appointed to the board of regents in May, in September the hon. Senator accepted the new task of chairman of the board of regents of Sudbury University.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome the expansion of The Department of Energy and Resources Management. The conservation authorities branch is now where it belongs, and I speak as one of the founders and the first secretary-treasurers of the Whitson Valley Conservation Authority.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) made a very sensible statement the other day when he said that the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) had his work cut out for him. He sure has, and I know he will succeed and I know that his job will be made somewhat easier by the fact that he will inherit from The Department of Lands and Forests some of the most competent men in this country in the field of conservation and hydrology. I refer of course to my very good and close friends at the conservation authorities branch, and I know that the hon. Minister from St. Patrick (Mr. Roberts) and the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Pittock) will agree with me.

Mr. Speaker, the conservation authorities have done more in Ontario than to manage some of our natural assets. They have done more than supervise conservation and flood control. They have brought together a number of municipalities whose geographical and physical position was such that only a collective programme could produce results. In many instances the conservation authorities have been the vehicle of better co-operation and understanding between the municipalities of the same valley or watershed.

Mr. Speaker, the OWRC is now where it belongs. There is a commission, Mr. Speaker, that is now being studied and copied by several Canadian provinces and American states. Not that we have achieved perfection. I could name many points where the OWRC could streamline its operations and I have brought these suggestions to the attention of the hon. members for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) and Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Wisheart); and I must say that they have almost convinced me that I am again trying to change the world. But I am not quite convinced.

We must have, Mr. Speaker, better co-ordination between OWRC, the municipalities of Ontario, the OMB, the consulting engineers, and The Department of Municipal Affairs.

While I am on the subject of OWRC, Mr. Speaker, I want to pay tribute quickly to a man who gave this province its present status as one of the leading jurisdictions in the field of water resources and pollution control—an authority in his field, the greatest authority I am told on this continent and perhaps in the world on sanitary engineering, a sound administrator and a charming personality.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that this government will never forget the contribution made by Dr. Albert E. Berry. And let us not forget the part played by the first commissioners of the commission, from our great hon. Prime Minister to Dr. Vance and the affable hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton).

Mr. Speaker, the labour people in my riding welcome the announcement that measures to simplify and speed up proceedings under The Labour Relations Act will be undertaken. There has been unrest in the ranks of labour in my riding over the past three years. Still today there is friction and unrest. It has not been easy for this government to deal with the two groups and I do not suppose it will be over the next years.

However, let us never forget that we are not working for one union or another, whatever its name may be. We are working for the members of these labour unions who are the hon. members' neighbours and mine. We are working for the betterment of their conditions of work, salaries and fringe benefits, their standard of living and the future and welfare of their families.

The Ontario Foundation on Automation and Employment must start working immediately.

Mr. Speaker, the workers in the mining industry in my riding suffered the consequences of two lay-offs in 1962 and again in 1963. I was already elected when the Falconbridge lay-off hit our district. I attended at meetings with the workers and their families, accompanied them on a delegation to Queen's Park, but the lay-off could not be averted in spite of the very sincere efforts on the part of labour-management and the government. Frankly, how can these lay-offs be averted unless there is a better and deeper sincere understanding between labour and management?

Mr. Speaker, I was extremely pleased to listen to the statements made a few moments ago by the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope). I can very well imagine that my people back home share my feelings at this moment.

I want to thank the hon. Minister for making this announcement to the House and I want to express my appreciation to him on behalf of the people of my riding for the representation which he has made over the past several months to the International Nickel Company of Canada and Falconbridge Nickel Mines in his efforts to avert these lay-offs.

It is my sincere hope, Mr. Speaker, that the International Nickel Company will, when all their own men have been rehired, give serious consideration to the hiring of the 530 employees who were laid off last October by Falconbridge Nickel Mines.

Again, Mr. Speaker, prosperity returns to the people of my riding.

Mr. Speaker, these may be the dreams of a young man making his maiden speech, but it is my very sincere hope that some day there will be a sincere and honest attempt by labour and management to avert lay-offs, to give men real job security. Why meet management after the lay-off is announced and the payroll is ready for distribution? Will we ever see the day when free enterprise will be accepted by labour and vice versa?

One of Canada's largest utilities has promoted excellent employee relations by offering stock to its employees at a reduced cost. Have you ever imagined the effect on labour-management relations if a majority of the employees were encouraged to invest even their modest savings in common stock of the employer?

Mr. Speaker, much has been accomplished by this government in the field of labour. The proposed legislation to speed up conciliation and arbitration procedures will be welcomed by the people of my riding.

Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on his choice of Ministers. Some two months ago the hon. young man from Leeds (Mr. Auld) paid his first visit to my riding. He came as the guest of the Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters' Association. My people liked him, he made a hit. I must say that the tourist outfitters in my riding are not amateurs, they rank with the best. The secretary-manager of the association, Mr. Bob Giles, and some of the directors, operate in one of the most prosperous tourist areas in the north, the French River region. I hope that the hon. Ministers and the government will continue to listen to Mr. Giles and to his association. These people know the tourist industry well.

Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear that The Department of Reform Institutions is expanding its academic and vocational training programme as well as its rehabilitation work. I welcome these improvements and I know that the staff at the industrial farm, Burwash, will find a new purpose in their work when these changes have been implemented.

Mr. Speaker, I have already commented on the formation of The Department of University Affairs. At the secondary education level I have one criticism to make. Several municipalities in my riding took advantage of the federal-provincial scheme for the construction of vocational schools. We are grateful; but I would ask the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) to give consideration, as he promised us last month, to the plea of the smaller, isolated community that did not qualify for these special grants.

They are placed in a severe financial position because of mere circumstances, and I refer more particularly to the towns of Capreol and Chappleau. In my humble opinion special consideration should be given to those municipalities which did not qualify for the millions spent on capital costs.

I feel that it is the duty of our friends in Ottawa to contribute in the same proportions as in the past.

The foundation tax plan is a further step towards the greater equalization of grants to our public and separate schools.

Mr. Speaker, we welcome the introduction of free school books in Grades 9 and 10. We welcome the establishment of the bilingual teachers' college in Sudbury.

The people of Foleyet and Gogama have very special problems in the field of secondary education. These two communities are somewhat isolated and it would be economically unfeasible for the province to establish high schools in that area. It is, therefore, becoming increasingly difficult for the parents to provide secondary education for their children. They have to spend enormous sums each year to pay tuition and boarding fees as well as transportation costs for their children, who must obtain their high school education in centres such as North Bay and Sudbury.

I have met brilliant students whose parents are simply not in a financial position to give them a high school education. Ironically bursaries and loans are available to these children when they reach the university level. I urge the hon. Minister of Education to give serious consideration to this problem even if we have to pay special grants to the parents of these children.

You will say that these people choose to live in these isolated areas. Mr. Speaker, the parents of these children are employed by the province of Ontario in many instances, and if not they work for one of the railway companies. They are not there always by choice but mostly through necessity.

It is my hope that the select committees on youth and the aged will get down to work very shortly to review the needs of the last and the future generations.

In the field of social welfare I can only suggest that we implement as soon as possible the recommendations of the Northern Ontario Children's Aid Societies. As a former director of the Sudbury society and a municipal welfare administrator, I know that the northern societies have special problems that must be solved soon. I have studied the brief submitted to the hon. Minister of Public Welfare's (Mr. Cecile's) committee and I fail to see why it could not be adopted in its entirety.

In the field of health, we have made great progress in my district in the past decades, but we sadly lack facilities for the care of the chronically ill, and we need our own hospital for retarded children.

I appeal to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), Mr. Speaker. Nobody is convinced—including those who have dedicated themselves to help the mentally retarded child—nobody is convinced that the North Bay Ontario Hospital can be converted into a hospital for retarded children. This hospital is needed in the north and it should be built in the town of Capreol.

Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to receive the final report of the select committee on municipal legislation. I hope that the committee in its report will recommend legislation to permit municipalities to appoint municipal managers. We have always taken for granted in this province the contribution made over the years by the appointed officials and especially the clerk or clerk-treasurer.

I am not saying this, Mr. Speaker, because I have been one of them for the past nine years. I have found in my short life that the role played in local government by the administrative officials is of great importance. These people have been the backbone of local government in this province. The municipal clerk-treasurer is the chief executive and administrative officer of most municipal corporations. His responsibilities have reached proportions far beyond what this assembly has seen fit to include in the municipal and other related Acts. You will tell me, Mr. Speaker, that local government must retain its autonomy. I agree; but at the same time we must realize that the municipalities owe their very existence to this province.

Mr. Speaker, we passed legislation last year to allow municipalities the right—without the necessity of private legislation—to establish pension plans for their employees. The fact of the matter is that municipalities will not and should not be expected to seek special legislation to carry out such things.

Mr. Speaker, local government in Ontario is facing new challenges. We must help our municipalities to meet the needs for services and we must first of all initiate a training programme for our appointed and elected municipal officials. We have accomplished more towards this end in the past 10 years than in the previous 50 years. The introduction of the assessors' course and the clerks' and finance officers' courses at Queen's University marked a milestone for local government in this province.

Under the leadership of the hon. Minister from Cochrane South (Mr. Spooner), The Department of Municipal Affairs has taken on a new life. Members of his staff were telling me recently that they have found a new purpose, a new meaning in their work. The hon. Minister, I am told, makes frequent visits to his regional offices despite his numerous obligations in this city. There, Mr. Speaker, we have a great man from the north, a true servant of local government, both as an elected and appointed official.

The hon. Minister can be proud of his assessment branch. In 1960, the mining section of this branch was established. Three men are now exclusively assigned to the assessment problems of the municipalities. The new manual of assessment values will be a major step in the province's attempts to clarify, simplify and equalize assessment values in Ontario.

I imagine, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. members in this assembly are pretty tired of listening to the members from the north asking for higher mining grants. I have some sad news for them—it will get worse before it gets better.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Demers: I will make no attempt to advise the association of mining municipalities regarding the submission they are preparing for the Smith commission on taxation. The hon. Minister and I know that the people who founded this association and who have promoted over the years, are municipal experts. They will produce the data, the statistics and the facts.

Nor am I going, Mr. Speaker, to try to influence the members of the Smith commission. I will only say, Mr. Speaker, that when the submission of the association of mining municipalities is made, we here in this assembly, we the collectors of mines profit tax, we had better listen and we had better listen carefully.

Mr. Speaker, it is so difficult, it seems, to explain to our hon. colleagues from the south that we in northern Ontario have no statutory or other right to assess and tax mining properties, plants and equipment. In other words, we have no right to tax our primary industry, and there are good reasons why we should not be allowed to assess and tax these properties—and I am not suggesting that we should tax them. And I must make very clear to all my hon. friends that we receive something in compensation for being denied the right to levy our own municipal taxes against the mining industry.

Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs I am going to suggest to either the municipal or the mining committee of this House that all the members be invited to a special session where experts will give us a briefing on the provisions of The Mines Profit Tax and the regulations as they apply to the payment of mining grants designated to municipalities. I know that I would learn a great deal from such a session and I am sure that my hon. colleagues from southern ridings will come out with a better understanding of the financial problems of the northern municipalities.

Give us a chance to explain our situation. I know that all the hon. members have problems in their own constituencies, that it is not always easy to forget these problems for a few hours and to think of the others. But I am telling them now that we in northern Ontario have special problems demanding special solutions and these solutions must be accepted by all the hon. members of this assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of representing here the best one-third of the city of Sudbury. I hope that my good friend the hon. member who represents the other two-thirds (Mr. Sopha) will permit me to say this. I am proud to be the spokesman in this assembly for this one-third of this great metropolis of some 80,000 inhabitants—the capital of the north.

Mr. Speaker, the amalgamation of the Greater Sudbury area has brought about great problems—problems brought about by an explosion in the population, unfavourable soil conditions and climate. Again, I will not attempt to produce statistics. A special committee to study the current and long term financial needs of the city has been established under the leadership of an aggressive young chartered accountant, Louis Desmarais. Again I say to my hon. colleagues, and especially to the hon. members of the Cabinet, let us listen to them.

In my home town of Chelmsford and throughout the valley, we have many problems, and again they are related to local government. We have over 15 satellite municipalities in the valley and suburban Sudbury. I imagine that some day some of these municipalities will have to merge, for the sake of economy and efficiency. But for the time being, while we prepare for these great changes, could we not encourage our municipalities to merge some of their services?

Already in my riding three municipalities have reached agreements to provide for mutual aid by their fire departments. It is my dream that some day several of our towns and townships will join forces to establish a police department similar to what you have in the metropolitan areas. I believe that this merger would result in more adequate policing at a lower cost to each municipality.

Mr. Speaker, Judge McDonald recently recommended that municipalities be not allowed to employ security guards to police municipalities. I hope that this recommendation will not be implemented, especially in northern Ontario. In my riding the mining companies have a good working arrangement with the municipalities for police protection. For the sake of economy and efficiency we cannot accept this recommendation.

I think it is our duty in this House to provide our municipalities with the legislation and the advice and encouragement that they require, in order to achieve their objectives. Let us make this and other legislation permissive. But let us provide them with the vehicles they require in order for them to give to their citizens the best possible value for their tax dollar.

Let us broaden the base of our local government institutions in Ontario and I am sure that our councils will respond and take on new initiative. Let us be more imaginative; we have modernized our structure of government at the provincial level—let us hope that the select committee will come out with some modern suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, the farming community of my riding is pleased with the present government policy regarding junior farm loans—ARDA programmes, and so on, and the many services available through The Department of Agriculture. But to the marginal farmer of the north these programmes and schemes are secondary in importance. I believe that our farmer is in greater need of incentives, advice and markets. May I suggest to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) that a study of markets be intensified and that the information be passed on to interested farmers in monthly bulletins—something similar to the excellent publication which is published by The Department of Economics and Development, and sent out to the province's manufacturers?

Mr. Speaker, the people of my riding welcome the announcement that a select committee will be appointed to inquire into the exploration, discovery and development of our mineral resources. The establishment of an office in Sudbury for a resident geologist has been a further recognition of our riding as a mining centre of major importance.

Mr. Speaker, the northern part of Nickel Belt is one of the most important—if not the most important—lumbering centre of the province. Lumbering is the major industry in the town of Chapleau. My people in that area have problems, and my friends from the south will be amazed as I enumerate them. Firstly, Mr. Speaker, the lines of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario do not yet serve this area. Chapleau, a town of 5,000, has very inadequate and expensive power. I was pleased to hear the other day from the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer) that by September, 1965, his commission hopes to reach Chapleau with a 115-kv line from Hollingsworth Falls at Wawa, but this will only be made possible if the hon. Minister from Huron (Mr. MacNaughton) has completed the road from Wawa to Chapleau. This, Mr. Speaker, is an example of the type of frontiers we are still opening in my riding.

The economic prospects of the area? you will ask. Before I started my speech today, I had delivered to the desk of each hon. member of the Cabinet a complete report on the economic prospects of Chapleau and district. This report was prepared a few days ago by the self-appointed industrial commissioner from Chapleau. This great civic-minded citizen is Mr. A. J. Grout. The hon. Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld) tells me that he received his copy sometime last week and that he has already read it. It goes to show you, Mr. Speaker, that our men are not asleep at the controls. I know that you will study this report and that you will pass it along to your senior officials so that when the member for Nickel Belt speaks in glowing terms of the Chapleau area you will know where to find the facts.

Mr. Speaker, when the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) visits the Chapleau districts early in May he will see for himself the tremendous potentials of the lumber industry in this province. But there are problems. My people tell me that we must improve our present methods for harvesting timber. We are not making the best use of our forests. There is a great deal of over-mature timber in the area, especially in the jack pine species. Timber is no different from any other crop; it must be harvested at maturity. Much timber is being wasted by letting it over-mature. But I am told also that great strides have been made over the years toward better utilization of our forest products. In Chapleau we are no longer wasting the chips, slabs, trim-ends, and so on. Each year thousands of tons of chips are sold to the pulp companies for the production of paper.

Mr. Speaker, I say let us revitalize our reforestation programme in Ontario. Let us draw up a master-plan of our forest resources and plan for the scientific developments of tomorrow. Let us harvest our mature stands first. Let us tighten regulations for sawmill licences. Let us assist our lumber operators in the construction of main access roads as we do for the mining industry, and wherever possible let us open up these roads to the tourist people.

Mr. Speaker, we are especially grateful in Nickel Belt for the development by The Department of Lands and Forests of many provincial parks, the most important being Windy Lake Park, Ivanhoe Lake Park and Fairbanks Lake Park. Ivanhoe Park, in my opinion, will become an international tourist attraction, probably under one condition—that the hon. member for Muskoka, in co-operation with the hon. Minister from Cochrane South convince certain people here that it would be economically sound and desirable to push the hydro line another 70 miles to Foleyet.

Mr. Speaker, we spent millions of dollars decades ago to promote rural electrification. Is it a sin to look at such a project with a dim view? What's wrong, I say, with a capital expenditure of even $500,000 to bring hydro to Foleyet—and the HEPC asks my poor people up there to prepay some $150,000 toward these costs. I ask the hon. members from the rural constituencies: Would you go for a deal like this? Neither will I!

Mr. Speaker, the Sudbury-Timmins highway is being built. Brushing of some 24 miles has started at the north end near the hon. Minister from Cochrane South's riding and construction at our end on eight miles from Levack to Cortier is underway. Construction of this road must continue at an accelerated pace. This will require some very special scheduling and the constant attention of the hon. Minister from Huron and the member for Nickel Belt. I pledge myself to assist him in keeping a watchful eye over the progress of construction on this road.

Mr. Speaker, the name of the hon. Minister of Highways will go down in history as the one who actually commenced the Sudbury-Timmins highway, and that, Mr. Speaker, is an accomplishment.

Naturally, it is understandable that all the municipalities of my riding wanted to see this highway go through their community. This was physically impossible but I understand the feelings of the people of the east end of the valley and especially of Capreol, and I hereby pledge myself to work twice as hard for the people of the east end and Capreol. I hereby pledge myself to work for a link between the chosen Berry route and Capreol.

The hon. Minister of Highways and I discussed this again this morning, Mr. Speaker, and he was most encouraging. A fine fellow, the hon. Minister from Huron. We discussed the possibility of entering into an industrial-road agreement with the lumbering industry in order to make this link possible. We are going to see the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests and show him where his department can open up tremendous fishing and hunting grounds between Capreol and the Berry route. We are going to show him the best way for him to tap these resources. To help the hon. Minister from Leeds to reduce his deficit in the tourist industry, is to help the hon. Minister of Highways with the construction of this link.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Keep at it.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): You are going to be overwhelmed with help.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Wait until two or three years from now and he has to come back and repeat the same thing.

Mr. Demers: The hon. Minister and I have already made arrangement for a helicopter reconnaissance flight over the route of the proposed link and things look good. But, first things first; let us make good progress on the Timmins highway before we build the link.

Monsieur l'Orateur, permettez-moi d'exprimer en ma langue maternelle mes sentiments les plus sincères à l'égard de notre Premier Ministre et du gouvernement. A la veille du centenaire de la Confédération, les Ontariens d'origine française peuvent être fiers de l'exemple que les chefs de ce gouvernement donnent aux autres provinces, en ce qui concerne le respect des minorités et leur respect pour la deuxième langue de ce pays.

J'espère, Monsieur l'Orateur, que tous les membres de cette assemblée nous honoreront de leur visite au cours de l'été, lors de la tournée annuelle du nord Ontarien. Je les invite bien cordialement, mais surtout au nom de la population d'origine française de ma circonscription—un groupe si hospitalité.

Mr. Speaker, forgive me for taking so much of the hon. members' time.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Not at all.

Mr. Demers: In closing I say to all the hon. members: Look to the north! Give the north a chance to explain its problems.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that if we continue to follow the policies and to adhere to the ideals of the hon. member for London North (Mr. Robarts), this province will continue to have good government.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I am sure he likes the hon. member, too.

Mr. Bryden: Who is the hon. member for London North?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, tomorrow I would like to go into committee on the bills that have received second reading and come back from the standing committees of the House. Then we will resume the Throne Speech debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.55 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the west gallery students from St. Theresa Separate School, New Toronto and St. Clare's Girls Separate School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. Evans, from the standing committee on labour, legal and municipal bills, presented the committee's second report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill No. 3, The Industrial Safety Act, 1964.

Bill No. 5, An Act to amend The Industrial Standards Act.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I make a statement which I believe to be of importance to the people of Ontario and certainly to the hon. members of this assembly? At the noon hour I received a telegram from His Honour Judge C. E. Bennett, who is chairman of the special committee, appointed with two others, Mr. Harry Simon and Mr. Robert V. Hicks, with statutory powers to consider certain questions in the field of compulsory arbitration and with particular reference to the situation and the dispute as it exists at the Trenton Memorial Hospital.

The telegram from the chairman of the commission, Judge Bennett, states that he is pleased to report that the strike at the Trenton Memorial Hospital has been settled. He further states that a collective agreement covering a period of three years, has been signed and that the employees involved in the dispute will return to their employment with the hospital on Monday morning of next week.

It must be apparent, of course, Mr. Speaker, that the solution of this matter has come about through the co-operation of the collective bargaining representatives of the employees and of those representing the employers, namely, the hospital board at the Trenton Memorial Hospital. I can add only this, now that the strike has been resolved, that on behalf of all of the people of Ontario and hon. members of this House, I might express the hope that the parties will treat each other with mutual respect aimed at building up a fine co-operative relationship. I should like, in closing these short remarks, to add a word of compliment to His Honour Judge Bennett and Messrs. Simon and Hicks on their able handling of this most difficult situation.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question I would like to address to the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass). Has the hon. Attorney General or his department been provided by the Metropolitan Toronto Police with information including documents, which might lead to criminal charges under part 3 of the criminal code, against a distillery or any other individual? If so, when was such information received and what action has the hon. Attorney General taken?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no, and therefore the second part of the question cannot be answered.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Attorney General permit a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Cass: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole House.

House in committee; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

THE TRUSTEE ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 12, An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

On section 1:

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, I wonder why, when the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) is amending this, he does not include an action for breach of promise of marriage? I have always thought it unjustified in such a case to pursue a poor man into his grave, to bring an action against his trustee or his executor in respect to breach of promise of marriage. In the days of yore there was a rather celebrated case in this province that went through the courts a couple of times up to the top department at Ottawa about such an action. Since you take out libel and slander I wonder if you might consider taking that one out too, to make it a part of the law that when a person dies after making a promise to a woman, all bets are off.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, I believe that particular area was explored by the committee and the officials who advised me. I have some sympathy with the view expressed by the hon. member for Sudbury, Mr. Chairman, but I think we perhaps might be doing a great injustice to some poor woman. Today, women require or ask for as much protection as they used to have in the days when they did not have their present rights. Mr. Chairman, I would not be prepared to insert that exception at this time.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable pleasure that I rise as the new member for the new urban riding of Scarborough West in this Legislature. I extend my congratulations to you on the acquisition of your office and the manner in which you conduct the affairs of that office. And I extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder of this address—and in particular—to the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop), who spoke during this Throne Speech debate so lucidly and eloquently.

Sir, I have but one subject with which I wish to deal at some little length—in broad terms—the matter of technological change. I cannot pretend to a definitive exposition, but the analysis and speculations offered here are offered in good faith and I trust the hon. members of this House will view them as such.

Mr. Speaker, both George Orwell and Aldous Huxley have managed to write two harrowing predictions of social transformation in decades to come. Initially, both 1984 and Brave New World were classed as macabre science-fiction projections on the anatomy of man. Today they begin to suggest a staggering reality.

Last September this government sponsored a conference on automation and social change. Nineteen renowned international experts spoke on every single aspect of that topic. The Toronto Globe and Mail reported the proceedings as follows:

Visions of mass unemployment of millions of young, idle and aimless people throughout North America, and of a large and growing class of people dispossessed by machines was evoked at the conference. Speakers, almost without exception, painted a grim and foreboding picture of the results of automation ten or 20 years in the future. While it may be expected that society and its new machines will come to terms, the conference revealed that no one in business, labour, government or the universities has yet developed any clear idea of how this accommodation can be achieved.

That word "automation", Mr. Speaker, is singularly contentious. To large numbers of people it means a mere extension of the process of mechanization, a mere continuum, as it were, of the wheel and Watts' steam engine. To others it represents an unwarranted bogey of panic foisted upon an impressionable public. Mr. D. G. Wilmot, president of Anthes Imperial Limited said at the conference, and I am quoting him:

The worry over automation seems to be the same old controversy with a new name. Automation is just a fancy new word for progress.

And the American National Association of Manufacturers agreed with him. Their lyrical refrain goes thus:

Gearred to the smooth effortless workings of automation, the magic carpet of our free economy heads for distant and undreamed horizons. Just going along for the ride will be the biggest thrill on earth.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of available evidence I suggest that nothing could be more absurd. Automation ushers in an era of unprecedented change. Its impact—in significant degree already begun, sir—will be colossal; the implications of that impact are incalculable. It presages a range of economic, social, psychological and human problems which will tax the legislative capacities of this continent and this province to a degree as yet unknown by the democratic process.

Professor Hacker of Cornell University perhaps puts things somewhat strongly when he argues that the discard heap created by the machine may rise to devour its progenitor. But even more sober appraisals sound this startling note. Allow me to demonstrate. Mr. John Diebold, president of management consulting companies which manufacture automated equipment in the United States, in his congressional testimony to a Senate sub-committee put it this way, and I quote:

I believe that automation marks a break with past trends; a qualitative departure from the more conventional advance of technology. It implies a basic change in our attitudes towards the manner of performing work. It is something of a conceptual breakthrough, as revolutionary in its way as Henry Ford's concept to the assembly lines.

Mr. Peter Drucker, chairman of the department of the New York University School of Graduate Studies in Business Administration speaks concisely. He says:

Automation is not gadgeteering. It is not even engineering. It is a new concept of the structure and order of economic life.

Mr. Henry Wriston, president of the American Assembly, which sponsored a conference on automation and technological change in May of 1962, said in his summation, and again I quote:

Automation involves so sharp an acceleration of technological change as virtually to inaugurate a new epoch. Without wise and vigorous foresight in action it can have violently disruptive effects, the consequences of which could be comparable in their fundamental dislocation to the impact of rapid industrialization upon underdeveloped areas of the world.

Mr. Speaker, what is it that prompts such statements fraught with anxiety and foreboding? What is it that prompted the late President Kennedy to classify automation as "the major challenge of the 60s"—which fostered a presidential commission on labour-management policy, which led last year to an entire internal reorganization of The United States Department of Labour, which caused the International Labour Organizations last October to open a world clearing house on automation for an international exchange on information, which suddenly saw established a special British Ministry of Labour manpower unit, which saw Premier Khrushchev isolate automation studies in a speech to the Soviet party conference, which stirred a lead editorial in the New York Times, entitled "Is Man Obsolete?" and which even had such esoteric periodicals as the Journal of Industrial Medicine and Surgery focus a special study on "Automation and the Obsolescence of Man"?

Basically, Mr. Speaker, the motive force behind all of these activities was the limited statistical data already available. The figures are indispensable; they document an inexorable trend.

In the United States, between 1953 and 1960, 500,000 more cars were produced—there were 172,000 fewer jobs. Since 1960, introduction of automatic elevators in New York City has resulted in a drop of 40,000 jobs. Between 1955 and 1962 the chemical industry productivity went up 27 per cent; employment went down three per cent. Between 1955 and 1962, steel productivity went up 20 per cent; employment went down 77,000. Ewan Clague, U.S. Commissioner of Labour Statistics, said that between 1953 and 1963 in the United States two million blue-collared jobs were lost in manufacturing, mining and construction.

In Canada, between 1949 and 1959, motor vehicle production went up 50 per cent and employment only 11 per cent. Electrical productivity went up 82 per cent, employment only 40 per cent. Household appliances went up 54 per cent, employment only 19 per cent. In all manufacturing industries across Canada between 1957 and 1962, there was a rise of 44 per cent; employment actually dropped!

In Ontario, according to the film made of the automation conference—a film entitled, appropriately enough, "Are People Necessary?"—some 800,000 jobs have vanished in the last 15 years.

Mr. Speaker, in this kind of assemblage, it is perhaps unnecessary to overdramatize the fantastic processes which underly these statistics. Nonetheless, one or two illustrations might be given.

One factory in the United States now produces one billion light bulbs a year in a continuous flow process. Another, curiously enough, produces 384,000 pretzels—tied—in an eight-hour day. The $28.5 million Sarnia petro-chemical plant runs on shifts of ten workers. The Esso refinery in the United Kingdom pumps five-and-a-half million gallons a day with a six-worker shift. And the famous Detroit automation process which produces six-cylinder engines from rough castings, is described as follows:

Altogether 42 automatic machines, linked together by transfer devices that automatically move the blocks to the complete process, perform 530 precision operations and hand borings. A rough casting goes through the line and emerges as a finished engine block in just 14.6 minutes, as against nine hours in a conventional plant. From the start to finish along the 1,545-foot line, no operator touches a part. "I don't do nothing but press these two buttons," the operator of a broaching machine on an automated Ford line at Dearborn remarked. "Sometimes I use my thumbs, sometimes I use my wrists and sometimes I lay my whole arm across. The only time I sweat on the job any more is when it is over 100° F. outside.

The vice-president in charge of production at Ford, took Walter Reuther through that plant some little time ago, and as he gloriously showed the array of automatic machines and technology, he said to Reuther: "Have you got problems! How are you going to organize a union out of them?" Reuther turned to him and said: "That's not the problem—how are you going to sell them cars?"

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that for the first time it is possible to produce an entire automobile—from steering wheel to internal lights—without a single human hand touching the process.

Mr. Speaker, this combination of drama and data has led to the following predictions, and I put them before the House.

The late President Kennedy predicted that technological displacement would shortly mean 25,000 jobs a week—over 1,000,000 jobs a year. Secretary of Labour, Willard Wirtz, suggests 35,000 jobs a week—over 1,500,000 jobs a year. John Snyder, president of U.S. Industries, suggests 40,000 jobs a week, or over two million jobs a year. And Senator Randolph of West Virginia, sitting in on Senate labour committee meetings, came to the conclusion that automation means 80,000 jobs a week displaced—over four million jobs a year. Whatever the figure, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it is sufficiently staggering as to be almost beyond comprehension.

Alas, no such statistics are available in Canada, or in Ontario. Again and again the federal Senate's special committee on manpower and employment deplored the serious lack of research studies in the field of automation.

We approach perhaps the most crucial economic challenge in the nation's history, only to find ourselves groping in the dark. That is why, in any presentation of this kind, it is necessary to lean heavily on the country with embryonic statistics available. Nonetheless, even the most tentative application of American figures to Ontario—the most industrialized province in this country—confirms the magnitude of the problems that lie ahead.

Perhaps at this point, Mr. Speaker, I might be allowed to a small digression. Undoubtedly, in order to be fair, it is necessary to point out that the American situation has been seriously aggravated by a rate of unemployment somewhat in excess of our own. There is no question but that the unemployment and economic growth rate percentages strongly—perhaps decisively—influence the overall effects of automation. Needless to say, fiscal and monetary policies are crucial. However, in this context, it is worth remembering a little recent history.

Throughout the last five or six years, Canada's growth rate has hovered around the unhappy figure of three per cent per annum.

It rose to double that in 1962, it dropped somewhat in 1963 and, according to the National Industrial Conference board in its Canadian economic forecast just last November, our economic growth rate would fall again to 3.1 per cent in 1964. The present boomlet is primarily based on export policy, and that is a precarious base or source for economic resilience.

Further, our Canadian unemployment situation, as every hon. member here knows well, has oscillated from that which could be described as grim to that which is totally unacceptable. It averaged over the last several years somewhere in excess of six per cent per year.

Moreover, sir, as the Senate committee on manpower took pains to emphasize, and I quote:

In each successive recession the percentage of people out of work has been higher than in the preceding recession.

In sum, Mr. Speaker, our economic circumstances cannot be described either as settled or auspicious when applied to the automatic challenges of the coming decade.

Now, let me return to the main theme. Given the facts and figures as outlined, there is room to wonder why the automation distress signals took so long to penetrate the body politic. After all, it is not until now in the middle of the 1960's that the cry of crisis has been vigorously uttered. The answer lies, I think, in the sanguine, but seemingly reasonable, assumption that displaced blue-collar workers would shift into white-collar jobs; that the vastly burgeoning service industries would absorb the slack. Now, Mr. Speaker, at precisely the point when that transference was to take place, and the national economy to be consolidated thereby, a quite fantastic variable entered upon the scene, throwing every prognostication into disarray.

What was that variable?

Recently the CBC television series "Document" did an hour-long programme dealing with matters of urgent public concern. It was entitled, "The Quiet Takeover." It began with a young woman seeking a husband the scientific way. After she had responded to a series of questions relating to religious preference, previous affairs, intellectual inclinations, social disposition, viewpoints on pre-marital and extra-marital relations, the narrator broke in as follows, and I quote:

She has turned her psyche over to a mating psychologist and for $250 he will put her in touch with half-a-dozen eligible men. By personality test and depth interview he reduces her to a punch card. Then he runs her through an electronic sorting machine. It matches her personality to suitable men.

To rely on some psychological and personality pigeon-holing is only one sign of the direction in which science and technology are taking us at a breakneck speed. We are on the threshold of a new era which we shall build on the exotic sciences like cybernetics. We do not have a name for the age we shall enter but we already have its symbol and variable—the computer. Then the narrator said as follows:

The computer is not an evil genius. It has so far neither character nor sex, but it is our indispensable tool for collecting, sorting and disseminating information. It can make calculations in a micro-second, it can store encyclopaedias of information on a roll of tape. Unlike most of us it has instant and total recall, its presence is pervasive and its rate of growth is geometric. The quiet takeover has already begun.

Mr. Speaker, electronic and digital computers which as late as 1956 were virtually unknown in Canada and the United States, have now achieved the dubious status of mythology. The crux of the matter lies in the unexpected—and frankly somewhat frightening—twist of the scientific revolution. It is one thing to see mechanization gradually automated; it is a totally different thing when the hitherto untouched preserves of human memory and human judgment are usurped by a machine technology. Scientists call it cybernetics. And so cybernation compounds automation in this incredible age in which we live.

Let me not belabour the point; the pattern can be quickly delineated. Computers have now reached the threshold of composing music, of reading, of acting in response to voice commands, of re-programming themselves—and of translating—indeed so effectively that, for an analysis of Thomas Aquinas, the Pope awarded IBM the Grand Cross of the Equestrian Order of St. Sylvester! Computers in our federal Department of Health and Welfare process more than three million family allowance cheques monthly, employing 286 man-hours in place of over 15,000, two clerks in place of 120. Lord Halsbury, the former head of the British National Research Development Board, estimates that an average computer equals 100 clerks working at 100 per cent efficiency through every year. A rule-of-thumb estimate is that, for every $5,000 of automated equipment, one new clerk is displaced. The United States census bureau in 1960 used 50 statisticians to do the job of 4,100 in 1950.

Mrs. Ida Hoos, in a study of office computer automation for the Harvard Business Review, found that for every five jobs eliminated, only one was created under such automation. A computer law clerk—I commend this to the lawyers in the House—demonstrated recently to the American Bar Association, did seven man-hours of research in less than 10 minutes. It analyzed 400 laws from 50 states and typed out full statistics and case citations:

By 1970, AT&T expects its revenue from long-distance communication between machines to rise to exceed its revenue derived from city-to-city calls placed by humans. The Radio Corporation of America has a computer under design to take voice translation and typing with a degree of efficiency and cost sufficient to jeopardize the jobs of 1,500,000 stenographers and typists on this continent.

Throughout the United States and in Canada, data processing centres and co-operative computer services are offering low-cost service to every conceivable commercial interest. Macy's in New York is presently trying out an electronic salesgirl. The machine dispenses 36 different items in ten separate styles and sizes: it accepts one and five dollar bills, hands back the change, and rejects counterfeit money.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in both a serious and seemingly frivolous vein one could recite endlessly these commentaries on future employment prospects in the service industries. I trust the point has been made.

And so it is that automation in the broadest sense poses seemingly insuperable problems within the next very few years, not only for the army of displaced blue-collar workers and white-collar workers—an ever increasing percentage of the unemployed and soon to be displaced—but even for middle management and junior executive positions whose decision-making capacities are seriously jeopardized by similar computer capacities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in total then, what situation do we have? Given this kind of technological background, what specific situations must be met?

First, what happens to the collective bargaining process? Second, what happens to skill and educational requirements within industry, outside industry, and amongst those displaced by automation? Third, what data must be made available? Fourth, what are the present priorities in Ontario? Fifth, what happens to the content of work under automation? Sixth, what of leisure time? And finally, what becomes the role of government? I would like to deal briefly with these areas.

First then, the collective bargaining process. A veritable revolution is under way. Gradually but inevitably a profound shift in emphasis is taking place. While wage demands and fringe benefits remain of paramount importance; longer vacations with pay, severance pay, shorter work week, early retirement, and job security, rise up the bargaining scale. Indeed, they have become cornerstones of recent significant agreements.

The exchange is naturally mutual. In the face of mounting automation unemployment, unions attempt to exact a work guarantee for the present labour force, in return for which management has the right to unimpeded technological change. The desperate struggle is to have the management recognize that the social costs of worker displacement or relocation are as much a charge on the company as depreciated machinery.

Mr. Speaker, a recent agreement between the Southern Pacific Railway and its Brotherhood of Clerks in California, demonstrates the emerging formula. Between 1958 and 1962, 40 per cent of the clerks were let off—fully 4,500 men. At the same time, the volume of traffic increased by 11 per cent. In a new contract a new principle was established. Job elimination must hold to the rate of natural attrition, roughly 5 per cent per year. Further, when a job is abolished, every effort will be made to retrain the worker for another department. Agencies of government will assist on the assumption that they have a public responsibility. If a worker must move he will be compensated for the expense, including any loss on the sale of his home. Any workers actually displaced will receive 70 per cent of income on the first year and 60 per cent of income on the following four years. In return for these contractual features, the company must be free to introduce cost-saving innovations.

In a recent agreement between the West Coast longshoremen and the shipowners, the company agreed to pay $5.5 million a year for five years to compensate for displacement, while the union agreed to an introduction of labour-saving devices. An added feature was an impartial government economist who worked with both parties for a year.

Kaiser Aluminum and the United Steelworkers came to terms whereby all savings resulting from automation would go one-third to the workers and two-thirds to the company.

Here in Canada the 1962 settlement between the railways and the nonoperating employees, provided for a job security fund of one cent per hour provided by the employer as a contribution to the purposes of mitigating automation displacement.

However, Mr. Speaker, the critical pattern and problem with this overall approach is essentially threefold.

1. The overwhelming difficulties of automation cannot be left on the shoulders of labour and management alone for solution. The problems are too complex: the ramifications too far-reaching.

2. Even these marginal measures of workers' security are possible only within organized industry—and large corporate industries to boot. That would not embrace one-quarter of the Canadian work force.

3. Such agreements as those previously cited merely freeze or diminish the size of the present labour force. And one asks, with justice: What happens to the school leavers of this decade and to the generations yet unborn?

Now let me turn to the second implication earlier noted. What are the skill and educational requirements within industry, outside industry and amongst those displaced by automation?

On this subject, Mr. Speaker, there is unanimous opinion. Only degrees of desperation distinguish the experts. The unskilled, the semi-skilled, the uneducated, are doomed in this society.

In Canada, they now assume something under 30 per cent of the work force and are steadily falling. Between 1950 and 1959 in this country, occupational employment grew as follows: Among professional workers by 71 per cent; among skilled workers by 38 per cent; among white-collar workers by 34 per cent; but semi-skilled and unskilled by only 19 per cent. In the primary industries employing traditionally unskilled labour, there was a decline of 27 per cent employment. And unemployment among the 14- to 19-year old age group was double the national average. The former Minister of Economics and Development in this House (Mr. Macaulay) indicated that by 1970 there would be 672,000 young people between the ages of 14 and 19 in the province—45 per cent more than is now the case.

Mr. Speaker, we have reached a critical juncture. Either the youth of this country are given a landslide crash programme to acquire skills prior to or immediately after school drop-out age or we, the legislators, contribute to social disruption.

I was interested to note that Dr. S. H. Deeks, vice-president of administration for the new Brock University, had this to say to a meeting last November 4, and I quote from the Toronto Globe and Mail:

These idle youths, unable to find satisfaction, are in the process of forming a sub-culture of their own. They are turning to crime and delinquency for livelihood as an expression of rebellion, among other things; rebellion against the society that has rendered them redundant.

The argument, it seems to me, could not be better put. But, of course, the argument extends much further. There is an equally crying need for constant upgrading of skills within the work force; not to say adult education, vocational training, technical education.

And it has definitely been pointed out time and time again, Mr. Speaker, that to train a man for one job today is to train him for redundancy. Pilot projects show that retraining is a difficult process requiring close supervision and encouragement. I often wonder to myself how easily and extravagantly we use the phrases and how enormously difficult they are of application.

Under an Armour Meat Packing agreement retraining facilities were opened at their Fort Worth plant. Only 117 of 650 people were able to complete retraining. Of those, 91 found jobs; but with an average wage reduced to $1.60 an hour from over $2.50 an hour. Such are the economic realities.

And for the older people: precisely the same pattern. In 1956, at a Packard company plant in Detroit, a shut-down resulted in the layoff of 500 employees. When analysis was made two years later of what had happened to them—50 per cent of them being over the age of 55—it was found that 32 per cent had no employment opportunities whatsoever, and the vast majority of the rest had exhausted their entire unemployment insurance fund. Training, retraining, education—these are the guide posts to economic security.

And that leads, Mr. Speaker, to the third point: what data must there be available on automation? Mr. Arthur Porter, head of the industrial engineering department of the University of Toronto, made a statement at the conference on automation and social change which leaves one frankly incredulous. He asserted that fewer than 300 people in Canada today are studying in depth the economic and social implication of technological change.

He then related the following anecdote and I would like to share it with the House.

Last May, the University of Toronto arranged a symposium intended for senior industrial executives. It was concerned with automation and research, and a panel of speakers, several of whom had international reputations in their respective fields, gave papers. The presidents and senior executives of more than 300 Canadian industrial organizations were invited. After a great deal of persuasion, including personal appeals from the president of the university, we succeeded in attracting 22 people from some ten enlightened business establishments.

Mr. Speaker, this province cries out for some enlightenment on the subject of automation. Rumour has it that a draft bill is ready in The Department of Labour to formally establish the foundation on automation and employment, and I echo the words of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers) yesterday, when he said: "Let us have the foundation and have it now."

The frame of reference for their research knows no bounds. Listed in the federal Senate committee on manpower, and in the provincial select committee on manpower, and in congressional testimony to the United States, are area after area of statistical need and statistical definition of which this province has virtually none.

Having recognized that the paramount emphasis is on training and education, and having acquired certain statistical information which gives that training and education a frame of reference, what, then, are the priorities in Ontario?

Mr. Speaker, ironically enough, they are readily available. They are even in printed form. Last February, in 1963, with very muted fanfare, this government accepted the report of the select committee on manpower training. A present Cabinet Minister chaired that committee. Seven government members signed a unanimous conclusion and a unanimous set of recommendations.

It is in many ways a superb report. With certain exceptions, and for some unfathomable reason, the government has seen fit, apparently, to ignore the bulk of its analysis and the heart of its proposals. But everything is here, Mr. Speaker, in embryonic, if not total, form. There is an analysis of the federal-provincial technical training agreement, a discussion as to priorities in technical education, in technological change, a suggestion that the 5,000 to 6,000 figure for technicians in this province will not do. As the report from the university presidents suggested, we would need 18,000 technologists by the year 1970. One asks the government: Why has not the report been heeded, why have not the efforts been made?

The report further outlines in some detail the desperate need for vocational guidance. If you are going to set up training centres across the province, if vocational institutes and trade institutes are to be established, if the Robarts education scheme is to function adequately, how is it possible, Mr. Speaker, to have individual young people make the dramatic choices which guide their own life lines without any vocational guidance to speak of? And that is the state in the province. As the report says, and I quote:

To fail in this regard will not only be disastrous for the individuals involved but will also jeopardize the future growth and prosperity of this province.

The report also pointed out educational standings of the youth in this province and how, in Canada, fully 55 per cent of them registered with the national employment service in 1960 had no more than grade eight education. A desperate plight, the report says.

It discusses the problems of retraining adults, in centres like the adult training centre, and one asks what the government has in mind when fully 50 per cent of the people at the adult training centre here in Toronto are women in clerical trades—precisely those trades which computer automation may eliminate within the decade. Where is the planning which this report suggests? Where is the research, which this report demands be undertaken?

Mr. Speaker, one can itemize it point by point. It is not necessary, surely, to belabour the matter, but one would hope this government, this year, will consider the content of the report as the programme of priorities for this province. To ignore it is to ignore the technological needs at this province's peril.

Mr. Speaker, I have but three short thoughts left. First, when you have introduced a great stream of automation and computer technology into plants, a revolution takes place not only in the employment factor and not merely in the increase in productivity; but also in the nature of the workers' situation on the job. Studies which have been taken show three patterns:

First, because the incentive payment principle is gradually diminishing in North American society as machines take over productivity, the degree of personal responsibility rises. The anxiety that this causes individual workers often raises a degree of tension which they find intolerable and which requires trained psychologists on the spot.

Number two, various studies from The United States Department of Labour show that when you automate a new plant, when you computerize a clerical working area, the jobs are farther apart in terms of space. Contact between individuals is lessened. Relationships at work break down, and relationships outside work have little enough meaning, so there is no longer content to the job.

The nature of the work performed by a person on an assembly line—as that quote on the Detroit automation process surely indicated—is essentially a study of dehumanization, and depersonalization, the transformation of people into automata in what has so graphically been called “the alienation of the individual from his work”.

If that is true, Mr. Speaker, if that is what is happening to vast numbers of people in this society, then I respectfully submit to this House that the question of leisure time in North America, in Canada, in Ontario, becomes paramount. But leisure time, Mr. Speaker, is considered idleness and idleness, in the best traditions of the Calvinist ethic, is considered to be sin. And the Calvinist ethic pervades North American society.

We could now choose leisure as an ultimate goal, precisely the way we choose full employment, but no one sees the welcome mat laid down for it. Leisure is boredom in North America. Large numbers of hon. members in this Legislature know the terrifying banality of North American culture and so-called North American leisure patterns. If a worker, alienated from the work process on the job is to have some creative use of his leisure hours off the job, then it requires a degree of imagination and purposefulness which this government simply has not yet demonstrated. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that they will.

Finally, what then, having referred to it, becomes the role of government? Frankly, Mr. Speaker, one of the roles is to enact almost in total the select committee's recommendations and to give leadership in the field of automation. Furthermore, the government should follow the Swedish example when dealing with workers. In Sweden, when you move a man to another plant, starting allowances are given, which cover all costs before the first payday. Travelling and moving are paid for by the state. Rent allowances are given for the benefit of wives and children in order to keep up two households simultaneously. There is a state-aided housing policy providing up to 95 per cent of the cost. Travelling expenses and tickets to view prospective jobs, without any necessity of taking those jobs, are given freely to the workers. In the context of an automated age that is the kind of thing this government should do.

It should certainly reject, Mr. Speaker, the words of its former Minister of Economics and Development; when he introduced the conference on automation and social change he said, and I quote:

I do not believe that the solution to automation lies in legislation, nor do I believe that governments can or should accept the responsibility for finding the solution.

Well, Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been said, surely it is a primary government responsibility to step in. The best answer that I could find to the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) was given by the London Sunday Times, an eminently respectable conservative paper, on October 20, 1963, in an editorial in these words:

The whole of government is based on a heroic effort to foresee the course of the technological explosion and to plot its needs. Any Conservative government now has to prove that it understands and can deal with the process. This is vital, because revolutions do not give one much time. Any government which lacks understanding of the revolution in which it is living is bound to fail.

Mr. Speaker, this government stands perilously on the brink of failure where the technological revolution is concerned, because, of course, unless government acts in this fashion, failure is inevitable. It means—and I know this may be painful for hon. members of the government—it means divesting oneself of certain 19th-century anachronisms; of removing the lexicon of conservative phraseology. It means that words like “private profit” and “free enterprise” and “economic gain” and “administration and efficiency,” gradually become ever more obsolete in a society where it may one day be that men have incomes unrelated to work.

Mr. Speaker, the government presently stands behind a Maginot line of 19th-century ideas with precisely the same safety as the French in 1939. And there is no room for that kind of attitude and that kind of behaviour.

We in the New Democratic Party suggest that this society should embrace science and social change. When we talk about scientists, and technicians, and technologists, and computer programmers, and systems analysts, that is the wave of the future and that is the evolution of society in the ten or 20 years to come. These are the dominant areas of emphasis about which decisions must be made. We ride that crest with pride and we shall analyze its implications from time to time throughout the session. And we profoundly hope that the government will do likewise.

If the government does not do likewise, I suspect that there may be a few hon. members, possibly the hon. members who signed this select committee report, who will feel a certain twinge of guilt. But, of course, there is something vastly more important than guilt at stake. If the government does not act on the implications of automation, it will count as an irreparable folly. And I conclude, Mr. Speaker, with this thought from Lord Acton: “There is another world for the expiation of guilt, but the wages of folly are payable here below.”

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria): In taking part I wish first to compliment you in your sound judgment and approach to your duties, Mr. Speaker. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is indeed a challenge and a privilege to represent in this House a riding which was ably represented by that great Canadian, the hon. Leslie Frost. He placed the eyes of the world on the counties of Victoria and Haliburton in the many happenings of this province, and in this House, in a great foundation period of our history.

We have in Victoria and Haliburton counties all the things of our economic life in Ontario, such as manufacturing, agriculture, forestry, mining, recreational facilities and industry of all types. My riding has one of the largest water areas in this province and only a part of this has been developed for the tourist industry. We need more storage to assure water for the benefit of agriculture, manufacturing, recreational facilities and other interests downstream, both in the reservoir areas and for the people along the Trent Canal. In this area of 2,834 square miles we are in great need of access roads to our resources in our undeveloped areas, and improvements to those in the developed.

I can point proudly to the community pasture projects in Victoria county. It was obvious that in placing this project our government recognized the pioneer spirit of my people. We need another such project already because the applications to use this one are so large.

At the present time, our forest area is growing, increasing the forest cover through the effective fire control under the operation of The Department of Lands and Forests. This, I believe, is one of the greatest features of this government—the conservation effort in this province, and it is all too often forgotten.

Like most of the people of this province, Mr. Speaker, I enjoy and have the benefits of hospital insurance. In January of 1959, nine days after its start here in this province, I used it at a time of injury. In this injury I was fortunate enough and wise enough to be wearing a hard hat. Let me commend to our workers the use of safety devices as recommended in our new safety regulations and in our old.

Representing an area of major importance to our province, I feel we must protect our people in several ways to assure that our facilities and our health remain so that we may enjoy our land. One of these is the area of the insecticides and chemical sprays we are using.

One of man's recent activities which may well produce very serious consequences is the ignorant and indiscriminate use of insecticides, fungicides and other weed killers. We need these materials in order to protect ourselves from competition by insects, disease organisms and weeds, which also use the same natural products as we do. Unfortunately, the chemicals which we use are not very selective in their action. The plain truth is that even when we use them with the greatest care we simply do not know what we are doing.

In the first place we do not understand the laws which govern the operation of the animal communities with which we are meddling. In the second place, we do not know what the long-term effect of these chemicals is upon these animals, or upon ourselves. Moreover, we are not using these chemicals with great care.

Our attitude seems to be that of the old-times to the "whiskey"—a little too much is about right. The insidious point here is that many of these poisons, such as DDT, are cumulative in their effect; that is the body does not get rid of them as it does with the normal waste and may eventually gather enough to produce some serious or fatal illness.

Insecticides, as first used, showed untold benefit to areas stricken with disease and blight. Most common and widely used is DDT, which in the past few years has been supplemented with powerful hydrocarbons. This strengthening became necessary when insects in some areas showed an immunity to the current poisoning. Dr. A. W. A.

Brown, University of Western Ontario, and a member of the World Health Organization quotes:

No less than 122 species have population resistance which have developed resistance to one or more insecticides. Therefore, we must move on with knowledge.

Water pollution is an added offspring to indiscriminate spraying, as I shall show later. Municipalities simply voting an amount of money to be used for the control of mosquitoes is common practice. I quote from a motion passed in council at a municipality here in Ontario:

That the medical health officer be authorized to institute a mosquito-control programme within the limitations of the budget appropriations.

The budget appropriations were $3,000. The lack of public awareness and the indiscriminate handling of these poisons by the public is noted by Dr. John A. Livingstone, president of the Audubon Society:

We fear, and justifiably so, that in the minds of too many people pesticides have become a sort of panacea or cure-all. This thinking has led in too many cases to their use without adequate prior consideration or examination of the risks involved.

Science is concerned, as stated by Dr. Carl Atwood, professor of zoology at the University of Toronto:

Unfortunately the chemicals which we use are not very selective in their action and not enough properly trained people are available to test effects of the chemical on animal and plant life of all sorts.

My concern is because of the increase in hydrocarbons and phosphorous poison. The medical profession is just now looking to a whole new field of disease study basically caused by the accumulative effects of these poisons in our system.

Dr. A. V. S. Bergen, University Clinic, Montreal Hospital and Dr. Malcolm Hargraves, Mayo Clinic, Rochester, have many cases on file of sickness and deaths caused by careless and improper use of insecticides. Dr. W. Coda Martin, an acknowledged authority on human nutrition and effects of insecticides on the food we eat, writes in the journal of the American Geriatric Society:

The United States public health service reported in an analysis of 25 meals selected at random from restaurants and institutions revealed DDT in all of them, even in meat, fried and mashed potatoes, pie and coffee with cream; thus adequate nutrition might be difficult to achieve. The refinement and processing of foods removes essential vitamins and minerals and food may contain a residue of potential toxic insecticides.

Dr. Whalen Hayes Jr., Public Health Service, USA, states:

It is impossible to back out of this sea of poison. Utter chaos would follow for we must artificially maintain the artificial balance we have created in nature. The job then is to develop poisons we can live with and which will kill only specific species.

Some of our negative results. I will not attempt to list all the results of usage and only in a brief way point out a few. In Alabama and Georgia, states of the USA, extensive loss in farm animals and products was suffered because of poor prior testing by The US Department of Agriculture. Florida, where a 2,000 acre tidal marsh was treated with dieldrin killed an estimated 20 to 30 tons of fish and marine life. Annapolis Valley, where once first grade apples deteriorated to third grade through extensive spraying programmes. New Brunswick, where a spray programme to control the spruce bud worm contaminated water to such a degree as to cause a serious shortage for at least two years in the salmon run. A prime mover in that spray programme is quoted as saying: "We had to do something, even if we did not know how it was going to turn out."

The list goes on and becomes of deep concern when the symptoms are becoming evident in Ontario. The effects are lasting and a long list of tested evidence could easily be compiled. Because most insecticides are cumulative and store up in the liver and fat of the body, their symptoms do not show until it is too late for prevention. I believe this is a way of some control.

We know here that most municipalities launching spray programmes simply do so by passing a motion in council. Most of these fall far short of the full programme and most are instituted to soothe some irate segment of the public. They are not only a waste of funds in many ways but point out the need for proper authority and planning. I believe the municipality is the proper central source for the channelling of new experimentation and the logging of all spray programmes to give a positive means to planning control. In order to do this a guide must be provided by a senior government.

Some of the added ways to improvement, I believe, would be the registering of all spray equipment of one-gallon and larger size. Public awareness through sales outlets, better packaging, educational facilities and other means may help to caution the careless.

To sum up, there is an urgency here which cannot be put aside but must be dealt with. All the programmes of spraying must be authorized by a central source to avoid duplication in areas, to an extent that will be harmful in an unnecessary way. With these few insights into the vast and very controversial issues of spray programming and the related use of such, may we hope for a new appraisal.

I have stated what I considered founded fears, the fears I have because of inaction on the part of public opinion to pass a reasonable degree of control until we know more of which we spray. It would be tragic if we permitted ourselves to be paralyzed by beliefs which defy facts and which could keep us from the great opportunities ahead.

Yet another major concern of my people—water safety—is another area we must enlarge on. We have in this province forces of men under provincial jurisdiction. These are the provincial police and lands and forests personnel. Today the requirement is the need to have water safety promotion, an operation under and conducted by both of these forces and groups in their contact with our people.

I would recommend that the OPP be given more instruction in search and rescue. Conservation officers should have more instruction in court procedure as a part of their course; that could be taken at the forest ranger school in Haliburton county. This school on Lake St. Nora could also be the ideal location for water safety courses for the forces of our province, in their field of growing concern for our tourist areas. In other words, the colleges of instruction should work together to our advantage in these necessary fields.

This can be done, I believe, since the present director of the OPP college at Aylmer is a former director of the ranger school near Dorset. His knowledge will prove very valuable to the people of Ontario in such a programme:

I must thank this government for the preservation and publishing of historical works which are of great value in recording pioneer people, and heritage, and those acts of exploration and development in the beginnings of my county and Ontario.

There is in my view no other way but to move forward resolutely and cautiously in the hope that when you do put, on him or her, real responsibilities, they will rise to them; and in years to come people will say that the political genius of this race, of which we are part here, has not faltered at the door of the greatest task put on them; and that the wisdom of this House guided Ontario over the time of the 60's—the best of its history.

Constant abuse of politicians, constant attacks upon the efficiency and the integrity of public men, is having a bad effect in this country, resulting in destroying of public confidence in our representative constitution and instilling in the minds of our younger generation that public life and all politicians are corrupt. Everywhere we look in the world today we find representative government on trial, as we did in the thirties.

These leaders of countries such as Russia, China, Cuba, proclaim the decline of democracy and representative government; and I believe, in all sincerity, unless and until the people of this country come to value more the things our ancestors won for us, we too will be in peril of losing our heritage.

I believe that I am perhaps one of the few, and perhaps the only member of this House, to spend a period of time at the Workmen's Compensation Board rehabilitation centre in Downsview. In my five months there I gained a very valuable insight into the very able operations of the Workmen's Compensation Board. May I at this time, Mr. Speaker, tell the hon. members of this House we in Ontario are very fortunate to have a very dedicated group of people doing work in this field which, along with the facilities, assures our injured workers second-to-none service in bringing this group of our citizens back into society and able to once more make a worthwhile contribution.

Let me also point out, Mr. Speaker, that this great work does not go unnoticed in our world today. We have, in the past few years, had groups from every country in the world making the effort to study that in which we, in this province, have led the planet. I believe we should have, in addition to these facilities, a partial self-care hospital, in which many of the surgery cases could be taken to from the floors of our hospitals reserved by the board—at which, I believe, many cases could be given therapy which would advance recovery and place the patient back into our industry at an earlier period. This hospital could be built on the present grounds at Downsview.

I am very pleased to note, in the Throne Speech, this government's intention to update safety legislation. This was never needed more, to protect our worker in this machine world.

Mr. Speaker, this is about the end of my remarks. In conclusion I would like very much to express my thanks and appreciation of the honour that my people have given me, by the democratic process, in electing me to partake of this Legislature. I have known a few of the hon. members for several years, and I have added appreciation and understanding of the ideals of Parliament.

I am very happy that I have been given the opportunity to express my admiration for those aims and ideals so ably carried out by you, Mr. Speaker, in your responsibility here. Thank you.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the debate on the Speech from the Throne, and as a new member, I suppose it is only natural that I feel a small amount of trepidation. Some of the butterflies that are within me today are no doubt a product of this new experience, but most of them are from a determination to do as creditable a job as I can to show my pride and gratitude to the fine people of my great northern riding of Algoma-Manitoulin, for the overwhelming expression of confidence they gave me on September 25.

In as sincere a way as I can, and with a minimum of chest beating, I will try to show this House why, after 18 years and in the face of a trend towards the Conservative Party in this province, they decided to elect a member to the official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, before proceeding further, I feel strongly, as I watch you preside over the deliberations of this House, and as I see daily evidences of your fairmindedness, indulgences with respect to the inexperienced efforts of such new members as I, that you are doing and will continue to do, credit to the high and responsible place you hold. I wish also to congratulate all the new members to this House. I have seen already many evidences of outstanding ability, but more important is their sincerity and dedication to purpose, which I am sure will result in the social and economic betterment of this province. I can only hope that whatever personal sacrifices that had to be made will be offset by the satisfaction that will come from the opportunity to serve.

At this moment, I can find no superlatives that have not already been used in the references to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and his hon. Ministers. I certainly concur, without reservation, though from time to time it may not sound like it.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity today to spend a moment or two to discuss some of my first impressions of the conduct of this House.

First of all, and contrary to the noisy opinions of good Conservatives in my riding, it becomes more and more evident to me that being elected to this 27th parliament of Ontario as a member of the Liberal Party was not necessarily a futile accomplishment. In fact, quite the contrary. The government of this province, not being altogether infallible, can be made better by the kind of constructive criticism that leads to the consideration of both sides of the many questions and problems that face Ontario today. It becomes more apparent to me every day that this government contains a solid core of hon. members motivated by nothing but a desire to control and legislate for the betterment of the individual and improvement of the status of this great province, within the framework of a great nation.

It also becomes apparent every day in this House that this worthy motivation more and more is taking the place of small, narrow party politics. It is encouraging to me that all parties in this democratic institution recognize that the people of Ontario have spoken. If we, as their choice, are to be worthy, we must forget our more or less vague differences and realize that we are all public servants and get on with the business of running a province. As members of the Opposition, we must be no less broadminded in this respect than the members on the government side of the House.

As opportunities, Mr. Speaker, such as this are given us to present our views in this Legislature, I hope we can remember that these views must be presented in a constructive way. When we attack the government's proposals, we must do so only while offering well considered alternatives, in line with our overall policies as a party. I hope we will not fail to commend the government for determined and necessary action when it deserves it, but we must expect to be heard when this action does not coincide with our great party's policies of social reform, humanitarian principles, tempered with sound business practices.

Mr. Speaker, unlike the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Eagleson), I attained a position on the committee on agriculture by choice. I would like to talk about this industry for a few minutes, and I will admit that after 25 years of working with farmers, I feel fairly comfortable on this subject, although my views, tempered and coloured by agricultural problems in the north, will not necessarily coincide with and may be at variance with some.

In this respect, I enjoyed the comments of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis), especially as they related to the north. I welcome him to the club. The other day I listened carefully to a few remarks from the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) to the effect that he thinks we should recognize the fact of the rapid advance of industry and agricultural production. These are not his exact words, but something to the effect that there are few, I believe, in this province who would have recognized the enormous advances that have been made in both of these in the last few years. Mr. Speaker, he may be right, generally speaking, but I certainly can refer the hon. members of this House to an area that can boast no such expansion, in fact, both the industrial and agricultural economy of Algoma-Manitoulin has steadily deteriorated over a ten- to 15-year period to an all-time low.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I freely admit that this is not a situation that can be laid completely at any government's door. A culmination of circumstances have resulted in this deterioration, but I feel that government can take some responsibility for the fact, for instance, that government illustration stations, formerly a very popular access to modern agricultural knowledge, have all but disappeared from the area. Also, the future of agricultural developments in dairying in this riding is practically nil. This is partly due, of course, to the shortage of urban consumers, which in turn is due to the lack of, and even the deterioration of, existing industry in this riding.

It is partly due, also, to legislation brought down by this government which eliminates northern dairy farmers from competition with southern Ontario farmers in the increasing demand for dairy products. I refer to the classification in which various dairy products have been placed and which results in actual discrimination against northern producers. I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has left his seat. I realize that this is a big question, and opens up several areas of discussion, but I will be happy to discuss this matter, here or elsewhere, any time with the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and I agree that it will not be settled here today.

In passing, I will refer to the mention last Friday in this House, Mr. Speaker, of the fact that it is procedure that new members be allowed some latitude in their speeches without interruption. This is commendable, but since I do not intend to talk about anything I know nothing about, and that I am anxious to learn further, I invite the hon. Minister of any department to discuss, for our mutual edification, any matter that I deal with. On the other hand, it would be pleasant if Her Majesty's hon. Ministers could refrain from the other kind of interruption that seems to have become such an important part of this institution and with which the people of Ontario have become disgusted.

Mr. Speaker, while I will have to insist that this government must accept some responsibility for lack of action, which has resulted in decline of our basic industries in the north; while it seems queer that the terms, for instance, of reference of the ARDA plans have just in the last two weeks and under pressure made it available to Algoma-Manitoulin; while The Department of Highways continues to refuse to consider the needs of people in unorganized municipalities for access roads and bridges, and even feels that small towns and villages are not important enough to install speed regulations for the protection of pedestrians; while for lack of attention to the promotion of production in the north, we find that public funds are being expended through The Department of Public Welfare; and though I freely congratulate this department for the splendid job that the regional offices do against terrific odds, I think the department must agree that the amount of public welfare that it is necessary to spend per capita in this area is alarming. As if the good people of Algoma-Manitoulin, Mr. Speaker, need any more hardship, there is also the fact that the Ontario Paper Company, which had a substantial influence on the livelihood of the farmers and bushmen and Indians, recently closed its doors. The Manitoulin turkey eviscerating plant, which produced the famous Manitoulin turkey—recognized as a premium product all over Ontario—has been forced to close its doors. Some 6,000 or 7,000 people, Mr. Speaker, in the unfortunate town of Elliot Lake will go down the road about July 1 this year. I will deal with this later in the speech.

I am sure that every northern member has in his files several pitiful cases of mental retardation representing families living in hopeless misery because of the lack of adequate hospital schools in northern Ontario or even the lack of a suitable programme of schools for the lesser degree of retardation. Now I do not maintain that Algoma-Manitoulin has a monopoly on problems and I do not intend to make this a speech on nothing but recriminations, but I ask this government to consider a programme which will take these situations in hand and deal with them.

Mr. Speaker, our people are not lazy and there are plenty of farmers' sons who would like to remain on the farm and to make a career of this great industry. They do need encouragement and they do need advice and teaching; knowledge of modern procedures for production, of the kind of products that Ontario needs, and that northern conditions lend themselves to. Facilities for teaching along most vocational lines have been made available throughout Ontario in most cases locally, why not in agriculture? I have said that there seems to be no future in dairying but beef and poultry raising is something else. The establishment of community pastures, recognition of higher freight costs, storage facilities for feed grain, so that cheap boat rates can be utilized, these and other things are important. But a northern agricultural college is most important. This request, Mr. Speaker, has been and will be dealt with in a resolution before this House but I further urge that the government of this province consider immediately the fact that Ontario needs beef and poultry; that the north is producing beef that is recognized in the United States as being a premium product; that, with attention, Algoma-Manitoulin can triple its beef production and allow this constituency to make its proper donation to the economy of this province.

Mr. Speaker, it would not be right for me to conclude without discussing our number one problem in Algoma, which remains Elliot Lake. I have lived in Elliot Lake, I have been in business there since its inception. And I am only too well aware of the many disillusionments that have taken place in a town that has dwindled from a population of 30,000 people to something like 9,000 people and which bids fair to lose most of the rest of its population in July this year. A good many of the people who lost their homes, businesses and jobs, Mr. Speaker, were good friends of mine and I can only say to this government that efforts must be maintained to develop an alternate industry in this town. A $3.5 million hospital, the finest anywhere; three hotels, of which two up to now are closed; some ten of the most modern public and separate schools; a modern secondary school which includes a new vocational wing; plus all of the supporting commercial enterprises; all streets completely paved with all of the finest in municipal services: These are the things that earn for Elliot Lake the title "the most modern ghost town in the world".

When I hear in this House, speeches about the housing shortage, I am tempted to talk about the 400 to 500 empty homes occupied for two or three years, many of them built at a cost of over $15,000, one of which I own, that cannot even be given away. A lot of people are still hanging on to the fond hope that government will still find a way to eliminate this waste and perpetuate the life of this community. I am not unmindful, Mr. Speaker, of the investment this government has in Elliot Lake. I know something of the $720,000 loan that goes into the municipal upkeep this year and the effort that is continuing to go into the establishment of a provincial park, the shared-road programme, shared vocational school project and a mining museum. And I wish right now to congratulate the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner), his deputy and the whole department for their understanding. This government can be grateful that it has found such a man to head this most important department and one who does understand the needs of the north. But, Mr. Speaker, these efforts will not save this town or the people who live in it and the time is drawing short. Some sizable alternate industry or institutional project is the only thing that can save the town in the few short months that are left.

To conclude, I urge this government and its hon. Ministers to consider further the need for social services of which we have so few; to proceed with projects about to start on a senior citizens home; to give some attention to institute facilities for the mentally retarded, at present almost totally taken care of under discouraging conditions by a few faithful volunteers—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Was that home not the beginning of Fullerton's downfall?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Farquhar: —to develop a programme of agricultural guidance and encouragement by the establishment of an agricultural school, preferably in the heart of Manitoulin Island, so that potential farmers might enrol at a cost they can afford; to a more realistic approach to the fact that to promote our tourist industry and timber resources, we need an expanded road programme.

Just a word, Mr. Speaker, on the taxation that will be necessary to meet the problems I have mentioned. In the main, I will leave this important matter to those among us more qualified to discuss it. As one who has built a business or two I know only too well the necessity of generating funds for expansion through taxation or otherwise. This kind of taxation I am in favour of, but the kind of taxation that generates nothing but the need for more taxation I am against. In other words, the taxation that is necessary to support The Department of Public Welfare with funds to relieve the hardship of people who for lack of some properly planned and financed project might be gainfully employed. This is the situation in Algoma-Manitoulin.

I would venture to suggest that The Department of Public Welfare is the most active department of government in this area. Surely we must recognize as business people that if proper attention had been paid to the development of agriculture and the other basic industries and resources in the great north, if the capital had been made available and the people had been taught and encouraged to expand and to make their proper donation to the expansion of this province, had been helped to produce the foodstuffs, minerals and timber products that Ontario needs, it almost goes without saying that the need for increased taxation would certainly be less.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to add my voice to the many strong young voices speaking so vehemently for the north, some of which have not yet been heard from. Louder and louder we are going to request, even plead with, the government for attention to the needs of the great north. I feel sure that up to this date we have failed in some areas to properly acquaint this government with the specific needs, particularly of Algoma-Manitoulin. But I submit that this situation has changed, I submit that the people in the north have been given a representation that expects to be heard in this House and expects to be heard in no uncertain terms. And I am sure that these representatives expect to cross the lines of party colour if necessary, and work together for the advancement of the north's interests. The results we hope to attain, however, will only be possible if one condition develops, a condition of complete co-operation at all levels of government, federal, provincial, municipal, but most important of all, inter-party and inter-departmental co-operation.

We must ask the hon. Prime Minister of this province to call for greater liaison between the various departments of government. Mr. Speaker, so many of our province's great needs could so simply be taken care of by the complete co-operation of all parties and, more important, the correlating of the various departments in a concerted effort to relieve distress and hardship through co-operative planning. The keynote of this government, working for the individual and social betterment of this province, must be co-operation between all parties and at all levels of government. The pledge of our party must be that we be not found wanting.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Russell): Mr. Speaker, it has been said that nothing collects a man's thoughts as the knowledge he is to be hanged on the following day. Although it will be several years before the imminence of another general election in this province brings the threat of execution to myself and some others, I thought I might begin early in collecting a few of my thoughts.

And that, Mr. Speaker, is briefly what my remarks will be, not so much a speech as a collection of thoughts on a variety of subjects.

In presenting this, I do so with the hope that I will have the indulgence not only of yourself, Mr. Speaker, but that of my fellow members in this House, to a degree I may not expect in the future.

Firstly, Mr. Speaker, it is a special pleasure, as a fellow Ottawan and long-time friend of yours, to congratulate you upon your election to the office of Speaker of this House.

Next, I would like to add my congratulations to those already presented and extended to the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler) and the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard) upon their addresses which opened this debate.

Then, sir, may I express my thanks and greetings to the approximately 170,000 people who reside in the riding of Russell.

I stand here duty-bound to represent the city of Ottawa, the city of Eastview, the village of Rockcliffe Park, the township of Gloucester, and the rural townships of Cumberland, Russell and Osgoode.

Duty-bound, sir, also, to represent as best I can the workers, farmers, businessmen and the large number of civil servants who comprise my people.

Upon me is also the responsibility of representing the approximately 40 per cent of my people who are French-speaking.

For generations, the riding of Russell has been represented by French-speaking members, and these constituents are entitled to expect from me the understanding, goodwill and effort on their behalf that they would expect from one of their own.

And, sir, with your permission may I express this same sentiment in French: Pendant des années, le comte de Russell a été représenté par des membres de langue française, et je crois que mes électeurs ont le droit de trouver en moi, la sympathie, la bonne volonté et tous les efforts qu'ils auraient eu d'un canadien français.

Mr. Speaker, may I also, at this point, pay my respects to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), and thank him for his unwavering support last summer in what might be described as a certain time of troubles in my riding. In fact, I believe I am the only member who had the unique pleasure of running against a Liberal, a New Democrat and a Conservative.

In addition, I would pay my respects to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver), and thank him, as I am sure all the hon. members do, for the touch of good humour he adds to his criticism.

This brings me to the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald).

I have already, in the short time I have been here, developed an admiration for his intellect and his skill.

When this session got under way, he said, and I quote from Hansard of Wednesday, January 15:

I do not think there is any nobler pursuit than the offer of a man to serve his fellow men in a democratic society in a Legislature such as this:

I found these remarks, Mr. Speaker, calculated to increase my pride in being a new member of this distinguished body.

I found, however, that his action in reading that statement of claim last week had a very different effect upon me.

Although I am a lawyer, sir, it was not the legal niceties which affected me—nor would it be proper to discuss them at this time.

Suffice it to say that his action affected me as would watching someone tear the wings off a fly. Tearing the wings off flies is surely not illegal, but watching it has a revolting effect upon one's stomach.

As a result, I found that the hon. member's action did not increase my pride in being a member of this House.

If the hon. member had realized that he was opening the door for every blackguard in this province, with $5 and a typewriter to file a statement of claim and have it read in this House, he surely would not have done as he did.

I would like, very briefly, to record the series of opinions on a variety of subjects which I mentioned earlier.

Firstly, in the field of agriculture, I believe that we, in this House, should be prepared to support a massive infusion of capital into our farming industry and, if it cannot be done by private or corporate capital, it should be done by state capital.

I would much rather see $1 million lost in a vigorous capital assistance programme than see $1 million dribbled away in support for undercapitalized and inefficient farming operations.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I have found that many of the most successful farming operations in my riding have an absence of substantial equity that would have shocked an earlier generation.

Next, on the subject of highways, it is difficult, sir, for a resident of the Ottawa area to view the superhighway connecting Toronto with Crown Hill, Ontario, and comprehend why there is no such road between Ottawa and Canada's largest city, and between Ottawa and the greatest sources of commerce and tourist dollars in the world, the United States.

When I drive out to Malton airport and see the huge steel globes and the drills and bulldozers destroying beautiful Highway 401, I wonder as I reflect on what comparative cowpaths some of the roads in my own area were before 401, and remain after 401.

For example, sir, there is not a single paved road running from the north to the south of my riding—and on this point I want to assure the hon. Prime Minister that it was purely coincidental, and without malice aforethought, that his visit to my riding last summer included the bouncing, dust-eating and zig-zagging of a route from north to south in Russell.

Hydro. On this subject, Mr. Speaker, may I say very briefly that the present rate structure seems to encourage the establishment of municipal hydro commissions.

This, I believe, and perhaps at a later date with more research I may speak upon it, to be a retrograde policy.

The Ottawa transportation commission. This, sir, is our city-owned public transportation utility.

It operates buses; and it operates buses because they are the most efficient means of public transportation available to the people of Ottawa at this time.

It would operate subways or streetcars, I am sure, if it suited our needs in Ottawa.

As a result of using buses it pays to this province, out of the pockets of bus riders and ratepayers, some $1,000 each day, some $360,000 each year, in fuel taxes and licence fees.

Electrically powered transportation suits a substantial portion of the needs of the city of Toronto and the Metropolitan Toronto area; and, with respect to this form of transportation, no comparable tax applies. The bus rider is burdened with a tax that does not lie upon the subway rider; and, in a manner of speaking, sir, I believe that the bus rider thereby subsidizes the subway rider.

With the greatest of respect for those sitting on the Treasury benches, and in particular for my friend, the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) who must find the money we all want to spend, there is a very real inequity in this situation which, I believe, requires adjustment.

With respect to education, Mr. Speaker, I have for some years had the privilege of sitting on the board of a secondary school, and at the same time on the board of a university; and while doing so, I have become very conscious of the imperfect meshing of these two levels of education.

The streaming policies of recent years have, I sincerely believe, been imaginative and useful. But I suggest, sir, with great respect, that no matter at what level of our system it is applied, streaming can never be more than an educational technique.

I wonder if what we really need in this province may not be the interposition of a complete and distinct level of education between the secondary and university levels, resulting consciously in a four-level system instead of our present three-level system of education. And I ask whether enough fat could not be squeezed out of our primary and secondary school curricula to accomplish this, without at the same time extending the total years—and lengthy they are—of schooling.

Finally, sir, on the subject of statute law. On the statute books of this province we have, and will always have, many laws which need amendment.

But we also have certain Acts which do not serve the purpose they were intended to serve, nor any longer today protect the people they were intended to protect.

Their mere existence involves the useless expenditure of enormous amounts of both legal and judicial time, and they become, thereby, a financial burden upon the whole public. Two examples are The Mechanics Lien Act and The Dower Act.

I suggest, with great respect, Mr. Speaker, that to amend and to tinker with this class of statute is like taking a scalpel to a stump when what is needed is an axe. What a pleasure it would be simply to repeal these statutes outright and forthwith!

Sir, the right of free speech in this assembly, the right, with your protection, to speak almost endlessly about almost anything, is heady stuff for a new member, fresh as I am, from the outside world.

Mine is a varied riding of vastly varied interests, and I hope that I may usefully debate, in due course, such subjects as tourism, municipal grants and Dominion-provincial affairs.

Because Russell is a border riding, I trust, Mr. Speaker, that I shall always have a healthy bias against the fabulous power and centripetal force of Toronto and the golden horseshoe, together with a healthy bias against the lengthening shadow of the Peace Tower which so dominates my own area, and finally, and perhaps most important, a healthy bias against any deviation from the policies of the present government.

Thank you.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the hon. members who have congratulated you on your appointment as Speaker of this Legislature. Your decisions to date have been most impartial and I am sure that they will continue to be so as this session progresses. I am also very happy to have you as a neighbour because, as the hon. members of this House might know, you represent the county immediately west of mine, in this Legislature.

Monsieur l'Orateur, me serait-il permis, à titre de canadien d'expression française, de m'adresser à cette chambre dans la langue de mes ancêtres, langue qui fut parlée en cette province il y a déjà longtemps par les missionnaires et les premiers colons. Je voudrais formuler le vœu que, dans un avenir rapproché, les débats de cette chambre soient conduits dans les deux langues officielles du pays. Il n'y a aucun doute que, lorsque ce jour sera venu, le dialogue entre les deux grandes races qui ont conclu le pacte de la Confédération sera plus facile parce que nous nous comprendrions mieux.

A la veille du centenaire de l'acte confédératif, il y a lieu d'espérer que le gouvernement de cette province fera tout en son pouvoir pour donner à langue française la place qui lui revient dans tous les domaines de l'administration. On entend souvent la remarque que la langue officielle de la province est la langue anglaise. Dans bien des domaines de l'administration provinciale, il y aurait lieu d'espérer qu'on fasse une plus large part à la langue française, tout spécialement dans les milieux où habitent une forte population parlant cette langue, et je veux mentionner l'est de la province tout spécialement et le Nord-Ontario et la région de Welland, Windsor et Niagara.

J'ai posé une question l'autre jour à l'Honorable Ministre de l'Éducation (Mr. Davis), au sujet de l'emploi de professeurs de langue française à la nouvelle école des arts et métiers qui doit être inaugurée cet automne à Ottawa. J'aurais aimé être plus précis dans ma question. Toutefois, les règlements de la Chambre ne permettent pas une question trop longue, qui donnerait plus précisément la pensée de l'interrogateur. L'Honorable Ministre m'a répondu qu'il lui ferait plaisir de considérer des nominations de professeurs bilingues. Je voulais attirer l'attention du Ministre sur le fait qu'une forte proportion de la population des comtés d'Ottawa-est, Russell, Glengarry, Prescott et Stormont, est de langue française, de même des habitants d'Ottawa-Ouest, Ottawa-Sud et Carleton, et que cette population ne pourra pas profiter des avantages de cette école si on n'y emploie pas un nombre de professeurs pouvant parler les deux langues officielles du pays. Je suis certain que l'Honorable Ministre, qui est, j'en suis persuadé, un homme raisonnable, prendra ces quelques remarques en considération lorsqu'il préparera les estimés de son Ministère.

J'ai reçu de nombreuses plaintes, Monsieur l'Orateur, au sujet des examinateurs pour permis de conduire dans la ville d'Ottawa. Je ne veux pas mettre en doute la compétence de ces examinateurs. Malheureusement, un trop grand nombre de citoyens faillissent leurs examens à cause de la difficulté qu'ils rencontrent parce qu'on leur donne leurs instructions en langue anglaise et qu'on leur fait essayer les examens dans la même langue. Je prierais donc l'Honorable Ministre des Transports (Mr. Haskett), qui représente le comté voisin du mien, de faire une enquête dans ce domaine afin de pouvoir, dans un avenir immédiat, corriger cet état de choses.

Avant de terminer ces quelques remarques en français, permettez-moi, Monsieur l'Orateur, de féliciter les membres de cette chambre qui ont eu l'occasion, en ces derniers temps, de porter la parole dans la langue de Molière. L'Honorable Ministre des Terres et Forêts (Mr. Roberts) était le conférencier invité au Club Richelieu Ottawa-Hull, club social dont je fais partie depuis près de 20 ans. Le journal Le Droit rapportait que le français de l'Honorable Ministre était très respectable. On me dit que l'Honorable Premier Ministre

(Mr. Robarts) peut s'exprimer très correctement en français et, l'autre soir, j'écoutais l'Honorable député de York-Sud (Mr. MacDonald), lors d'une émission radiophonique sur la politique provinciale sur le réseau français de Radio-Canada, s'exprimer dans un français impeccable.

Monsieur l'Orateur, si vous me permettez de répéter le vœu que j'ai formulé au début de ce discours, j'espère que dans un avenir très rapproché, il sera possible de participer à des débats dans cette chambre, dans les deux langues officielles du pays.

Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to talk of some of the problems facing the county which I have the honour to represent in this Legislature? Ottawa East is one of the historic counties of Ontario and in this county are located the Parliament buildings, the residence of the Governor General—although my good friend, the hon. member for Russell (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) might claim the Governor General to be one of his constituents—and that of the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of our great country. Because of expropriation by the federal government, a large number of people had to move away from my constituency. Many families had been living in Ottawa East, for three, four and even five generations and in many cases had to leave behind a home that had been thoroughly renovated. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that at the three levels of government something should be done for these people and should have been done, I might say, for these people, before their homes were demolished. Some land was available in the area for the construction of subsidized housing and these people could have remained near their schools, their churches and their place of employment. An official of the national capital commission told me that these people, whose homes had been expropriated, had made a good deal because they had received a substantial price for an old property. That may be the case for a few, Mr. Speaker, but what about the people living in rented quarters? They were not so fortunate and in most cases had to move to areas far removed from their place of employment and usually had to pay a much higher rent with the usual hardship to balance the family budget.

I believe one of the speakers mentioned the other day that the provincial government should offer some leadership in the manner of urban renewal. I entirely agree with this idea and would suggest that municipalities should be obliged to build suitable accommodation for the people who are to be displaced prior to the demolition of their homes.

I am also of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that subsidized housing should be built in areas where substandard housing now exists. Social workers should be called in in all cases in order to determine what is best for the people living in the areas to be renovated.

Another part of my county, Mr. Speaker, has seen the demolition of hundreds of homes for the construction of approaches for the new Macdonald-Cartier bridge being erected between Ottawa and Hull. And there again many families have to leave behind their historical churches, their schools, their parish halls, and move to areas which do not have those facilities. I am not against progress, but I believe people should be considered when changes of that kind are made.

I note with interest in the Speech from the Throne that a pilot project has been authorized in the city of Hamilton in order to renovate older buildings rather than demolish them. I certainly hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) would see fit to offer the same facilities to the city of Ottawa.

It seems to me that there has been little of this done in our fair city. I believe very few people are aware that funds are available for that purpose from the government. I might suggest to the hon. Minister that a pamphlet be printed and distributed to the people of Ottawa saying under what conditions these funds are made available.

I am convinced that the problem of urban renewal could be solved quickly if a programme of this type were started in our blighted areas.

I noticed in an editorial of January 28, 1964 in the Ottawa Journal that the Ontario Municipal Board has authorized the redevelopment of an area along Preston Street, located I believe in the county represented here by the hon. Minister of Transport, in order to permit the construction of a new high school.

And I cite the rest of this editorial, Mr. Speaker:

How humanely and sympathetically the dispossessed families are assisted in new accommodation. 1100 residents have been residing there for many years. There is a sense of community living in the neighbourhood. However right, these blocks are for renovation.

The city has sent a helpful and reassuring pamphlet to each resident of the area, which answers many of the questions being asked. The pamphlet is somewhat evasive about the reason for starting the project. The area has been declared sub-standard by planners. That is why these blocks have been chosen, not merely because there is a need for a new high school.

But this is small quibble. The city's effort to explain what it is doing is a good sign that it will minimize the effect of relocating so many families. Even a project promising so many long-term benefits should be scrupulously careful with those who must be uprooted.

Mr. Speaker, as the only representative on this side of the House from eastern Ontario, I am sorry to find nothing in the Speech from the Throne about highway construction in that beautiful part of the province. And if I may divert for a moment from my text, I would like to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Russell who has openly criticized this government for the little that has been done in his constituency about highways.

Definitely something ought to be done, not only in the county of Russell but in many of the other constituencies which have for many years been electing members on the other side of the House and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. members from eastern Ontario who are here will co-operate with me in order to try to obtain from the government better highways in our part of the province.

It has often been said in the past, and I believe statistics would prove it, that eastern Ontario is neglected not only as regards highways but in many other respects. I would like at this time, Mr. Speaker, to say a word about the high cost to municipalities of what is called, I believe, connecting link facilities.

I have in mind particularly the very large expenditures that the city of Ottawa has to make for the construction of the Queensway. I would perhaps suggest to the hon. Minister that the entire question be re-examined.

If I may be permitted to make a suggestion, I would like to mention that in the Montreal area, the Metropolitan Boulevard was built with a provision that a certain percentage be paid by the adjoining municipalities. This was done by a special levy which was proving to be quite a heavy load for property owners to carry. Shortly after the 1960 election in that province the Quebec Cabinet decided that the entire cost of the construction of that highway would be paid by the provincial government.

Having to bear such a heavy cost in the construction of the Queensway is preventing,

I am sure, the municipality of Ottawa from proceeding with plans in so many other areas.

I notice some items in the newspaper—consultations by the Laurendeau-Dunton commission with the provincial Prime Ministers—and I also noticed that our own hon. Prime Minister has shown considerable interest in this study of bilingualism and biculturalism. As a Canadian of French descent, Mr. Speaker, whose ancestors have been in this country for three and a half centuries and in this beautiful province of Ontario for almost 150 years, I feel that this House and the government should take a very active and sympathetic part in the work of this commission.

The purpose of this study, Mr. Speaker, is not to impose another language and another culture on the rest of the population, but to enrich this country and this province by permitting the development of the French language and culture in all parts of Canada. The history of this province has been enriched by the presence of French settlers and missionaries and can continue to do so without taking away any of the rights and privileges of the English-speaking population and that of all other ethnic groups that compose this great province of ours.

Mr. Speaker, I notice with interest that a select committee of the Legislature will be established to carry out a review of the problems of the elderly. I also notice that this committee will be prepared to co-operate with the Senate committee on aging. As a member of the board of governors of the Canadian Welfare Council I would like to draw to the attention of the hon. Minister that a considerable amount of work has already been done by a committee on aging which would be of great assistance to the members who will undertake this study.

I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that this problem has been of great interest for a long time to the Ontario Welfare Council and to a number of other people, lay persons and professionals, in the welfare field. I believe the work of this select committee could be greatly enhanced by calling some members from these organizations to testify whenever possible.

Mr. Speaker, many of the hon. members who have preceded me in this debate have spoken about their election problems. I believe it is the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) who said that some 14 or 15 Cabinet Ministers had been in his constituency during the election. Now frankly, Mr. Speaker, I feel a little hurt. In my own area only one Cabinet Minister came to try to defeat me—or try to elect the sitting member then—and of course it was not the smallest, it was the hon. Prime Minister himself, who I understand attended a few cocktail parties during a certain weekend.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Tea parties!

Mr. Racine: Well, I was told it was cocktail parties, Mr. Speaker. Anyway, I could give him the benefit of the doubt and hope that they were tea parties.

Now I do not think it made much difference, although I admire the hon. Prime Minister of this province as a man, I do not see eye to eye with him as regards his politics.

In expressing regret for the defeat of the Conservative member in Ottawa East, one of the local newspapers, referring to me as a dignified and sympathetic individual, said that my efficiency as an elected member would be considerably reduced by the fact that I would be in the Opposition ranks. Now may I say this, Mr. Speaker, that my views on the subject are quite different. It has often been said that the government is as good as its opposition, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that many hon. members of this House and the public of Ontario will find out that although few in numbers our group will give effective and constructive opposition and will not permit the government to remain in a state of complacency.

Mr. Speaker, as my hon. leader (Mr. Oliver) has said, development of highways has been concentrated in too few areas, and I will agree with him that it is not the prerogative of the government to tell industry where to establish itself.

Now, adequate development of highways in eastern Ontario might well have brought industry to that area which offered so much in other facilities such as electricity, manpower and water transportation. I do hope my hon. colleagues from eastern Ontario—and I repeat that, I know I said it a while ago—will support me in selling to the Cabinet the needs of our area.

Then, Mr. Speaker, my final remarks will be on the important subject of education. I have read with great interest the statement made to this House by the hon. Minister of Education. I must admit that it is a rather complicated statement, not easily understood by a layman. Under the heading "Equal Education" one of the local papers says this:

Ontario is breaking new ground with its foundation plan to equalize opportunities for education throughout the province. No one, least of all Education Minister William Davis suggests that it meets all the problems of financing education in Ontario, but it is a long step in the right direction.

A little further in the same editorial, it is stated that:

Until the experts get their pencils out and assess what they will get under the new formula no one can be certain what the effect will be on any particular board's budget.

There is one statement that I would like to make regarding education in this province. I believe that it should be made available to all children, regardless of race, religion or place of residence. This province has suffered because of inequalities that have existed for much too long a period. Many talents have been lost because of that situation. There is a considerable shortage of scientists, doctors, dentists, social workers, so badly needed at this time, because the government did not recognize the seriousness of the situation.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government has failed over the years to develop the greatest wealth of this province, that of its children. Let us get this problem of education out of party politics and let us give the children of this province, regardless of race, creed, nationality or place of residence, the best education possible, in order to give this province the role of leader in this important field. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will permit me to say a word about the wonderful institution of learning, the Ottawa University, located in my constituency. It was started over a century ago as a college for Catholics in the Ottawa area and has now become a renowned university, whose graduates are found as professors in many other Ontario universities and colleges, in the professions, in business and in many other fields of endeavour. It is now admitting students of all races and religions and a large proportion of its teachers belong to a religion different from that of the founders of the institution.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister in a statement delivered to this Legislature last March 21, gave the reasons why Ottawa University should not receive grants from the government on a basis equal to other universities. I am not, at this time, going to discuss the statement. However, I would ask the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Education in the preparation of their estimates, to consider giving this institution its fair share of grants in view of their many statements in the past few months on equality of educational facilities for everyone in this province.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my hon. leader and many other hon. members on both sides of the House in saying how disappointed I am with the programme of the government in the Speech from the Throne and that I will vote in favour of the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver).

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I want to announce that tomorrow we will continue with this debate. There will be some legislation to be introduced and if we have time I would like to call some of the bills that are on the order paper in the names of hon. members of the Opposition, and perhaps deal with one or two of the resolutions that are there, too.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.40 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome, as guests in the west gallery students from Fairview Heights Public School, Cooksville and Ogden Public School, Toronto; and in the east gallery, students from Winona Drive Public School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham), in the absence of Mr. Gomme, from the standing committee on private bills, presented the committee's second report which was read as follows:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. Pr5, An Act respecting the board of education for the city of London.

Bill No. Pr8, An Act respecting the town of Smith's Falls.

Bill No. Pr9, An Act respecting the Riverdale Hospital.

Bill No. Pr26, An Act respecting the city of Barrie.

Bill No. Pr27, An Act respecting the W. F. Thomas Foundation.

Bill No. Pr28, An Act respecting the city of Peterborough.

Bill No. Pr30, An Act respecting Ottawa community chests.

Your committee would recommend that the following bill, having been withdrawn, be not reported:

Bill No. Pr6, An Act respecting the township of Pittsburgh and the city of Kingston.

Your committee would recommend that the fees less the penalties and the actual cost of printing be remitted on the following bills:

Bill No. Pr6, An Act respecting the township of Pittsburgh and the city of Kingston.

Bill No. Pr22, An Act to incorporate the Masonic Foundation of Ontario.

Bill No. Pr30, An Act respecting Ottawa community chests.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, before you take the vote to adopt this report, I, as a member of the House, would like to lay a grievance in regard to the conduct of the chairman of this particular committee. I think that someone who has the authority should take the chairman into the woodshed and give him a lesson on decorum, on parliamentary procedure, and on his responsibility to the committees that he is in charge of.

Certainly, when this committee opened, the chairman introduced a bill from the chair, commented on it, and made other comments from the chair without leaving the chair. I would say this is all right. I would say we could be flexible enough to overlook this. But when he calls the vote for those in agreement to a motion and fails to call the vote for those opposed; and when someone says "How about the opposed votes?" and four members put up their hands, and he makes a comment to the extent that: "There we are, the noble three!" There were four noble people there and I do not think that this kind of conduct by a chairman should be condoned.

All the members in that committee are there, elected by this House, and they have the right to get up and voice their opinions in regard to the bill and to vote how they see fit. And the chairman, I do not think, is in order to make that kind of snide comment.

I had the same experience in the committee on municipal, labour and legal bills, where the hon. Minister, I think, showed conduct unbecoming of an hon. Minister of the Crown in his high spirits towards the hon. members and the representatives there. I hope someone in authority will bring this to the attention of the people in this government, in the conduct of committee work.

Mr. Speaker: Report adopted.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts). Will the hon. Minister please inform the House whether a thorough investigation is being made regarding the finding of a number of freshly killed deer in the Bruce Peninsula a few days ago?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is yes. And as the investigation is proceeding both within the department and with the assistance of the Ontario Provincial Police, I am sure my hon. friend would not expect me to say any more than that at the present time.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko). Has the Ontario Liquor Control Board been provided by the Metropolitan Toronto Police with information, including documents, which might lead to criminal charges under part three of the criminal code against a distillery or other individuals? If so, is it the intention of the Ontario Liquor Control Board to pass this information on to the hon. Provincial Secretary, or to The Attorney General's Department for study and appropriate action?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the chairman of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario that the answer to the first question is no. Accordingly, the second question has no application.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question to ask you, sir. I did not send you notice of this question, but I think you will agree with me that it is a very legitimate one.

As you very well know, tomorrow at Innsbruck, Austria, the Canadian Olympic team will be playing against Czechoslovakia and then, on Saturday, against Russia; and possibly the results of these games will decide the championship. Certainly, it will decide the championship. I was going to send a wire to Rev. David Bauer, CSB, the coach of the team. I think it would be a very nice gesture if every hon. member of this House would associate themselves with me in this wire to our Olympic team, to show our support.

Mr. Speaker: You have permission to associate the House with the wire.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) a question in respect to procedure in regard to Bill No. 4, I think it is, The Apprenticeship Act. I understood that it was not the government's intention to send this bill to committee. I think that would be a mistake, Mr. Speaker, because this morning I received two long-distance calls from interested persons, let us say, who are very desirous of making presentations before the committee in regard to this bill, and I would urge the government to reassess its position in this respect.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is quite acceptable and agreeable to the government to send the bill on apprenticeship to committee, and that will be done.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, primarily because of the interest shown in this committee to study Grade 13, I thought I would just tell the hon. members of the House the personnel of this committee. The chairman will be: Mr. F. A. Hamilton, director of education from the Guelph Board of Education; Mr. D. J. Brousseau, principal of the Kapuskasing District High School; Dr. C. A. Brown, who is registrar of The Department of Education; Miss Mary Campbell, staff member of Parkdale Collegiate Institute in Toronto; Mr. A. H. Dalzell, assistant superintendent of secondary education in Sudbury; Mrs. Elise Grossberg, chairman of the Forest Hill Board of Education; Dr. R. W. B. Jackson, director of the department of education research, Ontario College of Education; Mr. J. F. Kinlin, assistant superintendent of the curriculum and textbook branch of The Department of Education; Mr. C. A. Mustard, superintendent of teacher education at the department; Mr. L. W. Rentner, staff member of Lisgar College Institute in Ottawa; Mr. J. R. Thomson, assistant superintendent of secondary education; Mr. L. W. Waddell, secretary of the Ontario School Headmasters' Association from Hamilton; Professor E. A. Walker of the department of English at Queen's University; and Dr. Robin Harris, principal of Innis College at the University of Toronto.

Mr. Troy: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. Possibly that wire might be better if it were not put out under your signature, being the Speaker of the House.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day. This morning perhaps hon. members who were in the buildings were aware of some gunfire in the vicinity of the buildings. Today is the twelfth anniversary of the succession to the throne of Queen Elizabeth II. This event was properly and formally marked this morning. I think all hon. members of this House would join with me in offering our congratulations to our sovereign on this very happy occasion of her twelfth anniversary. It is some measure, Mr. Speaker, of the rapidity with which the time goes by, when we think of her visit here some years ago when she was the Royal princess and realize that now she is the mother of three fine children and expecting another one shortly. It is interesting, and I was being a little introspective, thinking back to the time of the coronation and of the many events that have occurred in our world in that time. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, this is a sign that one is getting old, even though one leads a government that is only two years old.

But it is these events and these anniversaries as we mark them that give one some feeling of the really very important days in which we live and the great events that are taking place. I do hope that Her Majesty, her husband and her family will continue to enjoy good health and will continue to keep our affairs in the condition that they are in now. It may be uneasy but it is still peace.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Fifteenth order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. G. R. Carton (Armourdale): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to address this august body for the first time I am reminded of a story told by that distinguished young Chinese, Douglas Jung, the former federal Member of Parliament from Vancouver Centre. It concerns a certain American Senator who, because of his political prominence, was invited to be a head table guest at many and varied functions. Because of the frequency of these invitations, it often happened that he would arrive at the last minute and be uninformed as to the particular occasion for the gathering, the identity of its guest speaker, and other important details. On this particular occasion, he arrived at the luncheon, and was somewhat perplexed to find that, seated on his right, was a Chinese gentleman. Now the Senator was a portly, friendly, gregarious, bon-vivant type of individual who enjoyed talking with everyone at length, but, unfortunately, he could not speak Chinese. Consequently, he engaged in continuous discourse with the gentleman on his left, but not wishing completely to ignore the Chinese gentleman on his right, he turned to him after the first course and inquired "Likee soupee?" to which the Chinese gentleman gravely replied "Likee soupee". The Senator then smiled benignly, having done his duty.

At the conclusion of the luncheon, the chairman arose to announce that this, indeed, was a most special occasion, because as guest speaker they had the very distinguished Chinese scholar, Dr. Wellington Coo, who had been flown directly from Shanghai for the express purpose of addressing the gathering. Whereupon the Chinese gentleman on the right of the Senator, rose, proceeded to the speaker's rostrum, and delivered a most brilliant and illuminating address in the most precise and exact Oxford English. You can imagine the Senator's embarrassment, particularly when, after receiving a standing ovation and resuming his place at the head table, Dr. Coo tapped him on the shoulder and inquired "Likee speechee?"

Before bringing to this House a matter of the utmost importance and urgent concern to many constituents in the Armourdale riding, I would like, sir, to express a few personal observations of a rather general nature. First, may I say that I have listened avidly to the proceedings thus far, and have thoroughly enjoyed the general atmosphere of dignity which prevails on most occasions. This is due to the impartial and efficient manner in which you have conducted the business of this House. Yours is a tremendous responsibility, and I trust that we as members will always bear this in mind, so that even in the heat of debate, we will govern ourselves so as to enable you more easily and readily to make the required wise decisions and rulings necessitated from day to day. I cannot add to the personal tributes bestowed upon you so eloquently by the previous speakers, except that I wish you good health and infinite patience and wisdom as you preside over the deliberations of the 27th Legislature of the province of Ontario.

As a neophyte in politics, I have pondered the question so sincerely advanced by the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler) in which he queried the reasons why we, the members of this Legislature, sought our seats in parliament, and, indeed, why one enters any form of public life. I suggest that, should we analyze what constitutes a "happy life" which is basically what we all seek, we would find that it has five components: health, work, interests, friendships and the pursuit of an ideal. I suggest that other than health, which is God-given and so often man-destroyed, the aforementioned components are attained to a higher degree in the political arena than elsewhere. The relation of three of these components—work, interests, and friendships—to politics is self-evident to all of us in this Legislature as we go about our daily legislative routine.

What about the fifth component—the pursuit of an ideal? What higher ideal, what greater happiness can a man strive for and attain in his life than to serve his fellow man? Happiness is not a means to an end, but the end itself and each of us chooses the stepping-stones toward it that best suit our particular stride, temperament, education and environment. To strive to achieve this great ideal of bettering the lot of our fellow man, is, I submit, Mr. Speaker, the reason why we are sitting in this Legislature today. To attain this purpose, we must never be satisfied with things as they are, we must never be content to fixate and vegetate. All the past achievements of this House must become starting points to still greater achievements.

Although I have been here for such a short time, I am aware of the general atmosphere of this House—its active interest in the life of this province and its willingness to break with the worn-out patterns of the past. Young as it is, this 27th Legislature has already shown its eagerness to use every opportunity to aid the growth of this province and it will not shirk its responsibility to answer for its actions. I am proud to be a member of this Legislature because I have detected in all its proceedings thus far a strong sense of sincerity on all sides. In my own mind, I am convinced that the business that comes before it is unquestionably devoted to the advancement of the best interests of the citizens of Ontario. We must, however, continue to make room for the minds of other people. Prejudice is a sign of immaturity, and a person is scarcely civilized who cannot listen to both sides of an argument. It is our function as the government to propose something better to be substituted. Think of this: every political measure, every business action and every moral judgment is in the nature of an alternative, not to be pronounced good or bad, except that it is better or worse for the end in view than some other equally definite course which might be adopted instead of it. We live today in a welter of conflicting interests, and therefore we need standards to which we can hold fast. Politicians, like private citizens, are searching for an ideal which we may never quite reach. But we can attain it in little pieces of trying.

May I now, Mr. Speaker, voice my personal opinion on two statements made repetitiously by both parties in Opposition, namely, that we have been in power for 20 years—presumably, an unforgivable sin in itself—and that we have been and are the party of the big interests. With all due respect, may I point out, and proudly so, that not only have the Progressive-Conservatives been in power in Ontario for twenty years, but since 1903—a period of over 60 years—we have been in power continuously except for a brief coalition government from 1919-1921, and the Hepburn regime, an era about which the kindest thing one can do is simply make no comment.

That the province of Ontario is the undisputed leader; that we contribute half the revenue to the federal coffers; that we produce half the gross national output, are self-evident facts of undisputed and continuous good government—facts which the people of this province so overwhelmingly recognized last September 25. What is equally self-evident, and what the Opposition has failed to realize, and continue to do so even to this day, is the unmitigated truth, the undeniable fact, that the Progressive-Conservative Party is in all ways a people's party, a party which represents all classes, all races, all religions, all ages, and all sections of this province of opportunity.

Indeed, sir, I would like to go on record, along with my fellow Progressive-Conservatives, as being a spokesman for the small businessman rather than being a champion of big business. I have always considered the small businessman to be the backbone and driving-force of our nation, and my heart grows a little sadder each time that I read or hear of our small companies being purchased by, or merged with, large companies. I urge this government most strongly to take every possible step to delay the demise of the small business, which is hastened by such difficulties as heavy succession duty tax liabilities when the principal dies, by lack of sufficient working capital, and by inability to profit by the know-how disclosed by modern and expensive research. That the Progressive-Conservative Party is aware of the need to stimulate and retain the growth of small businesses is indicated by the work being done by the Ontario Development Agency and by the Ontario Trade Crusade, and I urge that every possible consideration be given to the continuation and expansion of this work.

May I commend most heartily, sir, the continued and increased aid given by this government in the training of retarded children. About ten years ago, I became personally interested in the plight of these children and their parents. At that time, no help was forthcoming from the government and the parents were called on to make unrealistic and impossible sacrifices. Through the efforts of a few dedicated and zealous persons, aided by interested private citizens and service clubs, the retarded children movement was started and has gained momentum to the degree that we now have reached whereby the provincial government pays half the approved capital costs of construction and pays a grant of $300 per annum for those who attend half days and $550 for those attending full time.

I think it is an acknowledged fact that the province of Ontario is the leading jurisdiction on the North American continent, respecting trainable retarded children. In this connection, because of the tremendous part played by service clubs on behalf of the retarded children and especially at the beginning, I urge, as has already the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Kerr) and the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Braithwaite), that this government through the proper channels, make representation for federal legislation enabling bona fide service clubs to hold properly conducted raffles and draws to raise funds for charitable purposes. I am of the opinion that very few of us realize the tremendous contributions made by thousands of service clubs throughout our country to charitable and other worthwhile organizations. The service clubs perform a function and fill a need which could not be duplicated through any other medium, including the government, and I urge that every measure be taken to facilitate their raising the funds they need for their community projects.

I commend the youthful and very able hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) on the tremendous programme embarked upon by his department in the face of new and overwhelming problems. May I suggest that consideration be given by him to the possibility of instituting a course in our schools on the subject of creative thinking? It is an established fact that, burdened with a curriculum of established texts, the colleges have slighted the creative mind. Literature is scant on the subject, and yet fresh ideas are what this is made of. Much is being done to develop the practical side of our minds: We go to school; we read history; we study logic; we learn mathematics; we debate and deliberate, but isn't it a fact that, unless we are forced by rare circumstances to do so, most of us do not even try to use our creative minds?

John Masefield once said, "Man's body is faulty, his mind is untrustworthy, but his imagination has made him remarkable". How many times have we heard people say, "If only I had gone to college, what a success I could have been"? Yet higher education does not necessarily induce creative power. On the contrary, those who go to work in their teens tend to pack into their memories first-hand experiences which later form the richest fuel for creative lamps, and those creative lamps are well cared for through the habit of effort which these young people have been forced to acquire. Isn't it true that today, thousands upon thousands of letters are received by government leaders, Opposition leaders, editors, columnists, etc., all deploring the country's difficulties? These letters are devoted to analyzing the causes of these difficulties, very intelligently so, in many cases. However, once the analysis is made, the energy is spent, the required creative spark is lacking.

We, in our personal lives, cry out for improvement; political parties at every level call out for improvement; every phase of our municipal life, our provincial life, our national life and international affairs call out for improvement; and in nearly every case, the key to such improvement is more and better creative thinking. If we would but put half the effort we exert in finding out facts to creating ideas to resolve our problems, then our personal lot, that of our political parties, that of our country and of our world would all be a great deal better. It seems to me that if we could somehow combine the benefits of a broader grasp of life, a more orderly way of thinking and clearer judgment, all which higher education gives us, with a stimulated perception of life in all its phases, then our youth would be better armed to meet the challenges which face it in the years ahead.

Before leaving this part of my address, I pay tribute to the hon. Prime Minister of this province, and the leader of my party (Mr. Robarts). I have always enjoyed working for candidates in elections, whether municipal, provincial, or federal. I must believe wholeheartedly in what I am doing and in the person I am working for. May I say most sincerely that never did a candidate have a leader more acceptable to the man on the street, nor has any government ever provided a finer record of achievement to carry to the electorate. Much has been written about the ability and accomplishments of the hon. Prime Minister, and, as always, there would be a difference of opinion as to the main qualities contributing to his success. I have no hesitation whatsoever in saying that, in my opinion, apart from outstanding ability, which is a prime requisite, a great leader must have humility, tolerance, and the gift of getting along with his fellow man. These are exemplified to the highest degree in our hon. Prime Minister. I know that the Opposition is in accord with me in this statement for I detect an admiration for the hon. Prime Minister in them, possibly given somewhat grudgingly on occasion, but nevertheless quite apparent.

May I also add that I personally have great respect for the Opposition leaders—the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), whose eloquence is, in my opinion, without parallel in this House today, and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), whom I regard as an old friend even though I do not know him personally, because he so ably represents the riding in which I was born and educated.

The sincerity and ability of these two men are beyond question and I wish them many more years serving the interests of the people of this province in the Opposition ranks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to preface the remainder of my address by my contention that the government led by this hon. Prime Minister will not be a carte blanche rubber-stamping body of yes-men. I think that this has been self-evident by the addresses given thus far, and I hope to make a further contribution in this regard this afternoon.

I deplore complacency, smugness, arrogance or intolerance in any member of the government or of the Opposition, but because of the overwhelming mandate given this government by the electorate, it is not only important that we government members not have these qualities, but what is more important, that we do not even have the appearance of having them.

I believe that we formed the government on September 25 last on two strong foundations:

1. We represented the Progressive-Conservative Party led by our dynamic leader, which, to me, indicates the faith of the voters in the basic philosophy and general policies of the hon. Prime Minister and his Cabinet; and

2. We fielded a majority of the best candidates which, to me, indicates that the voters have confidence that those elected will, having regard to all the circumstances, speak on all problems brought to the floor of this House and will exercise their best judgment in finding solutions thereto.

No one is perfect and, certainly, no political party is perfect. I respectfully submit that not only will the Progressive-Conservative Party in this Legislature provide the government but it will, at the same time, provide its own effective, alert and well-informed opposition.

I now present to you, sir, a matter of the utmost importance and grave concern to many of the constituents of the riding of Armourdale. It is one that faced me on the first day when I timidly began my personal canvass, determined to visit as many homes in my riding as possible. I knocked on the first door, full of enthusiasm, a smile on my face, my hands full of literature, and having committed to memory a number of facts and figures relating to the legislative record of the Robarts administration.

To my dismay, when the door was opened I found that neither my constituent nor myself could hear each other, or even ourselves, speak above the deafening din of the work in progress on the widening of Highway 401. I thought the lady was shouting at me to go away—which I was more than willing to do—and not until she caught my arm and pulled me in and shut the door to enable us to carry on a screaming conversation, was I aware of her plight.

She took me through her house, pointing out the unhappy conditions to which she, unwarned, returned after her summer holidays. Without exaggeration, the highway turmoil had left a layer, one-eighth of an inch thick, of dust, soot, and grime on every solitary thing in the house. She told me that it was now impossible to serve dinner until all were seated, because if the food were put on beforehand, it would instantly be covered with the constantly falling dust.

Her husband had suffered a slight heart attack, aggravated by these conditions, and the woman herself was in a highly nervous state between trying to keep the house clean and crying alternately. As a Progressive-Conservative candidate and, to those affected, therefore a partner in this highway crime, I was uncomfortable.

Hon. members can readily see what a profound shock this was, on my very first canvass call; and I must confess that, on leaving, I wondered whether I should not concentrate on the extreme north part of my riding or possibly the extreme south end, because Highway 401 pierces the very heart of Armourdale. I even mentally counted the potential voters bordering Highway 401, and rationalized that my fortune at the polls would not depend on this particular injured group.

However, there and then, for better or for worse, I made up my mind that, if I were entering public life, there could be no better way to find out if I were temperamentally suited to it, and that I would visit every home within a radius of three blocks of the highway, meeting my constituents under these most unfavourable conditions. I am happy to report that I did just that, and even happier to report that, on election day, I carried this entire area by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. Speaker, if my complaint was only for the unbearable temporary conditions suffered by hundreds of my constituents—the noise, the mud, the dirt, the filth, the grime, the frayed nerves—my story would be told and, as construction advanced, there would eventually be a happy ending. Tragically, this is not the case. I have come to know most of these residents personally, and they are rational, decent, law-abiding, middle-class citizens who accept the fact that we are all called upon at times to make certain sacrifices for the betterment of the province as a whole. This they were and are prepared to do.

However, in my opinion, there is a vast difference between sacrifice and what, for lack of other words, I call—and I use the words advisedly—"highway robbery". The crux of the matter, sir, is that unless land is in fact expropriated, there is no legal basis for payment of compensation.

In such matters, we are presently governed by The Expropriation Procedures Act, 1964, which came into being on January 1 this year. This Act was passed by Legislature last year after a committee, comprising members of all parties, had given careful consideration to all matters relating to expropriation. Nowhere in my research in Hansard or in the report of the committee, have I been able to find any debate on the question, or any questions raised at any time, regarding compensation where no land was in fact expropriated.

On my first reading of the new Act, I felt hopeful that the words in section 7—"injurious affection where in fact no land is expropriated" might provide an opportunity for compensation over and above that for actual expropriation. However, I am informed by the solicitor for The Department of Highways that the interpretation of "injurious affection" would not under any circumstances be interpreted by the courts so as to make compensable any damage suffered by reason of devaluation of real estate, decreasing of safety factors, increasing of health hazards from noise, vibration, and so on. I am, however, still of the opinion that this is a new statute, with new provisions, new words and, that failing all other remedies, it should be tested in our courts by the injured parties.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware of all of the ramifications involved in our government's making such claims generally legally compensable—if allowed to get out of hand, it would open up a whole new and terrifying concept, bringing all new development if not to a definite standstill, at least to a major slowdown.

I have also made an exhaustive research into the laws governing such cases in practically all the jurisdictions on the North American continent, and nowhere can I find favourable statutory law. In view of this, I could rationalize with my conscience and hide behind this curtain of existing legislation—the hon. members of this Legislature could all voice their sympathy to the parties concerned and sit back on our legislative haunches saying, "Too bad, too bad; it's just one of those things". Or, perhaps, I could take the advice of one of my political friends and say: "Some of my friends are in favour of paying compensation to these people; some are against it—and I am for my friends". None of these alternatives appeals to me; in fact, they are diametrically opposite to my personal views and beliefs.

During this session thus far, we have heard, and will continue to hear, exhortations and pleas on behalf of small or large segments of our population. These are directed to bettering the day-to-day living conditions of our citizens, and both the government and the Opposition members rise to champion their particular causes, assuming the role of a mother hen caring for her brood.

This is as it should be. Already we have heard pleas for farmers, for businessmen, for unions and many other important matters—all illustrating that it is the role of the government to assist and aid each and every one in the province. And this is my basic philosophy of the role of government—assisting and aiding.

This being so, it is obvious that I could never under any circumstances whatsoever condone the government's doing anything to actively hurt, injure, or damage financially a small segment of law-abiding citizens for the benefit of the remainder of the province. I would go one step further—the citizens of this province do not want to gain at the expense of an inoffensive few. We all want to pay our fair share. There is an inherent sense of fair play in each and every one of us. I know that if it were possible for each hon. member of this House to visit some of the homes concerned and see the damage for themselves, their views, without exception, would concur with mine.

Before Highway 401 came weaving and screeching through the heart of Armourdale, it was one of the finest and secluded residential areas in Metro Toronto, encompassing houses in the $20,000-$40,000 range. As hon. members all know, a home is a major investment made by the average person in his lifetime. It is the embodiment and fulfilment of his dreams—his status symbol—his refuge from the workaday world—his nest-egg should he wish to mortgage it to obtain immediate funds in an emergency. It is, in short, his castle!

The homes with which I am concerned are those immediately adjacent to this 12-lane gargantuan monster on which will pound some 185,000 motor vehicles a day. The distances between the highway and these private properties vary, but range from five, 12, 26, 30 feet and more. It is a considered opinion that, in general, these houses have at once decreased in value 25 to 35 per cent. Certain of these houses are now unsaleable; the mortgages on others cannot be renewed; and existing mortgages on some of them now exceed their present depreciated value. A small office building bought in 1962 was sold last week at a loss of $40,000, being the entire life savings of the owners, a school-teacher and his wife. I suggest that it is completely unrealistic for The Department of Highways to state that, in fact, the loss in value is not so great, or that eventually the depreciated values will partially recover, or that it is taking steps to eliminate the noise of those 185,000 cars per day. This is like throwing a drowning man a doughnut as a lifesaver. I further state that there is not one of us here today who, if he were to do some honest-to-goodness soul-searching, would not thank his lucky stars that he does not find himself in the shoes of these homeowners.

Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that this problem is not insoluble. I further believe that our thinking on this subject is antiquated and unrealistic. Highway 401 as widened is, or at least was, when first conceived, the biggest highway on this continent. If this is the case, then surely a government which can think big in terms of construction, can think equally big in finding a means to right a wrong. How many 12- and 16-lane highways do we propose to construct? Surely this is perhaps the only one—there must be a point beyond which, for many reasons, future widenings would be impossible. Surely this is an exception to the ordinary course of events where we add one or two lanes. Surely we do not contemplate more than one highway carrying 185,000 cars a day.

I would point out, sir, that if I remember correctly, one of the reasons advanced for the extreme widening of Highway 401 was economic. If memory serves me correctly, I believe that the total estimated cost for the Metro area portion of the widening was $63 million, of which only eight per cent or a little more than $5 million was required for additional acquisition of land. This was in contrast with, and again I am relying on memory, a figure of 50 per cent of cost ordinarily required for land acquisition. In other words, if a new and comparable highway had been built further to the north, the cost would have been $116 million, as contrasted to $63 million—thus a saving of $53 million. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are saving the taxpayers of this province the sum of $53 million, at the expense of some 300 to 400 homeowners across the top of Metro Toronto, whose plight could be remedied for an insignificant part of the money saved.

I suggest that the problem with which I am concerned is a new one, something different from those of yesterday. Today's battles cannot be fought on yesterday's battlefields; no one can hope to solve them with yesterday's solutions. There are many ways to skin a cat, and yet, sometimes, we overlook the obvious. I am reminded of the story of the tractor-trailer which became wedged between the pavement and the overhead girders of an underpass in northern Ontario. The traffic was stalled far back on both sides. Provincial highway experts were called but worked in vain. Some one suggested burning off the girders with an acetylene torch. Finally, a little boy standing by suggested, "Why not let the air out of the tires?" It worked. Everyone cheered, and the flow of traffic resumed.

I suggest that the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) re-examine the position of the primarily affected homes—expropriate and we will all cheer—and the flow of 185,000 vehicles per day will go on without grievous personal loss to any individual. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the role of the hon. Minister of Highways and his department has not been easy? At all times they have been most sympathetic and most considerate to the injured homeowners from this area. They have met with various deputations, both large and small, and, in fact, are presently considering a brief presented by the 401 Ratepayers Association.

I have two thoughts on expropriation—one being total expropriation by the department of the first-line houses, at which time, the department could consider, having regard to all circumstances, whether it would be more advantageous to establish a green belt or whether it wished to hold the houses until it could sell them when values somewhat recovered—which it has the resources to do without serious loss. In the final analysis, the net loss to the province would be practically negligible. There is a great deal of difference between an individual who is forced to sell immediately to avoid bankruptcy, and a government which has the resources to hang on and await more favourable circumstances.

The second proposal I wish to advance is to consider the possibility of expropriating one foot of land—as the federal government did in the airport situation—and pay a price for this strip of land commensurate to the estimated decrease in the value of the house. Another suggestion is that, where a road is closed, it is legally possible to compensate. This could be used as a means of compensating some of the home-owners affected; provided, again, that the amount awarded is in line with the estimated damage suffered. There is ample existing precedent for this latter method already in the files of the department.

Mr. Speaker, it is with the deepest convictions and the utmost sincerity that I bring this matter to the floor of this Legislature. I have lived with this problem, night and day, for six months, and am reminded of it twice daily as I drive past the area, and an additional four or five times daily as I hear from my constituents. I have seen the expression on the faces of some of them, as they wearily fought and pleaded during the past year, to the detriment of their health and business. I do not like what I see, sir, in some of their expressions, because slowly, one by one, it appears that they are giving up the fight, resigned to the inevitable fact that they cannot fight the government. I submit that they should not have to fight the government; that the government is of the people, by the people, for the people—not against them. I trust that every possible avenue will be explored so that redress and justice may be rendered to the injured homeowners and to those in neighbouring ridings in like circumstances.

I am not asking this government to give something; I am asking, yes, begging, them to restore something—to restore to these people not only the loss they have suffered through no fault of their own, but to restore what to me is equally important—their faith and trust in the government. Mr. Speaker, I conclude by stating a very simple philosophy: where there's a will, there's a way. I urge this government to show my constituents that there is a will, and I know the way will follow.

Mr. E. G. Freeman (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my congratulations to you, sir, on the excellent work you are doing as Speaker in this honourable House. I know that your decisions are and will be fair and just to all of us. I have listened with great interest to the remarks of those who have spoken previously, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that for the most part these public utterances, whether they be of laudatory or critical nature, reflect the feeling of pride in, and great hopes for our province and all its people. We, who meet in this House as representatives of the people in our ridings, have in common many basic problems. Then, too, many of us have problems peculiar to our own areas. It would appear to me that those problems which are of a more or less province-wide nature do get a great deal of attention and publicity through the various news media. However, Mr. Speaker, those problems which are of great interest to each of us, to the people we represent, are so often those which are bedevilling us in our own home areas.

Many ridings in Ontario are compact and heavily populated. Some are only ten to 15 square miles in size. Many are hundreds and even thousands of square miles in area and, unhappily, sparsely populated. I have the privilege and the honour of representing an area of this great province which belongs in the latter category. Fort William riding and those to the west of us to the Manitoba border, as well as some east of us, are large in area and very thinly populated. These great areas have within their confines the immense and immensely valuable resources, providentially your heritage and mine.

Mr. Speaker, I would today like to speak to you and through you to all in the House about this which is our great good fortune. Fort William, the largest city in northwestern Ontario, forms with her sister city, Port Arthur, the western terminus of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Together the two Lake-head cities are the world's largest grain-handling ports. Industries include pulp and paper, transportation, aircraft, buses, trailer transports, pleasure boats, shipbuilding, forest products and fabricated goods. The twin cities form one of Canada's most attractive communities. At this time, Mr. Speaker, and in order to briefly round out the picture of the Lakehead which I would like to present, may I quote some figures which may be of interest to you? Cargo handled by the Lakehead ports soared to more than 15 million tons in 1963, an increase of about 2.5 million tons over the previous year. The exact totals were 15,083,785 tons in 1963 and 12,549,511 tons in 1962. A total of 1,455 ships used the port which was open three days longer than in 1962. Grain cargoes totalled 9,603,000 tons; iron ore, 3,343,000 tons; general cargo was also up substantially to 634,000 tons.

Several northwestern centres reported good construction years in 1963 with the two Lakehead cities showing a total of nearly $20 million. The smaller communities to the east and west in northwestern Ontario will undoubtedly bring this total to well above the $30 million mark. Economists, businessmen and public leaders join in predicting a continuation of healthy growth trends in Canada in this present year. In no less degree a steady upward trend is forecast in northwestern Ontario, with several major projects already officially announced for this new year.

The pulp and paper industry, and the base metals industry, have firm plans to invest considerable sums of money in expanding and increasing many of their operations. This is good for everyone, Mr. Speaker.

Our frontiers roll ever northward. Government has an increasingly important and necessary role to play in this total development. Building access roads, improving many existing access roads, bringing the trans-Canada highway west of the Lakehead up to approved standards, are just a few of the many projects to which this government is now devoting some attention and must give much more attention in the immediate future.

Tremendous resources in lands, in forests, and in mines are literally begging for planned development. That portion of the present forest industry in northwestern Ontario producing logs for lumber, railway ties, poles, bridge and drainage timbers, plywood and so on, almost constantly faces problems in financing, production, and marketing due to uncertain long-term sources of supply of raw material of the forests.

The forest industries are vital to the economies of the cities, the towns and the villages in the northwest. The provision of raw material for these so-called secondary industries need not restrict or interfere with the pulp and paper segment of the industry.

These secondary industries have, from time to time, been assured of an adequate supply of raw materials by this government. Surely now is the time for this government to take immediate steps to make timber available to all forest industries on a long-term basis.

Full use of all tree species is not being made at present, and this results in terrific waste of a large portion of the growth. Tree species such as poplar and birch could be economically harvested at the same time as lumber and pulp species if there is a product demand for them.

Lakehead College now offers a forestry course granting degrees, and I am assured that this college is very interested in expanding research facilities. I firmly believe the government should urge upon the federal authorities the need for assistance in the installation and operation of a forest laboratory in northwestern Ontario to develop and promote the full use of all tree species, and to determine new methods of utilization as well as to develop new products from our forests.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would remind this House that the forest areas originally set aside by The Department of Lands and Forests, for the needs of the mining industry, in localities where there was a concentration of mines, was based on the then known requirements. Their areas have proven to be of immense benefit to the mining industry, and this benefit has permitted the mining industry to use the timber products in furthering underground development at a most reasonable cost. However, the constant expansion of the industry has increased the consumption of timber products far beyond the original estimate. I suggest that it is reasonable to expect further increase in consumption of these timber products.

The people in our great northwest who are aware of the gravity of this matter believe that The Department of Lands and Forests and The Department of Mines should take steps to have additional areas set aside for existing mines within the mining districts, to meet the needs of the mining industry within the foreseeable future.

Mr. Speaker, there has been dynamic expansion in the number of boats being "trailered" by the large and growing number of tourists, as well as the local travelling public. There is a most lamentable lack or even absence of ramps and landings to service and encourage the tourists and local traffic in the northwest, as compared with the forward-looking state of Michigan which has established more than 400 boat ramps and landings to encourage and accommodate the increasing boat-travelling public.

This government should continue and accelerate its programme to establish boat ramps and landing facilities in provincial parks, camping grounds and highway areas, giving access to lakes and waterways in heavy use by both tourists and local traffic.

All levels of government and industry have come to recognize, because of rapid changes caused by technological improvements, economic competition and rapid labour force expansion, the critical and intensifying need for upgrading supervisory and management skills and practices, and for developing community leadership.

Sir, the Quetico conference and training centre in northwestern Ontario has for some years conducted successful programmes designed to do something about this critical need. The centre, during this period of years, has proved its ability to operate in a most modest way with minimum resources and facilities and is now prepared to expand its programme the better to meet this need.

The centre requires aid to expand its programme; aid from the governments of Canada and Ontario is available on a shared basis to training institutions under the provisions of various schedules of The Canada Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act. Schedule 4: training for supervisory personnel in business and industry; schedule 5: re-training for the unemployed; schedule 10: capital grants programme.

The government of Canada has adopted the policy of approving such aid only through the government of the province involved. It has indicated it is ready to provide aid to the Ontario centre through the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, this government should recognize Quetico centre's programme under the provisions of schedules 4, 5 and 10 of The Canada Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and make all the benefits provided under the schedules available to the Quetico centre.

The Department of Lands and Forests is surely aware of the increasing number of United States tourists who are flying their own planes into remote lakes in our northwest. Some are commercial aircraft, and are being flown into such lakes ostensibly on a health and pleasure permit.

Commercial houseboats and other craft operate freely in Canadian waters from US bases, to the detriment and to the disadvantage of our tourist operators. Conservation laws are being violated almost daily by these people, with Lands and Forests, customs and immigration, and police officials being virtually powerless to regulate and control these visitors who do not at present need to check out of Canada.

Our people in the northwest are most anxious to see something done about this matter. They are prepared to recommend to the government that senior officials of The Ontario Department of Lands and Forests, The Ontario Department of Travel and Publicity, The Department of the Attorney General, the federal Department of Justice, The Department of Transport, The Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and The Department of Revenue, set up a joint committee immediately to examine, regulate and control such traffic and, if necessary, recommend legislation designed to curtail the gross violation and exploitation of our territory and resources which is daily growing more serious.

Mr. Speaker, another matter which I believe should be brought to the attention of this government is that of the Indian people living in the area between Red Lake and the Manitoba border. A great number of the approximately 4,000 of these people are living in wigwams and small, old shacks. They are straddling the starvation line a large part of the time because they are without steady remunerative work.

An all-weather pilot road which they could build themselves, with some monetary help when other work is not available to them, would solve some of their more urgent problems, including about 10 cents per pound freight they pay on all their food supplies. This road would be the initial step in a good solid road to resources and, in fact, might turn out to be a very logical link in a second or northern trans-Canada highway.

At the outset this road would pass through fairly well timbered land which is the property of the Crown, and from which this government would derive certain revenues since timber is in demand at the mines. It could be considered a logging road and cut under the supervision of The Department of Lands and Forests in connection with their forest management plans. The government could do well to initiate at once the building of this road, budgeting $5,000 per month through The Department of Mines, The Department of Lands and Forests and The Department of Highways. The building of this road might be carried on as an all-year round unemployment relief project for the unemployed among these 4,000 Indians, in order to provide expanding opportunities for increased employment and trade and effect rising standards of living.

Mr. Speaker, the total development of this province is the concern of every citizen. Each area of the province is dependent to some extent upon the others. I would hope most sincerely that this government clearly sees its opportunities, its responsibilities and the pressing need for action. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. Bales (York Mills): Mr. Speaker, these are impressionable times for new members of this Legislature. We come here with a desire to contribute to the work of this House, but with little detailed knowledge of its procedures, its customs, and its practices. We knew when we came we had much to learn. This is one of the challenges of the job we sought.

In the short time that we have been here, I have come to appreciate not only the importance of the position of Speaker, but also your influence as the holder of the office. You have made a splendid impression upon us and I, for one, appreciate the pleasantly frank explanations of the rulings when you have given them. We have much to learn from you and I congratulate you on your election.

I would also like to congratulate the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler) and the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard) in their abilities shown in moving and seconding the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

On our desks there is a directory titled The Ontario Government Services. In that directory is included certain historical data. There is a list of Speakers, and the fifth Speaker in this Legislature was a Mr. Charles Clarke, who represented the constituency then known as Centre Wellington. He was a Liberal. He apparently served in this office for some seven years.

In looking at the list of Clerks of the Assembly I found that the second Clerk appointed in 1892 was a gentleman by the same name and he apparently served in the latter capacity for 15 years. There is a book in the legislative library by Charles Clarke, published in 1908 after his death, entitled 60 Years in Upper Canada. My reason for mentioning this book is simply to emphasize that as we approach the centenary year of 1967 I believe that increasing emphasis should be placed on the history of this province and country. Colonel Clarke was a member, Speaker and Clerk of this House in the early days, in an unique position to record much of the early history. I am pleased he has set out his impressions on procedure and legislation of the House and also something of the notable people who served here in the early days and contributed substantially to the development of this province. I hope other Speakers may have kept similar memoirs.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to represent the riding known as York Mills. It is one of the new ridings created by this House a year ago, and is the north section of Metropolitan Toronto, being the northeast part of the township of North York.

I would very much like to explain briefly something of the background of the riding and touch on the problems that concern not only its people but those of other similar urban areas. This riding was formerly part of York East, an old and traditional riding, at one time represented in this House by the late George S. Henry, Premier of the province. I think that probably only the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) and probably the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) were here when the late Mr. Henry served.

This riding, known as York East, was captured by the present hon. member for the riding still known as York East (Mr. Beckett) in 1951, and at that time his riding included the townships of Scarborough, East York, the eastern part of North York and the town of Leaside. In 1955 this riding was divided into two, and by the redistribution bill of 1963 York-Scarborough was divided into four and the riding of York East into three. It is indicative of the growth that has taken place between the years 1951 and 1963, that the representation for the area covered by the original riding increased from one member to seven.

The rapid growth of York Mills started in 1945 and has continued ever since. Originally there were farms, today it is entirely urban.

This riding is not unique and has no problems that are not shared by other ridings as well. Today the hon. member for Armourdale (Mr. Carton) preceded me. He has an acute problem that is shared by my old friend, the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young), by the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Braithwaite) and the hon. member for Scarborough North (Mr. Wells). This problem involves us all—sometimes to a greater or lesser degree.

With respect to the other hon. members, I would say of the hon. member for Armourdale that the people of that riding have the most serious problem of them all. There was an established area and Highway 401, of necessity, had to cut through existing streets and developments. We will press for a solution to that problem because it is urgent and fair. We must do all we can for the people we represent.

In York Mills, we have all of the things you might expect to find in suburbia, but at the same time we have some very serious gaps in our community.

The hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop) spoke effectively of the need for additional hospitals in the Metropolitan area. The survey of hospital needs in Metropolitan Toronto catalogues these requirements for the next 20 years. While people can be justly proud of the development that has taken place, we have to face up to the fact that there is a serious hospital shortage and a solution for this must be found. It used to be that a hospital board, by a campaign, could raise sufficient money to finance hospital construction, but that is no longer the case. Mistaken though they may be, people have the impression that by paying their hospital insurance premiums they are also contributing to the cost of construction of hospitals.

Today the federal government makes a grant to hospitals. This province has recently increased its grant. North York township in 1963 levied a one mill on the taxes as a contribution towards hospitals in that township and there are now strong indications that Metropolitan Toronto will revert to its previous policy of making grants.

Each level of government recognizes the need and all of them are contributing, but in total, sir, the contributions are not sufficient. The hospital survey clearly indicates a hospital shortage. As an example, in North York township, with a population of over 300,000 people, there are 467 beds available for active treatment. Our various levels of government are each taking some responsibility, but the hospital boards are left to solve the residual problem of finding the balance of the monies either to pay for construction already completed or, more difficult, to find additional money needed to begin the next addition.

I believe that the running of the hospitals should be left to the individual boards, admittedly with strong guidance from the hospital services commission. The monies to solve these shortages must be provided, and some level of government must take the initiative so that the required hospitals and additions may actually be built. I cannot escape the conclusion that the province is the logical one to assume that responsibility.

I believe that we should use the credit of this province, just as we use it for Hydro and other requirements, and by use of that credit find the necessary finances and construct hospitals as they are now required.

As a lawyer and a former municipal councillor, there is a matter that has been of concern to me for some time and that is in reference to the Ontario Municipal Board. This board was established many years ago as a supervisory body for municipalities. Initially its purpose was to ensure that a municipality should not borrow beyond its ability to repay. As the problems of municipalities have increased the board has come to deal with many matters other than those originally contemplated. They function as an impartial supervisor of municipal councils' decisions.

With the rapid increase in urban development, the use of land is becoming increasingly important and if you live in urban areas, particularly those surrounding Toronto, you cannot but be conscious of the effect unexpected changes in zoning can bring. Sometimes this is beneficial, sometimes not. We cannot take a sterile approach to zoning, that nothing must change, for, in fact, many undeveloped areas do change and do require change. At times redevelopment is not only warranted, but necessary. As the city reaches out into the suburbs, vacant land becomes scarce and it is natural that change in density or use must take place.

My concern in reference to this matter is for the protection of people who seek to go before the board. We realize that the board acts in an impartial way but, just for protection, there should be a basis of appeal from its decisions. At the present time, under The Ontario Municipal Boards Act, the appeal is to the Cabinet in the name of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. A few years ago, an appeal was made to the Cabinet in reference to a matter, and at that time the Cabinet attempted to refer the matter back to the municipal board for rehearing. This procedure was challenged in the courts, and the courts stated they could not do so. The Cabinet could hear the matter itself or it could refuse the appeal, but it could not refer it to others.

(Mr. W. G. Noden takes the chair.)

I believe that a change from the present arrangement should take place. A few years ago, following this decision by the courts, there was a change in the Act respecting the municipal board and today the Cabinet may vary or rescind the decision of the board, or it may refer it back to the Ontario Municipal Board for rehearing. I do not believe that the same board which heard it originally should hear it a second time and while it might result in a different decision, that is not likely.

In my view, the appeal from the Ontario Municipal Board should be to a judge of the Supreme Court or any county court. I know that there may be frivolous appeals in these regards, but surely we can devise a system whereby those seeking to appeal can be required to substantiate the reasons and the need to a judge before the actual appeal is granted.

The second matter that has created problems in reference to the board is that the board has the right to vary or rescind its order even after the order is given. It would be analogous to a situation where a judge, having given a decision, subsequently changes his mind and gives another. I believe that this power of the board is unwarranted and the fact that it has been rarely used does not mean it should be there. It has been used and I think it should be carefully looked into.

Much progress has been made, Mr. Speaker, in the field of education in this province over the last few years! We have heard numerous references to this during the debate on the Speech from the Throne. The rate of primary and secondary school construction is good and changes in curriculum have developed, particularly in the secondary schools. The government deserves much credit for the formation of the new universities that are developing and I am pleased to see reference in the Speech from the Throne to a Crown corporation to be established to provide the necessary monies for university construction.

This problem is not yet solved by any means. The basis of solution has been established and it will require vigorous action to bring the present plans to fruition, and on time. My more immediate concern is in reference to training in technology for those who have finished their secondary school education.

In the report on automation and social change, it is pointed out that according to experience in European countries, we should be training a greater number of technologists than professional engineers, preferably in the ratio of five to one. Last year the situation in Canada was actually reversed in that four engineers graduated for every technologist.

We all want the economic expansion and development of this province to continue. We realize that this is a necessity and that we must have a sufficient number of trained personnel to fill the jobs. It used to be matriculation was accepted as a satisfactory standard. The same is not true today and will not be true again.

In the statistics given by The Department of Labour in Ottawa, it is shown that the percentage of job opportunities for unskilled and semi-skilled labour are decreasing, and this at a substantial rate. Industry and commerce simply require greater abilities and skills. Between the beginning of the war and 1962 the proportion of job opportunities in this country for unskilled and semi-skilled persons decreased from 70 per cent to 30 per cent. At the same time, the opportunities for technicians suitably trained increased from less than ten to 30 per cent; this trend will continue.

The hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) and his department have recognized the problem and new institutions are being established. This programme will have to be accelerated. A number of studies have been made in the matter of technical education, and one of these was made for the board of education for the township of North York. The conclusions of that study are similar to others and clearly indicate that industry and commerce require more skilled workers and that jobs are available for those qualified by training. We have a greater number of students in our schools each year and we must encourage these students not only to complete their academic courses, but to use this as a basis for advanced training.

On the other hand, job opportunities for the professional worker are increasing slowly, but it is shown that the greatest increase will be in the need for workers that will have the technical skills. Between 1939 and 1962 the opportunities for this group increased from over 20 to 60 per cent.

In the Toronto area, to ease the pressure on the Ryerson technological institute, the first year the Ryerson course is given in some local schools, and approximately 300 now take this course. But this programme is only temporary and cannot be continued indefinitely. Another institution—perhaps an affiliate of Ryerson—will be required. But better, I would suggest, is a separate institution entirely. An institution with buildings and courses spread over the city cause administrative problems and divided loyalties. We all recognize the great increase in population in all sections of this area, and included with that is a tremendous increase in the student group. In my riding alone with an adult population of 45,000, there are more than 20,000 students in school at the present time. I strongly urge the government to establish a new technological institute in the northern part of Metropolitan Toronto and I suggest that it might well be on lands adjacent to York University on Jane Street.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would pay tribute to the hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Robarts) and his accomplishments as head of this government since assuming office just over two years ago. Many difficult and important problems have been dealt with and legislation of an effective nature has been produced. Work on others has begun and will be completed. There will be effective legislation for medical insurance and portable pensions. I was particularly gratified with the hon. Prime Minister's approach during the recent Dominion-provincial conference. He took the position throughout that he was not there merely to protect or further the interests of this province, whether that be at the expense of others or not, but rather that this was a testing time when the unity of this country and the mutual co-operation and understanding as between provinces and Dominion must be preserved. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to serve our province and the people of my riding in this House, and I hope I may do so constructively. It is an opportunity we all treasure.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate on the Speech from the Throne, I would first of all like to extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the speech. Indeed, as far as I am concerned, it is an honour to be so chosen. I would also like to extend my congratulations to the new hon. members in this House, who, in my opinion, are making a very fine contribution. I think the quality of speeches that we have heard from the new members is remarkable and I congratulate them on this. I can well recall—as a matter of fact, it is only approximately a year ago since I was a new member elected here when I gave my maiden speech; and that is not so long ago that the memory in any way has faded. I can well recall the night—and I know that most, if not all, the new members feel exactly that way.

While I am in a congratulatory frame of mind, I would in all fairness like to congratulate the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) for the success that he enjoyed at the polls on September 25. I think the fact remains that he did receive a substantial mandate from the people of this province. Certainly it made it hard for the candidates running on the Opposition tickets, certainly for me personally. I think it is rather obvious that I have about as many Tories as I have Grits in my riding because, as you know, the election was very, very close as far as I was concerned. And so it was even more difficult than usual to keep all the Grits in the fold, considering the swing towards the hon. Prime Minister's party.

Having said that, I would like to offer a few words of congratulations to the deputy Speaker. I think that as far as the members are concerned on this side of the House, he has been very fair to us and I would certainly want to be associated most warmly with anything that has been said, and all that has been said in connection with his appointment. And that goes for Mr. Speaker as well.

I want to deal with a subject that I feel deserves serious attention on the part of the government. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) pointed out to the government in a very dramatic fashion that it has no right to raise taxes without first bringing some economy and economic planning into the running of the province's business. With that I would heartily agree. On a number of occasions the remark has been made from the benches opposite that we in the Opposition certainly know how to criticize, but criticizing for criticism's sake is a very easy thing. The hard part after having criticized is proposing a solution. Frankly I think our party has been rather exceptional in both fields. The only problem that we have on this side of the House is to get the government to move in implementing these suggestions and proposals. They seem rather reluctant to do so in most cases.

However, if the government genuinely wishes to save the taxpayers money by re-assessing various aspects and operations of the various departments, I am sure that they would welcome any suggestions to those ends. One matter which has been brought to my attention repeatedly by a number of my constituents is the fact that they feel that the approval of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission should be extended to cover chronic patients in nursing homes. That is a very broad statement and demands elaboration. However, after further study I find, as far as I am concerned, that contention is completely justified.

What is the situation now? According to my information there are roughly 400 licensed private nursing homes in the province of Ontario. These nursing homes come entirely under the jurisdiction of the municipality where they are located. The municipality sets its standards and the nursing homes within that municipality are required to come up to these regulations. Having done so, the nursing homes in that municipality are granted a licence to operate. These regulations are very general in nature, setting a standard—and sometimes a very low standard—of sanitation and fire protection. As a result, every municipality has different rules and regulations governing nursing homes within its jurisdiction. In a few cases counties have had the foresight to establish their own regulations and basic standards and the municipalities within the counties are free to impose additional standards or requirements if deemed advisable. Notwithstanding this, the entire field of licensing nursing homes is in a dilemma second only to the hodge-podge situation in the textbook field created by The Department of Education. There is absolutely no uniformity, and uniformity is needed.

The province has roughly 400 licensed, privately owned nursing homes, as I mentioned. Of these, 43 are approved temporarily by Ontario Hospital Services Commission, usually for the duration of a year, to help alleviate the chronic bed situation in public hospitals where the problem has become acute. Now, in these cases Ontario Hospital Services Commission pays for the keep of the chronic patient on being removed from the hospital to an approved nursing home. However, if the situation rectifies itself and the hospital is able once again to handle all the chronic patients, the temporary Ontario Hospital Services Commission approval to the nursing home is withdrawn. Many times hon. members have pleaded in this House—as a matter of fact the hon. member for York Mills (Mr. Bales) mentioned hospitals; and certainly he is only one; the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop) mentioned them and mentioned the need for capital to construct hospitals, and certainly he did it very eloquently. Nevertheless, the need for hospital construction—and I am entirely in sympathy with this—should be extended, and it has been mentioned many times in this House that it should. But failing this, would it not be good business on the part of the government to extend OHSC to private nursing homes in order that many chronic patients who require only care and supervision—and I stress that, only care and supervision—be removed from the hospitals altogether and placed in private nursing homes?

It is felt, and rightly so, that the community through the government is morally responsible for the maintenance of our aged citizens due to their inability through inadequate means to provide this maintenance at a proper level for themselves. This responsibility is discharged by private nursing homes, county homes for the aged, and charitable institutions. Indeed the growth of county homes for the aged across the province is indicative of the concern the community places on the proper care and treatment of our elderly citizens. However, I feel that the soliciting of and admission to county homes of persons with adequate, and more than adequate, means to care for themselves, thereby depriving some of our aged people, without the means of care, of county homes for the aged is in direct contradiction of the principle behind the establishment of such homes for our older needy citizens.

It is apparent that after many of these homes for the aged were built, people with adequate means were solicited to ensure that the county homes were filled to capacity in order to justify their very existence. Frankly, I feel that admission to the county homes of persons with adequate means, and the subsequent deprivation of accommodation for others less fortunate, is one of the contributing factors to the alleged need for more of this type of accommodation, thereby putting an added unnecessary tax burden on the tax-paying public.

One recent illustration of this was quoted in the Wingham Advance-Times dated January 20. It says:

The need for a provincially-approved nursing home or a chronic wing in this area—and that is in the area of Goderich; actually Goderich is in the riding of the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton):

The need for a provincially-approved nursing home or a chronic wing in the Goderich area was so much to the fore in discussion last Thursday that action in one form or another may reasonably be expected. An early step will be consultation with the provincial officials on the problem.

“We are deeply concerned for the future of many a senior citizen in here,” said Reeve Clifford Dunbar of Grey, presenting the report of the Huronview board. “The home is running practically at capacity and we are not geared to take care of chronic patients. We are awaiting instructions as to our meeting with officials of the welfare and health departments to study this problem.”

“At no time in the history of Huronview since I have been there,” said Superintendent Harvey Johnson, “have there been so many people inquiring and waiting to get in.”

Chairman Dunbar as regards chronic patients; "We are not geared to take care of them but when there is no place else we have to take them." The same article goes on:

Mrs. Bernard Henderson of Kincardine who, until a year ago conducted a hospital-approved nursing home there, told council that no privately administered home could compete with the per diem cost of $3.75 per day mentioned by Mr. Johnson. Confirming her understanding that about half the Huronview residents are self-paying, Mrs. Henderson said, "Even if you had a nursing home in Goderich nobody would go there when the Huronview rate is $3.75."

Published the same day, was a report of a board meeting of the Alexander Marine and General Hospital in Goderich at which the chairman, S. Prevett, said there was an obvious need for a nursing home in Goderich. Provincial authorities have asked the board to reduce the number of beds for chronic patients.

Here we have a very interesting situation. On the one hand the Goderich board is being told by the government to reduce the number of beds for chronic patients; the chairman of the county home says our problem continues to grow as our resident total begins to get beyond capacity, and concludes by saying that the county home is not geared to take care of chronic patients, but "when there is no place else we have to take them."

On the other hand, Mrs. Bernard Henderson, who recently conducted a hospital-approved nursing home, as I mentioned, told the council that no privately administered home could compete with the per diem cost of $3.75 per day. Mrs. Henderson pinpointed the problem when she said, "Even if you had a nursing home in Goderich nobody would go there when the rate at Huronview is $3.75."

The reason the rate is $3.75 is because county homes for the aged are subsidized by the government and therefore do not reflect the true actual cost of this care. It is obvious that the private nursing homes, or private industry if you will, cannot compete successfully against an enterprise which is subsidized by the taxpayer. Thus it is a ludicrous situation when a selected few are having their tax dollars used to put them out of business. All this has developed, and is nurtured, despite the fact that the government prides itself in the image of a grandfather to private industry.

What I am saying is: Wherever true and actual costs are not charged to residents of county homes who have adequate means for self support, the tax-paying public is being called upon to subsidize the daily care of persons who in many cases are in a superior financial position to that of the taxpayer himself.

The unfortunate thing about this is that people with means often unwittingly deprive needy citizens of care.

At the $3.75 rate charged at Huronview in Clinton, municipalities would consider it financially good business to send a dependent of the municipality to the county home for the aged rather than to a private nursing home where they charge, on the average, $5 a day. The municipality is reimbursed 80 per cent of the cost, with the remaining 20 per cent being borne by the municipality.

Comparing the $3.75 rate of county homes and the $5 a day rate of private nursing homes, it means a saving of $7.50 per month to the municipality if the person is admitted to the county home rather than a private nursing home. In view of what I have said I would like to make several proposals to the government for their consideration.

First, the government should standardize, in my opinion, the rules and regulations governing nursing homes across the province. Those who meet the standards would be licensed by the province, and those failing to do so would be refused a licence, of course. This would require inspection and perhaps this could be done by the county officer of health.

Second, extend OHSC to the provincially licensed private nursing homes to cover indigents and chronics—and I stress this once again—who require only care and supervision. This particular point must be underlined because the greatest care must be taken not to turn private nursing homes into hospitals, because nursing homes have neither the equipment nor the staff to accomplish and take care of patients in that category.

This is a very real problem and certainly one which cannot be treated lightly. However, if care is taken to cover all those who require care and supervision, then the problem, I am sure, will be overcome. This would have the happy effect of releasing some badly needed hospital beds that are now occupied by chronics, and it would also help to alleviate the overcrowding and long waiting lists at county homes which eventually necessitate the building of additions to these structures.

At the end of 1963, there were 263 private and public hospitals in the province of Ontario with approximately 6,365 chronic beds. I have it from reliable sources that this is the equivalent to building a 500-bed hospital, in terms of the number of beds it would release for active treatment.

This whole matter has economic overtones because, really, what I am saying, and perhaps saying rather badly, is: Let us reappraise the health and care needs of the older and ailing residents of this province with the idea of making the best possible use of all existing facilities. Then and only then can we consciously embark on an expansion programme of those facilities, which involves the expenditure of huge sums of public money.

I feel this subject is of sufficient importance to deserve due consideration by the government.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I am especially glad that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are in the chair as I rise to speak. So often, as is our custom, we congratulate the Speaker of the House and I take great pleasure in congratulating you because you are the one person in the House that I can vouch for over a long period of years.

You had the good luck and good sense to marry someone from Brandon, Manitoba, my home town, and as a result I guess you have known my family since even before I was born. So I can say to this House that I have known you all my life by reputation as being a very fine man and I do wish you the best of success as deputy Speaker of this House. Of course, you being on one side of politics maybe, and I being on the other, I will not promise you that I will not give you any trouble.

The other day I posed a question to the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) regarding the office of chief coroner of Metropolitan Toronto. The chief coroner, Dr. Morton Shulman, is a distinguished resident of my riding and I might say, he being active on one side of politics and I on the other, we were not that close; but we were always watching each other to see what the other was doing. And Dr. Shulman is a very able and clever man, a very shrewd man.

I sometimes think he would have been a Conservative candidate in the last provincial election, only he saw perhaps headway in Parkdale was going to be a bit rough for a Conservative and he stayed where he was. I say that I have no axe to grind for Dr. Shulman but I also am aware of the fact that he is a very thorough, a very capable man and I do feel that he is entitled to a public inquiry.

It is an amazing thing, Mr. Speaker; here is a man holding a very important position as chief coroner of Metropolitan Toronto and you get a news story in the paper where the deputy Attorney General practically called him a liar. He said in the paper, "I hate to use that term because he is a professional man".

But this is not a good thing going on in the public service of Ontario. And the people of Ontario have a right to ask questions why; and I think the government is duty bound to have a public inquiry into the allegations made by Dr. Morton Shulman. He has claimed that there is professional interference, from Queen's Park. It is up to the hon. Attorney General to see to it that it is a public inquiry, not just an internal whitewashing where the hon. Attorney General and his officials will examine their own misdeeds or deeds and then give a compete whitewash. Let us find out who is telling the truth; let us have a public inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the labour settlement at Trenton Memorial Hospital. This labour settlement was finally reached yesterday and I have delayed saying anything about it until a settlement was brought about. But what has gone on over the past year at Trenton Memorial Hospital is a shocking situation of labour relations in the province of Ontario and it speaks very poorly of our Department of Labour and the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. I want to go and look at the circumstances of what has happened there.

The Building Service Employees International Union, local 183, was organized in the summer of 1962 and was certified as the bargaining agent for the employees at Trenton Memorial Hospital on August 13, 1962. From that date on, this union went to work to begin negotiations to get a contract for the employees of that hospital.

They sent a suggested agreement, a bargaining agreement, to the hospital and the hospital rejected it. A conciliation officer was sent down from the department here at Queen's Park; and when that failed they set up a conciliation board; and when that failed the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) stepped in.

And it certainly has been a sordid story from the very beginning because the board of governors of the Trenton Memorial Hospital were determined that they were not going to have anything to do with a bargaining agent if they could possibly avoid it. And certainly when the conciliation board gave its majority opinion, this was borne out.

This conciliation board, which gave its report in June of 1963, had this to say, and this is the majority report and was written by Trevor R. Smith, a man who has had considerable experience in this type of work. He said:

The chairman of this board has recently been successful in bringing the parties in many a dispute to effect a voluntary settlement.

And then he named a few of the places where he had brought about settlements: The hospital boards of the Hamilton Health Association, the St. John's Convalescent Hospital, St. Joseph's Hospital; and he told how he could get along with those unions. But here the conciliation board had this to say about what was going on at Trenton Memorial Hospital:

In this dispute the applicant union expressed a desire to co-operate, and demonstrated its good faith by acceding to almost all the requests of the chairman for compromise proposals. The chairman must state that the union was prepared to consider proposals of the board which would have and should have been the basis of a settlement in line with all other similar agreements within the province.

And then he goes on, Mr. Speaker:

The respondent hospital were not prepared to co-operate in any way with this board and in fact were reluctant to consider that The Ontario Labour Relations Act was anything other than an unwarranted interference with their rights.

And then again the chairman said this:

The chairman considers it obvious that any prejudice which the hospital board may have has not been caused by any attitude or action of this union, but has been caused by a resentment of the whole collective bargaining process as envisioned under The Ontario Labour Relations Act.

An indication of this resentment may also be found in the brief to the hospital, which reads:

The hospital recognizes the fact that The Labour Relations Act is primarily designed for the purpose of safeguarding the integrity of labour.

Well, the conciliation report was refused by the hospital and what is to be borne in mind is, Mr. Speaker, that the union agreed beforehand to be bound by the report of this group. And it is an unusual thing for a union to say: "I give up my right to strike," but as early as 1957, this particular union, the Building Service Employees International Union, said that they realized they were in a very serious type of work, that it was possibly most difficult to have a strike in a hospital; so they said beforehand that they would be guided by arbitration and they would take what was offered.

The hospital refused to do so, and so they had no other recourse but to call a strike. And this particular union was criticized by the chairman of the conciliation report, because when they came before the conciliation board they said: "We have never had a strike and we do not intend to have one." The chairman felt that, by admitting that, this gave the hospital an advantage.

But in any event, once the conciliation board's offer was rejected, they did call a strike and it was called for October 1, 1963.

They were all set to strike and then, of course, a series of meetings took place. This will give some idea of the attitude of the hospital board and I emphasize this, that this is a semi-public institution, an institution which is closely connected with the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. This will give you some idea of what their attitude is. I would just like to read the following. It is taken from a special edition of the Concord, a publication put out by the union.

"Between the dates of September 19 and September 30"—that is 1963, mind you the strike date was October 1—"continual efforts were made to have The Department of Labour intervene and try to bring about a settlement. The Minister of Labour immediately upon receipt of our wire"—that is the union wire—"contacted the hospital and the union by telegram dated September 19, requesting the parties to attend a meeting September 23rd in his office."

So the meeting was set up in the office of the hon. Minister of Labour for September 23, and the union men appeared but the hospital board members, or their representatives, did not appear. It seems that about midnight September 22, they sent the hon. Minister a wire, saying "If you want to meet with us, come on down to Trenton". Here was a case again of a hospital board literally defying the hon. Minister of Labour. In the meantime, there had been three cases where employees had been fired—the union felt, because of their union activities—and the union then applied under section 65 of The Labour Relations Act in order to have it officially declared that the three employees were discharged without just cause. At the same time the union filed for leave to prosecute under The Ontario Labour Relations Act for the hospital's failure to bargain in good faith. These were four actions that the union had. One was heard where an employee was restored to his job, the union's case was upheld and in the other three cases, at the request of the government, the union held back in order to create a good atmosphere. At the request of the government the union did not take any action in order to try to create a conciliatory atmosphere. The hon. Minister of Labour decided that something should be done and he had the following statement issued. It came out on Department of Labour paper and it is from the office of the director of conciliation services. It is dated September 30, 1963, and is printed over the names of Louis Fine and T. M. Eberlee. It says as follows:

Mr. Rowntree has authorized Mr. Fine to advise Mr. Hearn—

Mr. Hearn was vice-president of the union:

—that he intends to issue a statement in connection with this situation and make a further effort to bring the parties together to resolve the matters in issue. Failing this it is the intention of Mr. Rowntree to introduce legislation at the first opportunity in the forthcoming session of the Legislature to provide for final and binding arbitration of the dispute between the Trenton Memorial Hospital and Building Service Employees International Union, local 183. In view of the above, Mr. Hearn has agreed to call off the strike.
